"THE STATE OF THE NATION."

Mr. Disraeli is now the recognised leader of that vanquished but still great party in the State, which dreams of a return to the principles of Protection. He has vaulted into the seat left vacant by the decease of Lord George Bentinck, and fills it with a certain degree of ease and power, and even of dignity. Whatever deficiencies he may exhibit, he has a better trained intellect, and evinces a more complete mastery of all the graces of style and the weapons of rhetoric, than his predecessor; but, like him, he has an audacity which nothing can abash, and a talent for paradox which forces the admiration even of those who have ability enough to expose it. He has as magnificent an alacrity for blundering as Sir John Falstaff had for sinking. He can dress up a public case as adroitly as a sharp attorney can dress up a private one. Figures are in his hands "soft as potter's clay," and are made to prove or disprove, whatever he pleases. The sober mathematics of common sense lead to different conclusions; but to Mr. Disraeli, who strives rather to be brilliant than practical, and who is more contented with the easy task of startling the mob of Parliamentary mediocrities than with the more difficult task of convincing the sagacious and business-like few, it does not signify whether or not his equations be properly worked. If they look well, it is sufficient for his purpose; and a brilliant error is as useful to him as a truth. His first great Parliamentary effort in his new capacity was made on Monday night, when he brought forward a motion for an Inquiry into the "State of the Nation," with the avowed purpose of passing a vote of censure upon, and overthrowing the Government. As a piece of oratory, the speech elicited the applause of his hearers. It will, doubtless, elicit a similar applause throughout the country for that merit; but whether it has exalted his character for statesmanship, either in the estimation of the House or of the country, is a question which by this time has been pretty generally resolved in the negative, by all who consider the basis of statesmanship to be sober, impartial and practical truth.

The Whigs, says Mr. Disraeli, came into office in 1846 as Free-Traders; ever since 1846 the country has been in a state of distress, which has gradually increased in intensity from that time until the present: ergo, the Whigs and Free Trade principles are the causes of that distress, and the Whigs should be forthwith expelled from office to allow Mr. Disraeli and a Protectionist Ministry to be installed in their stead. This was the naked meaning of the motion; and if, in support of such a proposition, a speaker could be brilliant, rhetorical, amusing, and occasionally powerful, there can be no doubt of his ability; though very considerable doubt may exist whether he might not have found a better subject upon which to have employed it.

Yet Mr. Disraeli, we suspect, gives expression to the views and opinions of others with whom he is now acting, rather than to his own. There is a large class of highly respectable and good men, who persist in attributing every calamity, local or general, British or European, to the repeal of the Corn Laws by Sir Robert Peel, and the determination of the Whigs to persevere in the Free Trade policy of that statesman. The Irish famines, the railway mania and its huge immorality, the inexorable "calls" for the construction of new lines that ought not to have been commenced until we had paid for the old ones, the rottenness of great commercial firms that had been virtually insolvent for a quarter of a century, the general want of confidence felt throughout the commercial world, the diminished operations of trade and manufactures that were the necessary consequence, and the unsettled state of the continent of Europe; all these are facts which are either ignored altogether, or strangely perverted by the worthy men who look upon agriculture as a separate and paramount interest in the State. Free trade in corn, though it only came into legal and full operation on the 1st of January, 1849, is, in their estimation, the cause of all the undoubted evils and distress which this country has known and felt since 1846. Compared with Free Trade the Irish famine was, according to them, and to Mr. Disraeli as their mouthpiece, but a slight matter. "The failure of the potato crop, though a great calamity, was not," he says, "sufficient to depress our agriculture and to exhaust our finances." Now, in this proposition the most earnest Free-Trader might agree. Neither Sir Robert Peel, Lord John Russell, nor Mr. Cobden would strive to gainsay it. No one has asserted that the Irish famine was the sole cause of the distress which we have lately experienced, but simply that it was one of the many disturbing forces which unfortunately operated to our detriment. So of the railway bubbles and their collapse—so of large commercial insolvency, and its exposure—so of the convulsions of Europe, and the general feeling of insecurity and mistrust which they engendered in the minds of most men, more especially of those who were largely engaged in business. Nothing is more true and nothing is more easy to assert, that no one of these misfortunes or errors brought us into that position of distress in which, according to Mr. B. Disraeli, we now are, or from which, according to the safer authority of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, we are beginning to extricate ourselves. The point that Mr. Disraeli and those who would re-establish the Corn Laws and Protection must prove to make good their case is, that all these sources of evil—and perhaps many others, as yet unperceived—did not, by their combined operation, produce the results that they deplore. They must also prove that, under a system of Protection, they would not have occurred—possibly, with threefold intensity of suffering and calamity. Until they perform this achievement to the satisfaction, not of men who do not give themselves the trouble to think, but of the clear-headed men of business and the great body of the tax-paying and wealth-producing community, their labour will be in vain; and such speeches as that of Mr. Disraeli, on Monday night, will but prove their own incapacity for statesmanship. But the Protectionist leader was well answered upon most points by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who so thoroughly out-argued him in reasoning, and out-figured him in statistics, as to leave but small room for those who would follow him in the task of refuting error.

The speech of the right honourable gentleman, following so soon upon the introduction of his financial statement for the year, and corroborating, in all particulars, the favourable view therein taken of the position and prospects of the country, leads to the hope that the climax of evil has been passed; and that the country, safe amid the perils that are engulphing less fortunate communities, has already seen the worst results that are to flow from the combined operation of unhappy circumstances. Some of these circumstances were of a nature not to have been foreseen or provided against; and some were clearly traceable to our own errors; but the suffering we have undergone has, it is to be hoped, taught us some wisdom for our future guidance. At all events, our prospects seem to be clearing up. Mr. Disraeli's gloomy pictures are partial and exceptional; while the more brilliant pictures presented to us by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in his reply, embrace the whole landscape.

A return to protection is an idle dream. Mr. Disraeli thinks that he and his supporters who would re-establish the Corn Law "will succeed—some day." The country, while doing justice to the sincerity of the belief which is felt by many members of that influential party, inclines to a different opinion, and thinks, with Mr. Roebuck and many others, that Free Trade, instead of causing, has prevented calamity. To use the words of that gentleman, "Thrones had toppled down to the earth—constitutions have every where tumbled into the dust—the people have risen against governments, and governments have addressed themselves in vain to the calm reason of the community; but England is quiet and serene—safe and happy. Sir Robert Peel listened to the public voice, and yielded at the right time, and by prudent legislation acquired for a great people the peace and tranquillity which no other nation now enjoys." In this opinion a large majority of the people will coincide; and we anticipate that many who now agree with Mr. Disraeli will come to the same conclusion—some day, and that at no very distant period.

AN EMIGRANT SHIP RUN DOWN.

ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY-FIVE LIVES LOST.

THE Europa mail steam-ship, which arrived during the week from the United States, has brought the lamentable intelligence of her having, while on the homeward voyage, run down the brig Charles Bartlett, which was on her passage from London to New York, when 135 persons perished, a few only being saved. The accident occurred on the 27th ult., in latitude 50.49 and longitude 39.30. None of the watch were among the rescued. From the statement of the captain (Mr. W. Bartlett) of the ill-fated vessel, which was a first-rate ship, of 490 tons register, it appears that she left the Downs from London, bound to New York, on the 14th of June, with a general heavy cargo, of about 450 tons weight, and 162 passengers in the steerage, one cabin passenger, and 14 souls of the crew. On the 27th, at one o'clock in the afternoon, a dense fog set in. "At three o'clock," observes the captain, "I ordered a good look-out from the top-gallant forecastle; also directed the mate at the helm to look sharp to windward. At 3.30, P.M., being on the weather side of the poop deck, heard a rumbling to windward like distant thunder; turned my ear to the windward and my eye to the horizon; the man at the wheel understood that I was listening, looked to windward and cried out 'Sail, ho!' I at once saw what I supposed was a ship about one point forward of our beam, about four hundred yards distant. I ordered the helm up, thinking, if she did not discern us, that we should have time to clear her before she could come into contact. All hands shouted at the same time to alarm the ship, and I ordered the bell to be rung, and called to the ship to port her helm, as I saw that that was the only chance of escape. She was under the lee of ship within a foot of the after hatch, and that only because the helm was put hard-a-port. She struck us on the starboard quarter, and, while getting up, I noticed that her bowsprit was clear to the lee side, and that full twenty feet of her side was stove in. There must have been nearly 50 persons killed by the collision; and every exertion was made by Captain Lott, his officers, and crew, and the passengers on board the steamer. The boats were lowered as soon as possible: unfortunately only about ten were saved by the boats; the balance, making thirty three more or less, saved themselves by hanging to the bow. The steamer lay by the scene as long as there was any hope of saving any.

"Of the crew, Mr. Thomas Parker, of Charleston, S.C., aged twenty-two years; George Parsons, of Portland, Maine, aged eighteen years; and Joseph Rich, of Gravesend, England, aged twenty-five years, were lost. A list of the passengers and crew saved has been published. We were most hospitably entertained by the captain, officers, and passengers of the steamer.

"I will notice that all due exertion was used by Captain Lott, and officers and crew of the Europa, as well as all the passengers. I particularly observed one passenger using the most noble exertions; I saw him let himself overboard and clench a man in his arms, and, finding him dead, let him go. I next saw him on the bow of a boat, hauling a man from under water with a boat-hook, who was afterwards restored to life on board. I afterwards found that person to be Capt. R. B. Fowler, of Boston."

The passengers of the Europa appointed a committee to investigate the cause of the collision, who reported as follows:—

"The undersigned, having weighed all the circumstances of this painful and unparalleled disaster, whereby about 136 souls found an untimely grave, feel bound to report that no blame can be attached to either party.

"We feel convinced that everything was done by the commander, the officers, and the crew of the Europa to prevent the lamentable disaster, and everything tried after its occurrence to save lives and to minister to the comforts of the survivors."

The Europa sustained but little damage, and none of the passengers or crew were injured. Upwards of £350 were collected on board that vessel for the relief of the survivors.

EXTRACT FROM THE LOG OF THE "EUROPA."—The log-book of the Europa corroborates the above statement in the most important particulars:—"June 27, 1849.—Sea smooth. Commenced with moderate breeze and dense fog. Set starboard foretopmast studding sail. At 3.30 dense fog; could not see further than the ship's length ahead. A sail was reported by the look-out ahead. The helm was put hard-a-port and the engine stopped, but before we could clear we struck her between the main and mizen rigging, and in about four minutes from the time she was first seen she went down. Boats were immediately down. Altogether forty-two persons were saved of the crew and passengers. She proved to be the Charles Bartlett, of Plymouth, United States, Captain Bartlett, from London, bound to New York, with 162 passengers and fourteen men. In sinking she took away our head knees and foretopmast. The boats pulled round the pieces of the wreck until satisfied no more lives could be saved. At 4, thick weather. At 4.30, set on the engines."

The British and North American Royal Mail Steam-Packet Company have voluntarily intimated to the Mayor of Liverpool their intention of forwarding, free of charge, by their next two steamers to America, the persons saved from the wreck.

REPORT ON THE SLAVE-TRADE.—The select committee appointed by the House of Commons to continue the inquiry undertaken by a committee appointed last year, to consider the best means which Great Britain can adopt for providing for the final extinction of the slave-trade, and to whom the evidence taken before the said committee was referred, have reported a body of resolutions to the House, setting forth, "that a long and large experience of attempts to suppress the slave-trade by a naval force, leads to the conclusion that to put down that trade by such means is impracticable;" that they are "convinced to believe that no modification of the system of force can effect the suppression of the slave-trade, and they cannot undertake the responsibility of recommending the continuance of that system;" and on the communications of the Government with the other countries, "the aim should be to release Great Britain from such treaty engagements in respect to the slave-trade, as place the question of maintaining a blockading squadron beyond the free and exclusive control of British authorities;" and, finally, the committee express a "hope that the internal improvement and civilisation of Africa will be one of the most effective means of suppressing the slave-trade; and for this purpose, that the instruction of the natives by missionary labours, by education, and by all other practical efforts, and the extension of legitimate commerce, ought to be encouraged wherever the influence of England can be directed, and especially where it has already been beneficially exerted."

AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS.—Captain Marryat quotes the following paragraph as a specimen of the raw material of American newspapers:—"Many who have created great names and celebrity in the world began their career as printers. Sir William Blackstone, the learned English commentator on laws, was a printer by trade. King Charles III. (!) was a printer, and not unfrequently worked at the trade after he had ascended the throne of England."—Railway Reading Book.

FOUR GENERATIONS.—There are now living in the town of Wottonunder-Edge, in Gloucestershire, four generations of the same Christian and surnames—viz. John Rishings the elder, in the 95th year of his age, in the full enjoyment of all his faculties; John, his son, 60 years of age; John, his son, 30 years old; and John, his son, 10 years of age.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

There is little news of a domestic character from Paris this week. The protracted delay of the operations of the French army under the walls of Rome, without obtaining any definitive result, had created in the minds of the Government such dissatisfaction with the conduct of General Oudinot that the President of the Republic and Ministry held a council on Saturday with several of the leading Generals in Paris, the result of which was, that on the same evening General Bedeau left Paris for Rome, with instructions, if necessary, to take the command in chief of the army; but his first mission was to endeavour to enter into negotiations with the Triumvirate in order to bring about a pacific arrangement. Should he not be successful, an army of 30,000 men was to be placed at his disposal. General Changarnier, it was said, was desirous to be sent to Rome, but it was considered that his services at Paris could not be dispensed with.

The command-in-chief was offered to General Lamoricière, but he refused it.

All these arrangements, however, have been rendered unnecessary by the cessation of hostilities at Rome, which was communicated by telegraph to the Ministry on Tuesday, and immediately announced to the Legislative Assembly by M. Odillon Barrot, who stated that on the 30th June the Roman Assembly had come to a resolution that the city could no longer be defended. The municipality had accordingly sent delegates to General Oudinot to treat for a surrender. General Bedeau has been, it is said, recalled in consequence. The grounds of complaint against General Oudinot have not been definitively stated, but rumour assigns his having, on the night of the 29th, ordered to carry out his instructions, which were "to hesitate no longer, but to march on Rome, and take possession in spite of all resistance."

It may be mentioned that on Monday, in the Legislative Assembly, M. Versigny demanded explanations from the Government relative to its intentions with respect to bombarding Rome. M. Odillon Barrot replied by declaring that the despatches which were sent by General Oudinot showed how studiously the besieging army avoided doing injury to the city: at the same time, the Government could not permit a band of strangers and adventurers to place themselves forward and oppose with impunity the French troops, contrary to the will of the population of Rome. This reply excited loud exclamations from the Left; and after some remarks from M. Lagrange, the incident terminated.

Ten members of the Consular body at Rome having drawn up a joint protest on the 24th ult., which was forwarded to General Oudinot, remonstrating against the bombardment of the city during several preceding days and nights, by which the lives and properties of innocent persons had been endangered, General Oudinot replied, that he had no alternative, for he was only acting upon the orders of his Government, which were absolute. M. de Corcelles, however, in a despatch to the Minister of War, condemns the protest as untrue, and denies that the city had been bombarded at all. The walls alone, he says, were aimed at, and not a single bomb had been thrown into the town.

General Lamoricière is appointed Minister to the Court of St. Petersburgh; but, as it is requisite to wait for the Emperor's permission, his departure takes from the command of the army of observation now assembling on the Rhine, of which the head-quarters are at Strasburg. This army will be composed of a portion of the army of the Alps and some of the regiments quartered in Alsace and Lorraine.

All the accounts received from the French provinces represent the approaching harvest as most abundant. It is expected that the wheat and oat crop will produce at least one-third more than that of the last year.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT.—From Turin, under date of the 30th ult., it is announced that the negotiations are broken off between the Governments of Austria and Piedmont, on account of the increasing demands of the former, which, it is said, insists on the cession of the principality of Monaco. The Piedmontese Ministry, though desirous of peace, refuses to accept such conditions

GERMAN STATES.

BADEN.—The insurrection is not yet quite crushed. Mieroslawski having given up the command, Sigel and his men still hold out in the fortress of Rastadt, to which they retreated after a severe engagement with the Prussians in its vicinity on the 29th ult.

SAXE-COBURG.—The large section of the Moderates of the National Assembly of Frankfort have assembled at Gotha, and pronounced, by a great majority, in favour of the project of Constitution emanating from the King of Prussia, with certain modifications; and to call on the German States to accede to it, and to proceed to the elections for the Diet of the empire.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The war has assumed a serious aspect. The advance of the united Imperial armies commenced at the centre, 40,000 strong, of which 16,000 were Russians, in three divisions, against the city of Raab, where Georgey had made every preparation for an energetic resistance. The young Emperor of Austria accompanied the army. On the 28th the city was carried by storm, at half-past four o'clock in the afternoon. The slaughter on both sides was very great. The Emperor entered the conquered city in the evening.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The negotiations for peace appear to be at present time carried on at Berlin, have been suspended pro tem. in consequence of the Danish Cabinet urging a claim of 4,000,000 dollars to cover the expenses of the war—a proposition to which the other negotiators refuse to accede.

PORTUGAL.

Accounts to the 30th ult. from Oporto state that the cholera has broken out in the Alemtejo, and on the south bank of the river Tagus. Two towns in the neighbourhood of Lisbon were infected.

The Ex-King of Sardinia, Charles Albert, was still lying very ill at Oporto. The Queen of Portugal had sent her physician to attend him.

We also learn that a quarantine of three days had been placed on all vessels arriving at Gibraltar.

UNITED STATES.

The British and North American Royal Mail steam-ship Europa, Captain Lott, arrived at Liverpool on Sunday morning, having sailed from Boston on the 20th, and Halifax on the 23rd ult.

The death of the ex-President Polk occurred on the 16th ult., at Nashville, Tennessee, where the deceased statesman had been confined for some time past with diarrhœa.

The attention of the public was being called by the press to the sufferings by the late unfortunate occurrences at St. Louis and New Orleans. In the excitement consequent on the importation of the precious metals from California, their sufferings were, however, almost unheeded, but it was expected that some decided and substantial expression of public sympathy would soon be manifested.

Cholera was still raging in many parts, but in some localities its virulence had decreased. Five hundred and ninety-four deaths occurred in St. Louis in one week, 503 of which were from this dreadful pestilence. It is disappearing in the Upper Mississippi, but reappearing in Osage. It was very bad in Cincinnati and Illinois.

One of those dreadful encounters with bowie-knives, so frequent in the southern and south-western states, had taken place at a public meeting at Louisville. Cassim M'Clay and Joseph Turner quarrelled, when recourse was had to weapons. M'Clay was stabbed through the heart, and Turner in the abdomen. Both are dead.

The news from California is highly interesting. It confirms all previous reports, and shows that the accounts of the richness of the gold-diggings in the diggings has been exaggerated. The Falcon steamer had arrived at New York from New Orleans, with 200,000 dollars in gold in charge of its owners. The steamer Panama had arrived at New York from New Orleans for New York, with 500,000 dollars' worth of gold dust on board.

CANADA.

The intelligence by this week's arrivals from present Canada as in the main tranquil, though the excitement had not subsided. Indeed, no manifestation was looked for until the ratification of the Losses Bill was announced. Along the borders of the lakes, and throughout the country districts, a similar spirit to that of the inhabitants of Montreal was displayed.

The Governor-General had issued his proclamation, reviving for six months, from the 8th ult., the provisions of "the act for the preservation of public health in certain emergencies," and had appointed a central board of health under its enactment.

WEST INDIES.

By the Royal Mail Company's steam-ship Tay, advices were received on Tuesday from the islands. In Jamaica a large and influential meeting took place on the 24th of May at Spanish Town, to consider the effect produced on the West India islands by the non-conference of the treaties for the suppression of the slave-trade. The following are amongst the most important of the resolutions passed on that occasion:—

1. That so long as the sugar planters of Cuba, Porto Rico, and Brazil, in defiance of the laws of their respective countries, and of the treaties by which the Spanish and Brazilian Governments stand bound to her Majesty, are permitted to introduce, by means of free labour, the means of increasing their profits, it is hopeless, in countries so thinly peopled as Jamaica, Guiana, and Trinidad, for the proprietors of the soil to preserve in its cultivation.

2. That, in the opinion of this meeting, the plan which was submitted by her Majesty's principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, in the draft of a convention with Spain, and transmitted to her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, on the 26th May, 1840, as appears on the papers on the slave-trade, presented in that year to Parliament by her Majesty's command, is practical and feasible, and, if entered into between Spain and Brazil on the one hand, with suitable energy, would prove beneficial and effective in enabling the emancipated colonies of Great Britain to meet on equal terms competition in the free markets and other countries of Europe on the equal terms to which they are about to be exposed by the Sugar Duties Act of 1846.

Several meetings of a like nature had been held throughout the island. The general accounts are most gloomy; the sugar crop of this year is represented as not exceeding 30,000 hogsheads. The black labourers are said to be unemployed and sullen, and many tradesmen, it is asserted, are preparing to emigrate to Mosquito.

In Prince Edward Island the Assembly has agreed, by a majority of thirteen to nine, that an address be forwarded to her Majesty, expressing the readiness of the House to make provision for the civil list, upon the surrender to the Legislature of the permanent revenues, quit-rents, and Crown lands, and the establishment of a system of responsible Government, applicable to the wants and circumstances of the colony, upon the basis of Lord John Russell's despatch of October 15, 1839.

M. Louis Lucien Bonaparte has addressed a letter to the electors of the Seine (France), soliciting their suffrages, and expressing his devotedness to the policy of the President of the Republic, and his determination to support every measure tending to promote real progress.

The new night police has been established in Madrid, and yet complaints are frequent among the Madrilenos, that since its establishment there are more robberies than ever.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SATURDAY, JUNE 30.

The House met on Saturday at twelve o'clock, and continued to sit till shortly after six, the sitting being exclusively occupied with the discussion on the remaining clauses of the Poor Law (Ireland) Bill.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Marquis of LONSDOWNE moved for certain returns relative to carrying the mails between Greenock and Belfast, and suggested the propriety of continuing a steamer between Port Patrick and Donaghadee for a year, until the other experiment had had a fair trial.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE had no objection to produce the returns, but with them he should also give the reports of the Admiralty surveyors who had examined the ports in question. He knew that public opinion was in favour of the proposed change.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE laid on the table communications made by the Austrian Government, relative to the advance of the Austrian troops into Tuscany and the Legations, and, in reply to Lord ERNOUGH, stated that Kossuth's authority in Hungary had not been recognised, nor could it be under existing circumstances.

ENTAILED ESTATES.

The Duke of RICHMOND brought up the report of the select committee on entailed estates, and presented a bill embodying the views of the committee, its object being to enable landholders to borrow money for the purpose of drainage; the noble Duke replying, in answer to questions as to extending it to Ireland, that he should not object to that proposition, but, as he wished the bill to pass as quickly as possible, he had not included Ireland, as leaving that to any bill applying to that country was not very likely to pass rapidly through its stages elsewhere. (Laughter.)

After a few words from the Marquis of LONDONDERRY,

The Earl of CARLISLE intimated his approval of the measure, and should be happy to give any assistance in his power in forwarding it through its remaining stages.

Lord BEAUMONT supported the bill, which was read a first time.

AUSTRALIA.

Lord MONTEAGLE, on presenting a petition from Sydney, New South Wales, on the subject of the proposed alteration of the constitution of the Australian colonies, and complaining of the curtailment of the franchise, asked whether it was the intention of the Government to proceed with the bill in the present session.

Earl GREY would not enter into the merits of a bill not before their Lordships, but proceed to answer the observations of the noble Lord as to the course taken previously to submitting bills of this description by the Government; he referred to the present state of representation in Australia, and stated, from personal communications he had had that day with some gentlemen connected with these colonies, that he felt himself justified in assuring their Lordships the passing of the bill was generally desired by them.

After speeches from Lord LYTTELTON and Lord STANLEY, urging the withdrawal of the measure,

Earl GREY expressed his desire to avail himself of suggestions offered by the latter noble Lord, but it would be matter of deep regret to himself if the bill did not pass in the present session.

The Marquis of CLANRICARDE moved the second reading of the Audit of Railway Accounts Bill, proposing to take the debate on going into committee.—The Earls of LONSDALE and YARBOROUGH warmly opposed the bill, the first-named noble Lord moving that it be read a second time that day three months.—After a reply from Lord MONTEAGLE, the House divided, when the original motion was carried by a majority of 5, the numbers being 10 to 5, and the bill was read a second time.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

Lord J. RUSSELL having explained the order in which he proposed to take the Government bills during the remainder of the session,

The Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill and the Marriages in Foreign Countries Facilitating Bill were read a third time and passed.

THE STATE OF THE NATION.

Mr. DISRAELI, in conformity with the notice he had given, moved that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole House to take into consideration the state of the nation. The hon. member began his speech by declaring that he made his motion because he found the country labouring under general distress, and because he found that that general distress was progressive since the formation of the existing Government. The noble Lord and his colleagues possessed every advantage which the House could have unrivalled and unrivalled—they had not to encounter an organised opposition—they obtained and held the reins of power under circumstances remarkably favourable. It was, therefore, most natural, in contrast the situation of the country at the present moment with what it was when the noble Lord and his colleagues came into office. What was the condition of the country, in its chief relations, at the commencement of the year 1846? A profound tranquillity prevailed throughout the country, if any agreement did arise, the friendly mediation of England at once caused it to disappear. Our colonies, after suffering great vicissitudes, had then reconciled themselves to the new position they occupied, and were rapidly—what they did not exist—hope. Our export trade then reached an amount never before known. The agricultural interests were then prosperous, not only because high prices prevailed, but because agriculture was then carried on with a confidence which advance of 25 per cent. in wages. With respect to exports, he did not think they proved the progressive deterioration of our manufactures, because he was happy to say that the exports of the first four months of this year showed an extraordinary increase compared with the four months of last year, whether taken in quantity or in declared value. The declared value of exports for the five months of this year was £21,190,000 against £18,944,000, the declared value of the exports during the five corresponding months of last year. The right hon. gentleman read various letters and documents to prove that the recent commercial legislation had produced most beneficial results, increasing imports and at the same time stimulating native industry. He particularly instanced the increase in the consumption of foreign brandy, which went on simultaneously with an extraordinary increase in the consumption of Colonial, English, Scotch, and Irish spirits. He also referred to the glove and silk trade, as proof that competition improved and extended home manufacture. He insisted that, taken generally, the state of the manufacturing classes was, instead of being one of great and progressive depression, a state of steady and progressive improvement. He could not, however, give an equally good account of the agricultural classes. He admitted that there existed severe distress in some of the agricultural counties, but he denied that the distress was general, and he insisted that in the greater portion of England labourers in handicraft were better off than at former periods. The right hon. gentleman resisted the motion, because he believed that any attempt to rever-e the commer ial legislation of the last few years would be detrimental to the best interests of the country.

Mr. H. BAILLIE, in supporting the motion, said, there never was a period in which the state of the country so imperatively demanded the anxious consideration of Parliament. The Free Trade principle, misapplied as it had been, had brought destruction upon our colonies and upon all the best interests of the country.

Mr. ROEBUCK contended that there was nothing in the present state of the country which could warrant such an extraordinary course as that proposed by the hon. member for Buckinghamshire. The whole argument of the hon. gentleman was based upon a data, and not upon a principle.

Mr. PLUMPTRE said the whole distress of the country was chiefly to be attributed to the Free Trade measures, supported by the late as well as by the present Government.

Mr. SLANEY moved the adjournment of the debate to next day, which, after a short conversation, was agreed to.—Adjourned at a quarter to one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

THE BOOTY OF THE PUNJAUB WAR.

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH moved for papers explanatory of the circumstances under which the Crown had granted to the Court of Directors of the East India Company, or to the army in India, property conquered from the enemy; the question involved being with reference to the confiscation of the property taken in the district of Lahore, including the Koh-i-noor diamond, which the Governor-General had agreed by treaty should be appropriated to the liquidation of the accumulated debt due by one of the states to the Indian Government, instead of devolving to the Crown as booty, such booty having always been granted to the armies since the year 1758, as then decreed by patent. The noble Earl concluded his speech in favour of inquiry, by stating, that for every battle in India, previous to those in the Punjaub, a pecuniary reward, under the name of batta, had been given, but not so in the latter cases; and he implored their Lordships and the Government, if they desired to retain the Indian territory, above all things to do justice to the army.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE detailed the circumstances under which the property was acquired, explaining that Dhuleep Singh was not a prisoner, but was treated as sovereign prince when the treaty was made, and doubtless the Governor-General considered himself at liberty to conclude such a treaty, and dispose of the property obtained from the state of Lahore in any way which he thought best for the government of India. The subject, however, should be reconsidered in reference to its legal matters.

The Duke of WELLINGTON defended the Governor-General from the implied suspicion of a want of attention to the merits of the Indian army, entered into some technical explanations as to the treaty, and suggested that the subject should be left in the hands of the Government at home and the Governor-General in India to settle the question of booty, there being unmoveable as well as removeable property involved which could not, strictly speaking, come under the designation of booty), who were most anxious to do full justice to the Indian army.

After some observations from Lord GLENELG and Lord BROUGHAM,

The Earl of ELLENBOROUGH withdrew his motion.

AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.

Lord MONTEAGLE, in a speech illustrative of singular transactions on the part of various railway companies in dealing with capital and shares, moved the committal of his bill for auditing railway accounts.

The Earl of GRANVILLE explained the grounds on which the Government had thought it necessary to give their support to the measure, which were, that it was called for by the public, and because it was not alone the shareholders who were interested in the matter, but the public, merchants, and others, who were so highly interested in the solvency of railway companies.

The bill then passed through committee.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House met at 12 o'clock, for the purpose of proceeding in committee on the Poor-Law Relief (Ireland) Bill, when Sir G. GREY in reply to Sir W. SOMERVILLE, Chairman, stated, that in the case of the commutation of sentences of transportation to imprisonment, the charge for the maintenance of the prisoners was of necessity transferred from the imperial treasury to the same fund which supported our other prisoners.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The House then went into committee on the additional clauses and amendments, as the bill had been already gone through, when several were proposed, discussed, withdrawn, two only leading to divisions—that of Mr. Hume for making the poor-rate compounded by Colonel Dunne, as to allowing ratepayers of townlands or union of townlands to employ a portion of the poor, in which case such ratepayers should be exempted from any rate except for union and general establishment charges, was after a discussion, negatived by a majority of 62, the numbers being 18 to 80. The second, proposed by Lord NAAS, was with reference to the repeal of the following clause in the original Poor Relief Bill for Ireland :—"That any covenant or agreement whereby any person, liable to pay any rent, and entitled under the provisions of this Act to deduct therefrom any rate or portion of rate, shall have covenanted, or shall hereafter covenant, to forego such deduction, shall, so far as such rate is concerned, be of no effect;" which proposition was carried by a majority of 61, the numbers being 71 to 10, and the clause was inserted; after which the House resumed, and temporarily adjourned at three o'clock.

The Speaker again took the chair at five o'clock.

METROPOLITAN POLICE RATE.

Lord DUDLEY STUART, in a speech explanatory of the objects involved in his motion, moved "For a Select Committee to inquire into the manner of making the assessment in the several counties for the maintenance of the Metropolitan Police, and into the expenditure thereof; as well as into the general administration of the force, and especially into the recent annual increased charge of upwards of £350,000 in the county of Middlesex." The noble Lord denounced the police as so many petty tyrants, and affirmed that the metropolis could be more effectually guarded by infinitely fewer men and at a far less cost.

Sir G. GREY thought it unnecessary to defend the police from the charge of being so many petty tyrants; and with regard to the proposed inquiry, a similar one had already been made. Doubtless there were inequalities in the metropolitan rating, but these, he believed, would be shortly remedied.

Mr. BROTHERTON considered the whole system of police-rating unjust, and referred to Manchester as an instance which contributed largely to the support of the metropolitan police.

Mr. OSBORNE thought the complaint was not against the police, but against the inequality of the assessment by which they were paid. It was a most efficient, and, in the metropolis, well managed force.

Sir W. JOLLIFFE suggested some alterations in the constitution and disposition of the force.

Mr. HUME thought the manner of paying the force ought to be inquired into; but was of opinion the noble Lord ought to satisfy himself with moving for returns with the intention of renewing the present motion in the next session, when he hoped the Government would agree to it.

Sir DE LACY EVANS pointed to the unfairness of collecting a 6d. rate, where 2d. or 3d. would be sufficient.

Sir G. GREY denied the necessity for so doing.

Sir J. W. HOGG accused Sir G. Grey of a breach of faith in withdrawing the bill for reducing the rate from 6d to 3d., and reminded Mr. Brotherton that the police of metropolis were detached from thence to any part of England on an emergency arising.

Sir G. GREY replied that, when such was the case, their expenses were paid by the places to which they were sent. Measures had been taken lately to equalise the rate over the various parishes in the metropolis.

After a few words from Mr. THORNELY and Lord R. GROSVENOR, who supported the motion, but not on the grounds advanced by the noble mover, and a reply from Lord D. STUART, the House divided, when the motion was negatived by a majority of 109; the numbers being 38 to 137.

THE PEOPLE'S CHARTER.

Mr. F. O'CONNOR, having declined to accede to the requests made to him, to postpone his motion in favour of the bringing on of the adjourned debate on the state of the nation, proceeded, in a speech illustrative of the existing defects in the constitution of the House of Commons, as not representing the wants and wishes of the people, and in favour of their claims to more—"That this House, recognising the great principle that labour is the source of all wealth, that the people are the only legitimate source of power, that the labourer should be the first partaker of the fruits of his own industry, that taxation without representation is tyranny, and should be resisted, and believing that the resources of the country would be best developed by laws made by representatives chosen by the labouring classes in conjunction with those who live by other industrial pursuits; that (in recognition of the above great truths) this House adopts the principles embodied in the document entitled the People's Charter, namely, annual elections, universal suffrage, vote by ballot, equal electoral districts, no property qualification, and payment of members."

Mr. S. CRAWFORD seconded the motion.

Colonel THOMPSON, in support of the motion, detailed what he termed his wide and diversive views on the subject.

Mr. HUME also supported the motion, expressing his hope that the time was coming when the middle class of electors, seeing that all measures were now rejected which had for their object a reduction of the national expenditure, and the promotion of good government, would demand a change in the constitution of that House, and called upon the noble Lord, ere it was too late, to do justice to the people at large by bringing them within the pale of the constitution.

Mr. M. J. O'CONNELL stated the reasons why, on general principles, he objected to some points of the charter, but expressed his desire that large batches of intelligent men who were now excluded from the exercise of political rights should have the franchise extended to them.

Mr. G. THOMPSON quoted Lord J. Russell's observations of 1837 in order to show that, on the part of the noble Lord, there was a firm and pertinacious resistance to every proposition introduced and for, in the slightest degree, extending the just rights of the people; and, after referring to the state of the representation in various boroughs, expressed his belief that the Constitution would be best maintained in its integrity when the people were fairly represented in that house; and he should therefore vote, without committing himself to the details, for the resolution before the House, in the hope that it would lead to some practical result.

Mr. CAMPBELL, on the ground that the masses were most interested in the stability of the institutions of their country, thought the House would be justified in rejecting the motion.

Mr. S. CRAWFORD, as one of those who had signed the document on which the Charter was founded, avowed his firm conviction to be that the principles of the Charter were the only ones on which the liberties of the people could be secured.

Sir G. STRICKLAND, as an old and consistent reformer, stated the reasons why he could not support the motion.

Mr. W. J. FOX took a historical review of the representative system, and concluded by observing that he supported the motion on the simple principle, without reference to this or that point of the Charter, that the people were entitled to this extensive enlargement of the existing basis of the elective franchise.

Lord J. RUSSELL, next to the arguments of Mr. G. THOMPSON, as to his expressed opinions in 1837, referred to the defective state of some portions of the representative system, which he had never denied, referred to the various points of the Charter in detail, and the labour question, to the state of France and the results consequent upon universal suffrage there, made some admissions as to its extension in this country, and concluded by stating that he must oppose the proposition before the House, conceiving that if adopted it would tend to produce the greatest evils, and that they were in the enjoyment of benefits which if they lightly parted with they would deserve to be deemed the most foolish and unwise nation on the face of the earth.

Mr. HUNTE could not support the motion, but said there was a great deal which ought to be given to the people, and which, if it were not given, they would take.

After a reply from Mr. O'CONNOR, the House divided, when the motion was negatived by a majority of 209, the numbers being 13 to 222.

SALE OF BREAD.

Mr. BANKES moved that the House go into committee for the purpose of considering the sale of provisions and weights in the sale of bread.

After a discussion the House divided, when the motion was carried by a majority of 54, the numbers being 91 to 37; when the House went into committee, a resolution was considered and agreed to, and, on the House resuming, leave was given to bring in the bill.

THE SCOTCH AND IRISH MAILS.

Mr. KERR moved for a select committee to inquire into the expediency of the proposed alterations as regarded the transmission of the mails between the southwest of Scotland and the north of Ireland, which motion, on a division, was negatived by a majority of 7, the numbers being 37 to 44.

BRIBERY.

Mr. BUTLER called the attention of the House to the special reports and recommendations of the Lyme Regis Election Committee of last session, charging John Attwood, Esq., with bribery (then a member of this House, and subsequently unseated for bribery in his election for Harwich), and moved that the Attorney-General be directed to prosecute Mr. Attwood and his agents for the alleged cases of bribery and corruption at Lyme Regis and Harwich.

Major BERESFORD opposed the motion, as did also

Sir GEORGE GREY (who said, inasmuch as the committee had not recommended a prosecution, he very much doubted whether, if instituted, it could be maintained.

On a division, the motion was negatived by a majority of 43, the numbers being 43 to 5.—Adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House assembled at noon, and sat to six o'clock.

MARRIAGE WITH A DECEASED WIFE'S SISTER.

Having gone into committee on the Marriages Bill, Mr. HOPE, in the absence of Mr. Spendlove Palmer, moved the substitution of the following clause for the third clause of the bill, viz.:—"That nothing in this act contained shall be deemed or construed in any civil or ecclesiastical court of the realm to alter, or in any manner affect, any doctrine, canon, or law ecclesiastical, of the United Church of England and Ireland, or of the Church of Scotland, whereby the degrees of consanguinity and affinity, within which marriage is now held to be prohibited by the doctrine and discipline of the same churches respectively, are settled or defined; and no clergyman, minister, or officer of either of the said churches shall be required, or authorised, by virtue of this act, to solemnise, or grant any licence for solemnising, any marriage contrary to the doctrine or discipline of the church of which he is such clergyman, minister, or officer; nor any such clergyman, minister, or officer who may hereafter solemnise, or grant any licence for solemnising, any such marriage, be exempted, by virtue of this act, from any spiritual or ecclesiastical censure or punishment to which he would by law be subject if this act had not been passed."

A lengthened discussion followed, after which the clause was negatived without a division.

Mr. F. MAULE moved the insertion of a clause to exempt Scotland from the operation of the bill.

Mr. J. O'CONNELL moved an amendment, that Ireland as well as Scotland should be exempted.

Mr. F. MAULE acquiesced in the amendment, and the Committee divided on the amended clause:—For the clause exempting Ireland and Scotland, 66; against it, 119: majority against the bill, 53.

The bill finally passed through Committee.

COPYHOLD ENFRANCHISEMENT.

Mr. AGLIONBY moved the committal of the Copyhold Enfranchisement Bill.

Mr. CHRISTOPHER opposed the bill, and moved, as an amendment, that it be committed that day three months.

After a short discussion, the House divided:—For going into committee, 60; against it, 71: majority against the bill, 11. The bill was therefore thrown out.

MINES AND COLLIERIES.

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE moved the second reading of the Mines and Collieries Bill, the object of which, he said, was to protect, by legislative interference, the lives of persons working in mines and collieries.

Mr. HUME seconded the motion.

Sir G. GREY said a bill for the purpose of ensuring proper inspection of mines and collieries was in the recent annual Government, and would be introduced during the present session. He objected to the hon. member's bill, because the system of inspection provided by it was too expensive, and the interference proposed greater than was required.

Mr. LACY considered the bill so impracticable and mischievous, that he could not avoid moving, as an amendment, that the bill be read a second time that day three months.

Mr. M'GREGOR seconded the amendment.

Lord LINCOLN recommended the withdrawal of the bill.

Mr. T. DUNCOMBE insisted on a division; but, during the absence of strangers the bill was withdrawn.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

ROME.

Lord BROUGHAM gave notice that, on Monday week, he should bring forward a motion on the subject of the intervention in the Roman States. He rejoiced to hear that the war was ended without any essential damage to Rome monuments in the safety of which the whole civilized world took interest.

AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS BILL.

Lord MONTEAGLE brought up the report of the Committee on this bill, with amendments.

The report of the bill as amended was received, and the bill was ordered to be read a third time on Friday.

OATH OF SUPREMACY.

The Earl of WICKLOW presented a petition from the Earl of Clancarty, complaining that he was prevented from exercising his privileges by the oath of supremacy, as he could not, considering the policy pursued towards Roman Catholics of late years, take an oath declaring the non-existence of the authority of the Pope within this realm.

LOAN SOCIETIES BILL.

This bill was read a second time.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

The General Land Drainage and Improvement Company (Incorporation and Conferring of Powers) Bill was read a third time and passed.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The House then went into Committee on this bill, and was engaged in the discussion of the remaining clauses until a few minutes past four o'clock, when, the whole bill being of that length, the House resumed, and immediately afterwards adjourned till six o'clock.

THE ADJOURNED DEBATE ON THE STATE OF THE NATION.

In the evening sitting, an appeal was made to Mr. Hume to postpone his motion with respect to the Rajah of Sattara, in order to allow the adjourned debate on the State of the Nation to be proceeded with; but the hon. member declined to accede to it.

Mr. DISRAELI said, that under such circumstances it would be impossible to resume the discussion before the 31st inst. If the Government would, however, give another day for continuing the debate, he would promise on the part of his friends that every facility would be given for closing the debate, and taking the sense of the House upon that day. If the Government, who had, he admitted, given every facility for the discussion of the question, could not give another day, he would be compelled to move that the order for continuing the debate be discharged.

Lord J. RUSSELL was of opinion that if the adjourned debate on the hon. gentleman's motion was to be continued, it was desirable that it should be continued without delay. Under these circumstances, and at a further sacrifice of convenience, he was willing that the adjourned debate should be resumed the next day (Friday), but he must ask the House, in consequence, to sit at twelve o'clock on Monday, to take into consideration the bills relating to Scotland.

Mr. DISRAELI assented to this arrangement.

THE HUDSON'S BAY COMPANY.

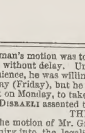
On the motion of Mr. GLADSTONE, an address to her Majesty was agreed to for an inquiry into the legality of the powers exercised by the Hudson's Bay Company in North America, under the charter of Charles II., issued in the year 1670, or in virtue of any other right or title other than those conveyed under the 3rd and 4th Wm. III., c. 138, and the 12nd Geo. IV., c. 66.

TENANT RIGHT.

Mr. J. O'CONNELL moved for leave to bring in a bill to establish by law throughout Ireland the custom of tenant right existing in the province of Ulster. In the course of the hon. gentleman's observations, the House was counted out, there being only 33 members present, at eight o'clock.

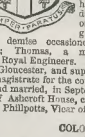
OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

JOHN PHILLPOTTS, ESQ., LATE M.P. FOR GLOUCESTER.



THE awfully sudden death of this gentleman occurred on the 29th ult. It appears from the evidence taken at the Coroner's inquest, that the deceased had entered one of the Waterloo omnibuses at the corner of Devonshire-street, about a quarter-past ten o'clock at night, and had travelled only as far as the Regent's-Circus, Oxford-street, when he suddenly fell on one side, and instantly expired. Mr. Phillpotts was seventy-four years of age. His father, Mr. John Phillpotts, of Gloucester, possessed a small estate in the parish of Langaren, county Hereford, which had been the property of his family for upwards of two hundred years; but in 1791 he sold his inheritance, and resided until his death in the city of Gloucester. By Sibella his wife, daughter and co-heir of Samuel Ockington Grover, of Bridgewater, he left four sons, John, of Porthgwidden, county Cornwall, the gentleman whose sudden demise occasioned this notice; Henry, the present Bishop of Exeter; Thomas, a merchant in London; and George, Lieutenant-Colonel Royal Engineers. Mr. John Phillpotts sat in six Parliaments for the city of Gloucester, and supported the Liberal party. He was also a barrister and a magistrate for the counties of Gloucester and Cornwall. He was born in 1775, and married, in September, 1797, Sarah, daughter of Thomas Chandler, Esq., of Ashcroft House, county Gloucester, by whom he had a son, the Rev. Thomas Phillpotts, Vicar of Feock, Cornwall.

COLONEL THOMAS WEARE, K.H.



THIS highly-distinguished officer, Commandant of the Provisional Battalion at Chatham, died, deeply deplored, on the 27th ult. From his first entrance on his gallant profession he took an active part in the military operations of the time. In 1805 he served with the British and Russian army in Italy; in 1809 was engaged in the campaign of Egypt; and in 1810 participated in the capture of the Ionian Isles, being acting Engineer Officer at the siege of Santa Maura. He subsequently gained distinction on the glorious but hard-fought fields of the Peninsula, at Villa Moriel, Burgos, Osma, Vittoria, San Sebastian, Nivelle, and Bayonne.

He was only one of the late Rev. Thomas Weare, of Jesus College, Oxford, who resided and was a popular preacher in that University for many years, and who descended from the Weares of Manor and Giddi Court, co. Hereford, where, it appears, by reference to Burke's &c., they were resident previously to 1611. Colonel Weare married Ann, daughter of John Pugh, Esq., of Lower, Shropshire, and had a daughter—Charlotte Maria—and two sons, Thomas-William, M.A., of Christ Church, Oxford; and Henry-Edwin.

THOMAS FAIRFAX BEST, ESQ., OF WIERTON, KENT.

IT was only last week that we had to record the death of Colonel Best, of Park House, Boxley, the head of the family of which Mr. Fairfax Best was a younger member. The latter lamented and much respected gentleman died on the 30th ult., at his residence, Wardour Terrace, aged 63. He was son and heir of the late George Best, Esq., of Chilham Park, M.P. for Rochester, by Caroline, his wife, daughter of Edward Scott, Esq., of Scott's Hall, Kent, and grandson of James Best, Esq., of Park House, by Frances his wife, daughter of Richard Shelley, Esq., of Michelgrove, Sussex.

For some years, in early life, he held a commission in the 1st Foot Guards, and at the period of his demise was a Magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the county of Kent. By Margaret Ann his wife, whom he married 11th of June, 1817, and who was daughter of Joseph George Brett, Esq., of Old Brompton, he leaves four daughters.

WHIRLWIND IN NEW GRANADA.—(From a Correspondent.)—On the 23rd of April, a violent whirlwind took place just outside the town of Medellin, New Granada, at a quarter past three o'clock in the afternoon. Our informant describes the surprise at first at what resembled the distant rushing of coaches; and on going to ascertain the cause, he saw a row of poplar-trees on each side of the road, some torn up by the roots, others broken asunder and carried aloft in the air, and the steeples of the neighbouring houses. Above the scene of destruction was a large black cloud, in the midst of which was a white one, about 20 yards long, whirling round like the drum of a thrashing-machine, and, by its revolving, taking up birds and other objects. A spacious house, not far distant, had the roof entirely torn off; a large wall and gates in front were levelled to the earth, and the trees in the grounds were torn up or stripped of their bark. At the river, the whirlwind divided the stream as into two walls. Meanwhile, the cloud changed to an elongated form, terminating in a fine point, and then disappeared.

FRENCH INTERVENTION AT ROME.

ROME, June 22, 1849.

We are still besieged by Oudinot, who is battering away at the walls, and we are watching him from my studio window. We have a capital place to see all from, our house being on a hill, immediately opposite the point of attack. We can see almost every shot that is fired. The French army we cannot see, as they are hid by the wall; but we can see the shot strike the wall, and send up stones and clouds of dust. Occasionally shots and shells have come into the town. The Government pay two bajocchi a pound for shot that are picked up. The people intend sending a message to Oudinot to complain, as it appears some of his shot are short weight. They will then, no doubt, receive the value in lead, which they can cast to larger. The heat is intense—not so hot as it will be, though, in a few months. I wish all my work were done, and the siege over. I have sent you two Sketches, which may be useful—Garibaldi's men in the act of charging the enemy—for despatch. They are wonderfully picturesque fellows. Those that I have done are all, more or less, portraits.

It is impossible to go on with the View of Rome until the siege is over, as they are firing about the house. I saw to-day, from my studio window, a shot or a shell go bolt into it. I hope it did not go through the drawing.

I will send you Sketches whenever I can. Write to me on the receipt of these, as I am not sure that they go; the French may, perhaps, stop them. We are all surprised here at the slow way in which Oudinot appears to be proceeding. The Romans keep up their courage well; they have all sorts of fellows in the army—Milanese, Piedmontese, Tuscans, Lombards, Poles, and even French, English, and Americans.

June 24th.—I have got two more Sketches for you. The large one is a view from the top of a house. The French had entered by the breach during last night. The wall is tremendously battered the whole way from the Villa Sciarra to the Porta San Pancrazia. The French have made no fresh attack since that in the breach. They have possession of it, however, and are fortifying it; they will, perhaps, make a decisive attack to night or to-morrow. Last night they threw an immense number of shells into the town.

The other Sketch is Monte Testaccio—a Roman battery firing at the French battery.

I will send you more Sketches soon: it will be useful to understand the positions. I can say no more now, or I shall be too late for the post.

I sent you a Sketch the other day, from the Porta San Pancrazia [engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS for June 23]; it is now nearly all tumbled to pieces.

[The Sketches named in our Correspondent's letter reached us too late to be engraved this week, but will appear in our next. The View of Rome to which our Artist refers is that already announced for publication in our Journal for June 23, as a Frontispiece to Vol. XV.]

ROME.—Hostilities at Rome have at length been brought to a close, and fortunately without the horrors of an assault being necessary. This happy result was achieved on the 30th ult., at the express desire of the Roman Constituent Assembly, all further resistance being deemed useless. A capitulation immediately waited upon General Oudinot, in order to arrange the terms of submission.

The following is a copy of General Oudinot's despatch communicating this important intelligence to the French Government:—

"On the 30th of June the Roman Constituent Assembly passed a decree in the following terms:—

"The Assembly ceases a defence which has become impossible, and remains at its post. It charges the Triumvirate with the execution of the present decree.

"At the same time, the Commander-in-Chief of the Roman army demanded, at seven o'clock, a suspension of hostilities, and announced the prompt arrival at the French head-quarters of a deputation of the Municipality of Rome."

Previous to the state of things here mentioned, the siege operations had been carried on so vigorously by the French, that the Roman soldiers began to lose spirit and become disorganized, the carabineers and others refusing to perform any other duty than act as the police of the city, and protect the Romans from the violent friendship of the foreign bands within the walls. In order to recall the flagging enthusiasm, a grand Republican procession, at the head of which marched the Princess Belgioso, was got up in the city, with a view to excite the population to resist to the last. The Princess wore a Phrygian cap, and a black silk gown decorated with red ribands, and harangued the people as she advanced. She was followed by two Frenchmen, who each carried a red flag with revolutionary devices, by Mazzini, Garibaldi, Avezzana, &c. The effect of the demonstration, however, did not respond to the expectation of the revolutionists, the population viewing the exhibition with indifference, if not disgust.

So far back as the 23rd ult. a capitulation was seriously entertained by the majority of the Assembly, but they were deterred from making a proposition of that nature by three or four of the minority, who had spoken strongly in condemnation of it. The inhabitants are described as being much incensed at the prolongation of the war.

THE ILLUSTRATIONS.

The Engravings show prominent points in the scene of attack. In the first view, the Villa Pamfili Doria is seen. This palace itself is, externally, almost entirely encrusted with antique reliefs, which give it an air of elaborate magnificence; but one cannot help regretting that such precious works of art should be exposed to the injuries of the weather; the situation, too, is very unhealthy. In the same view, also, are shown the Corsini and Ferroni Villas.

The Protestant Burial-ground lies near the Gate of St. Paolo, on the Via Laurentina and Ostiensis, and is peculiarly interesting to Englishmen, from its containing the remains of many of their countrymen. The ashes of the poet Shelley are interred here, close to the remains of his friend and brother poet, Keats. Shelley's tomb bears an inscription written by Trelawney. Close to the Protestant ground is seen the pyramid of Caius Cestius, nearly as perfect as in the year in 330 days of which it was built, according to the testament of Cestius, as narrated in the inscription.

The Porta San Pancrazio, one of the main points of attack, is next shown, with a panoramic view of this portion of the city.

It will be seen, from the latest telegraphic despatch received from General Oudinot, that after the assault on the night of the 30th ult., overtures of submission were made by the Romans, and the gates of San Paolo Fortese and San Pancrazia (the latter shown in the first view) were opened to the French.

THE NATIONAL EXPOSITION AT PARIS.

THE Expositions of National Industry in Paris date from upwards of half a century since, or 1797, when the idea of such a display originated with the Marquis d'Avèze, then appointed by the Minister of the Interior to the office of Commissioner of the National Manufactures of Sèvres, of the Gobelins Tapestry, and of the Savonnerie. In a series of fêtes at St. Cloud, given by the Marquis, to which manufacturers were invited to forward goods for sale, the subject was gradually brought under the public notice. Arrangements were completed for opening the Exposition, when the Marquis was compelled, by "the proscription," to leave Paris. The enlightened Minister, François de Neufchâtel, to whom M. d'Avèze had originally communicated his scheme, lost no time in organising the same kind of exhibition as a national undertaking, which was held in the Champ de Mars. The second Exposition took place under the Consulate, in the year 1801; the next in 1802, 1806, 1819, 1823, 1827, 1831, 1839, and 1844. We have now to notice the Exposition of the present year (1849), nominally opened on the 4th of June, though in a very incomplete state.

SAXOPHONE.

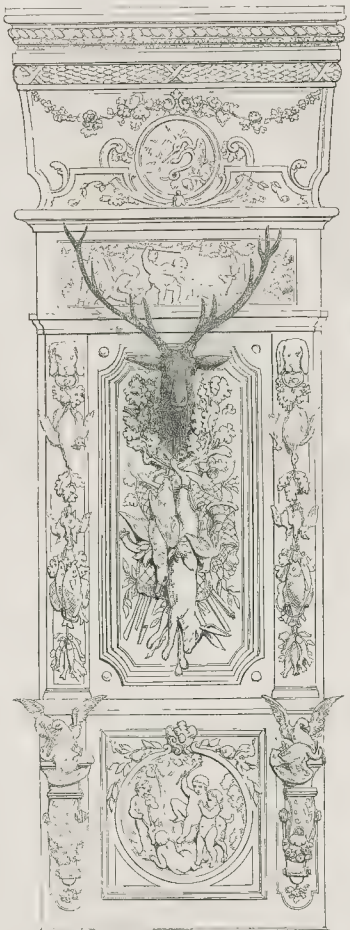
"In spite of circumstances most adverse to success," says the Journal of Design, "the Exposition of this year presents a larger development than any of its predecessors. There is every reason to believe that the number of the exhibitors will amount to at least four thousand five hundred. The building is erected of wood entirely, and the materials of which it is composed remain the property of the contractor, to whom it is said to have cost 900,000 francs! It consists of two enormous longitudinal galleries, about 800 feet long by 90 broad, and of four transverse, which enclose three court-yards: the central one containing flowers, fountains, horticultural implements, and ornaments of all kinds; the two lateral, one a reservoir of water in case of fire, and the other a collection of large iron-castings and metal-work. In addition to all this space, an enormous, still more temporary building has been provided, to receive the objects connected with agriculture, which this year are exposed for the first time."

The situation of this great temple of industry is one of the pleasantest and most accessible parts of the Champs Elysées. The exhibition is peculiarly rich in metal works, ribbons, silks, lace, Mulhausen and other garment prints, paper-hangings, and furniture.

We have engraved three specimens, from sketches by our own Artist.

The panel of which we give a representation is in carton pierre, and fabricated by Crouchet. The style makes it well adapted for a hall or a room in a hunting-box. The symbols of the chase in the panels, and the groups of game, fish, &c., pendants by the sides of and in the central compartment, are skilfully disposed and admirably worked out.

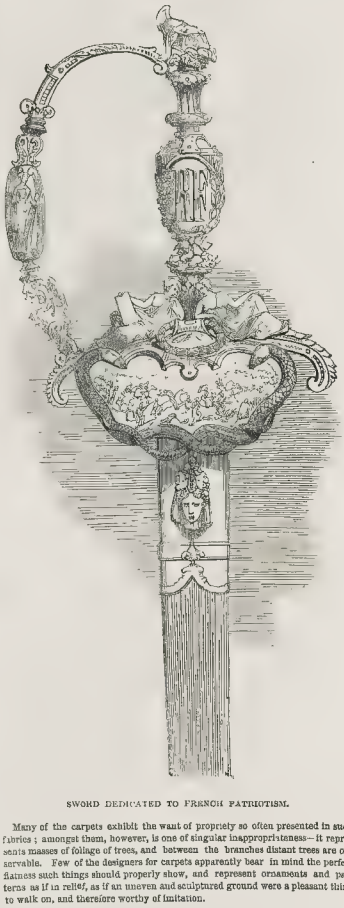
The "Sword dedicated to French Patriotism," by Alexandre Gueyton, is of an extremely tasteful design; the groups of figures upon it reminding us of the skilful armourers of the sixteenth century, being somewhat, indeed, in the school of Cellini.



PANEL IN CARTON PIERRE.

Our third Illustration represents a new Musical Instrument, the invention of M. Saxe, whose fame is already known in this branch of art; it is appropriately named after the inventor—the Saxophone.

The specimens of stained glass are not remarkable, either for design or execution, or even for colour, being merely of average merit, and far inferior, in point of richness of colour, to what might have been expected.



SWORD DEDICATED TO FRENCH PATRIOTISM.

Many of the carpets exhibit the want of propriety so often presented in such fabrics; amongst them, however, is one of singular inappropriateness—it represents masses of foliage of trees, and between the branches distant trees are observable. Few of the designers for carpets apparently bear in mind the perfect flatness such things should properly show, and represent ornaments and patterns as if in relief, as if an uneven and sculptured ground were a pleasant thing to walk on, and therefore worthy of imitation.

INUNDATION AT NEW ORLEANS.

IN our Journal of the 23rd ult. we recorded the destructive floods at New Orleans. From the intelligence received from the United States, by the Herman, on Wednesday, we are happy to learn that the latest telegraphic report from New Orleans is to the effect that there was a fair prospect of the crevasse being effectually stopped in a few days, the water in the inundated districts having already receded one foot. The city was healthy. Lime was being freely strewn along the streets lately overflowed, for the purpose of purification.

Many of our readers will have become acquainted with the aspect of New Orleans by means of the large panoramic paintings now exhibiting in London. We have copied the accompanying view from Banvard's picture, at the Egyptian Hall, in Piccadilly.

In the New Orleans Picayune of June 4 we find the following account of the appearance of the city during the catastrophe:—"New Orleans is for this once precisely in the condition of a beleaguered town; her enemy, the giant Father of Waters, extending his lines and circumvallations slowly, but surely, around her; until, the moment having arrived when she is completely in his grasp, we may expect he will, like other scientific strategists, suddenly direct his watery columns into her very centre, and storm her in her citadel. Throwing aside metaphor, we have now, since the irruption of the river through the Sauvé Crevasse, water on all sides of us—in front, on our flanks, and in our rear. The semicircular form of New Orleans renders her more accessible to water, more able to be invested by it, in the event of any breach in the level above her confines, than were her outline more direct; whilst the absence of any elevation of soil in her vicinity, and the almost imperceptible declivity of the land lying between her river face and the lake (Pontchartrain) which bounds her in the rear, enables the insidious water, when once broken loose from the bed of the Father of Waters, to spread far and wide, presenting the appearance of one vast, dull, and stagnant lake. This is just the picture which the uppermost portion of the rear-wards in the Second Municipality now presents, and which must be the one completed with out feelings of mingled awe and fear."

From the top of the St. Charles Hotel the scene of devastation is awful. Far away to the utmost extent of vision towards Carrollton, and above, leading to the lands in the vicinity of the Sauvé Crevasse, the surface of the country on the left hand bank of the Mississippi is one sheet of water, dotted in innumerable spots with houses, groups of verdure, barns, outhouses, lofty trees, and brushwood.

"The view of the upper section of the city from the cupola of the St. Charles is highly picturesque; and could one disengage his mind from the idea of the tremendous loss of property and the extent of suffering among the inhabitants of the inundated region which this sudden irruption of the Mississippi has caused, he might gaze and confess he had never beheld a more imposing, a more interesting sight. The whole of the streets in the Second Municipality, lying at right angles with the river, are now so many vast water-courses or aquatic highways, issuing, as it were, from the bosom of the swamp, which is the terminus for each. Indeed, there is no place with which to compare this city, as it now stands when a-en landward, or with the back to the river, at the present moment, that would give the absent traveller so correct an idea of its topographical features as the city of Venice. A few bridges only are wanting, with some gondolas—somewhat larger than the small skiffs with which the housekeeper navigates the street to and from terra firma, to make the resemblance complete.

"There are many strikingly beautiful objects in New Orleans, discernible amidst the present melancholy desolation. The rear of the city is bounded by a thick, almost impenetrable jungle, or underwrowth of rank shrubs, interspersed with cypress and other trees. During several years, the Draining Company, with powerful machinery, have been operating there, pressing their way to the constantly increasing population, who yearly extend their dwellings further and farther from the littoral face of the city. At present, as a matter of course, their occupation is gone; but far back in the swamp, the extreme verge of humanity, as it may be called, their engine-houses, wide apart and isolated, may be designated, to borrow a figure of De Tocqueville, as so many arks of civilization in an ocean of leaves. Those rear their heads seemingly in melancholy contemplation of the inutility of further efforts to extend the race of men over the wild domain of nature in that direction, since the accident of an hour may destroy the labour of years."

Yet the writer finds consolation on turning from the wide and watery waste rearward of the city, to the majestic Mississippi which fronts it. He adds:—"The long line of vessels of every rate of burden, from 1000 tons to that of an oyster sloop, moored from the Levée-line line almost to the old tobacco warehouses, announces the immense commerce which connects this great port with every civilized nation throughout the globe. There is a peculiar beauty in the manner in which these vessels are distributed. Ships, barks, and brigs are on each flank, whilst the small craft of sloop, schooner, &c., and the countless fleet of steamboats, employed in the river trade, are in the centre."

Among the objects seen by the writer from his lofty point, after the noble churches, such as the old Cathedral in the Place des Armes, St. Patrick's, the Presbyterian and Methodist temples of worship, Christ Church, &c., the University of Louisiana, in Common-street, most challenged observation, from the extreme beauty of the architecture and the singularity of its position, being surrounded with water. It looked also one of those old palaces of the Venetian magnifici, which by their paraphernalia outlined against the sky of the horizon, and seem, by their solidity, to defy the hand of time and decay. Another prominent feature in the landscape is the Marine Hospital, on the right bank of the Mississippi.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1849.

THE Roman National Assembly has demanded a suspension of hostilities, and has ceased from a defence which had become hopeless against the opposing forces of the French outside their walls and the near prospect of famine within. The French have by this time entered Rome, and have avoided the questionable "glory" of a sanguinary victory, and the disgraceful celebrity of destroying the classic and time-hallowed monuments of the most renowned city in the world. But, although they have thus surmounted a great difficulty, other difficulties quite as formidable are before them. The Romans themselves are far from being disposed of by the occupation of their city; and the present move having been made, there are some other players who will try their hands, and who only held aloof until France had played her pawn. Austria, Spain, and Naples will now appear upon the scene on behalf of Roman Catholic Europe; and France must either unite with them, oppose them, or withdraw. To unite with these powers in order to reimpose the antiquated barbarism of a Government of priests, and the secular dominion of the Pope upon the unwilling Romans, would be to disgrace France for ever on the page of history; to oppose them would be somewhat contradictory, after such deeds as have been perpetrated by the French Republicans upon their brethren and imitators at Rome; and to withdraw, would be to leave the affairs of Italy to the unsatisfactory solution of the sword—a solution that only lasts for a time, and that invariably leaves the real work to be done over again. Besides, it would not suit French ideas at all, or be safe even for a Bonaparte to allow the world to say or sing, with a slight variation upon the old distich, that

Fierce Oudinot, with all his men,
Marched into Rome, and then marched out again.

To remain in Rome as the friends of the Romans seems, therefore, the policy most worthy of the French nation, and the one most likely to be pursued. It will be a confession of error; but it may prove an atonement for it; and, although such a course of proceeding may involve France in hostilities with Austria, it is not possible to get out of so false a position without some loss, either of character or of resources.

THE return of Baron Rothschild as member for the City of London, by a majority so large, and under circumstances so peculiar, cannot but expedite the settlement of the question of the admissibility of Jews to Parliament. The irritation felt and expressed, and the language indulged in by the Baron's supporters, are much to be regretted. It would have added greatly to the moral worth of the victory they have won, if it had been accompanied by a quietness of demeanour and a complaisance of tone towards the House of Lords. The members of that illustrious assembly, in rejecting the Baron's claim to a seat in the Legislature, were as fully entitled to hold their opinion as the citizens of London were, and acted strictly within the limits of the Constitution. It is to be hoped that the future stages of this question will be signalised by the absence of the bitterness to which we allude, and that the citizens of London, if again called upon to assert what they believe to be a true principle, will respect the motives and honour the conscientious scruples of those who are opposed to them. The continuance of a contest between a portion of the constituency so large and important as that of the City of London, and an independent branch of the Legislature, is greatly to be deprecated; and it would be a source of national satisfaction if some means could be devised whereby the question at issue could be legally and peacably decided.

Another rejection of the Jew Bill by the Lords, in the present temper of the first city of the empire, would be inconvenient, if not worse; and, with the view of preventing any further collision, a daily contemporary of much influence has suggested a mode of operation:—"The eligibility of a Jew into the House of Commons is," he says, "the question at issue. The House of Commons is alone affected by it. The Jew already may be an elector, an Alderman, a Sheriff, a Lord Mayor. All these are conceded to him. His exclusion from the House of Commons may be regarded purely as a casus omissus in the list of his civil qualifications. Surely, in this case, the House may pronounce upon what is reducible to a question of form. It has a precedent for admitting its members in its own or their own way. It recognised the affirmation of the Quakers in the case of Mr. Pease. Why should it not recognise the oath of the Jew in that of Mr. Rothschild? Let Mr. Rothschild advance to take the oath in the House of Commons in the same way that he would take it in Westminster Hall; and let the House pass a resolution that the oath thus taken is valid." The case, however, are not parallel. Our Legislature is Christian, and so Christianity Mr. Pease laid claim. Not so Mr. Rothschild; and to admit him under such a form, would be virtually to pass an act without the intervention of a co-equal and necessary branch of the Legislature. The question is embarrassing; but questions far more difficult have been brought to a satisfactory solution by the good sense of the people and the wisdom of Parliament. There can be no doubt of a similar result in the present case, more especially if the unseemly threats and disrespectful language of some of Baron Rothschild's over-zealous supporters be discontinued and abandoned. In the meantime, the question may very safely lie over. The session is nearly at an end; and the re-introduction of the Jew Bill next year will afford another opportunity for its peaceable settlement. The House of Lords will not continue the contest, should the House of Commons a third time affirm, by a decided majority, its wish that Jews should be eligible as well as electors, and that they should help to make the laws which as Sheriffs, Lord Mayor, and Magistrates, they are now called upon to administer.

THE fortress of Raab has been evacuated by the Hungarians, after a sharp siege, and is now the temporary head-quarters of the Austrian Emperor. The Hungarians are said to have retired in good order, and with all their guns and matériel; but the opposing forces which have been brought to bear against them are so many and so powerful, that we may anticipate, ere many weeks, the final suppression of the gallant attempt which that nation has made to re-establish its ancient freedom. The weak and crumbling Empire of Austria will be propped up for awhile by the armies of Russia; but support at such hands is tantamount to degradation and defeat; and Austria thus protected will soon sink into a second or third-rate power, instead of remaining, as she might have done, under a wise Government, one of the leading states of the great European Commonwealth. It was the interest of Europe to see Austria united, prosperous, and happy. The Councils under which she has been governed since the peace of 1815 have prevented this consummation; and Austria, despite of the conquest of the Hungarians and of the Lombardo-Venetians, must inevitably become the vassal and the dependant of the too powerful and too ambitious ally, whom, in an evil hour, she was induced to call to her assistance.

In the successes of the Russians over the Hungarians, we see no prospect of peace for Europe. Such successes settle nothing. They but postpone an inevitable catastrophe, and only serve to accumulate evils for a future day of reckoning. But such is always the consequence of evil courses. One injustice is invariably the parent of a numerous progeny. Russia and Austria were jointly guilty in the partition of Poland. That crime pursues them still; and Russia, that has, strictly speaking, nothing to do with Austria, cannot afford to remain neutral in the Hungarian war, lest the successes of the Magyars should compel her to disgorge the ill-gotten provinces of barmatia; and Austria, that ought to have nothing to do with Russia, is forced to have recourse to the unlucky assistance of that power to prevent herself from falling to pieces. The Hungarian and Italian questions cannot be permanently settled by physical force. Such a settlement may postpone, but it cannot prevent an ultimate decision in favour of the claims of those nations to self-government and constitutional freedom.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The following bills were respectively read and passed through committee, on the motion of Earl Granville:—The Loan Societies Bill, the Assaults (Ireland) Bill, the Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction Bill, the Soap Allowances Bill, and the Sheriff of Westmoreland Bill.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

Lord BROUGHAM proposed a series of resolutions on this subject, recommending the classification of prisoners, the enforcement of compulsory labour, the abolition of solitary confinement, except in certain specified cases, the making the duration of imprisonment and the quality of the diet depend upon the conduct of the prisoner, &c.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said that an inquiry on the subject was now pending, and hoped the noble and learned Lord would not press his motion, else he should meet it by the "previous question."

After a short discussion, in which the Earl of CHICHESTER defended the separate system adopted in Reading Gaol and Pentonville Prison,

Lord BROUGHAM withdrew his resolutions.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The House met at noon.

On the motion of Sir WILLIAM SOMERVILLE, the order for the committee on the Municipal Corporations (Ireland) Bill was discharged, and the bill referred to a select committee.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The report on this bill was brought up, and some further clauses and provisoes being added to the bill, the report was agreed to, and the third reading fixed for Monday.

The House then adjourned for a few hours, till five o'clock.

AFFAIRS IN HUNGARY.

Mr HUME wanted to know whether the changes that were now going on in Europe, or the interference of Russia in the affairs of Hungary, were likely to put an end to the Treaty of Vienna. In what situation was this country to consider it in regard to these changes?

Lord J. RUSSELL, in reply to the question of the hon. gentleman, said, as he understood the matter, there had been no interference whatever with the Treaty of Vienna. In our relations and claims established by it, nor was it at all interfered with by what was now taking place on the Continent. (Hear, hear.) The Russian Government had been called by the Government of Austria to assist them in suppressing the insurrection in Hungary. (Hear, hear.) That was the explanation which had passed between our Government and the Government of Austria. Russia did not intend in any other way to interfere with the affairs of Europe, nor would their assistance to Austria disturb the Treaty of Vienna. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Hume observed that it was alleged that a certain agreement had been entered into between Prussia and Austria, by which certain portions of Europe would be conceded to Russia, which arrangement would greatly interfere with the Treaty of Vienna.

Lord J. RUSSELL was not aware that any such agreement had been made, or was even contemplated.

Mr. OSBORNE: Will the noble Lord state the grounds for calling this an intervention in Hungary?

Lord J. RUSSELL: That is hardly a question that I can be called upon to answer.

Mr. OSBORNE: Then I beg to give the noble Lord notice, that I will take an early opportunity of bringing the subject under his consideration.

The subject then dropped.

STATE OF THE NATION—ADJOURNED DEBATE.

The adjourned debate on the motion of Mr. DISRAELI was resumed, and in the course of the discussion,

Sir R. PEEL opposed the motion. He could not consent to it having, as it professed for one object, the displacement of Ministers, and it putting an end to the commercial policy of the country in order to substitute for it a new policy, which would be disastrous. He hoped it would be understood, however, that his approval only extended to the commercial policy of the present Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Disraeli) had borne testimony to the prosperity of the country in 1846, when Ministers came into office; Ireland was then in a state of comparative tranquility, and there was a surplus of three or four millions sterling in the Exchequer, and that state of prosperity the hon. gentleman had contended had been reversed in consequence of the present Ministers introducing a new principle of policy, which he said had brought about a deplorable state of things. He (Sir R. Peel) distinctly stated that the present Ministry had introduced no new principle of commercial policy; they had merely developed and carried out to a fuller extent that very policy which had led to that state of prosperity which the hon. gentleman had described as existing in 1846. The deplorable results to which the hon. gentleman had adverted to were to be traced to far different causes, and for his own part he should meet the motion of the hon. gentleman by a direct negative.

The Marquis of GRANBY and Lord J. RUSSELL followed, and Mr. DISRAELI having replied, the House divided.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

Towards the close of the sitting of the Assembly on Wednesday evening, some astonishment was created among the members, by M. Grandin declaring that another "movement" was in preparation. The statement, however, was so vaguely given by the hon. member, and appeared to have no foundation in fact, that it soon ceased to produce any impression. M. Hertier wished to put an interpellation to the Ministers upon the subject, when it was decided that it should be deferred until the following day (Thursday). At the sitting of Thursday, however, M. Hertier withdrew his promised notice, as he had been assured by the Ministers that there was not the slightest ground for the assertion made by M. Grandin.

M. Garnier Pagès has publicly announced his resolution of retiring from public life, and, therefore, refused to allow his name to be proposed for any of the representative seats now vacant.

The army of the Alps is dissolved.

ROME.

Official accounts which have reached the French Government state, that in consequence of the arrangements entered into between General Oudinot and the Roman Triumvirate, the gates of San Paolo Portese and San Pancrazia had been thrown open to the French troops, who were adopting measures for the immediate occupation of Rome.

Another account adds, that the French army entered Rome on the 2nd, and that they received with acclamations the Duchess of Orleans, accompanied by the Count de Paris and the Duc de Chartres, visited her Majesty on Saturday afternoon, at Buckingham Palace.

On Sunday morning the Queen and the Prince walked in the garden of the Palace, and the Royal children took their usual exercise.

The Duchess of Kent paid a visit to her Majesty and the Prince Consort on Monday, before the departure of the Court for the Isle of Wight.

DEPARTURE OF THE COURT FOR THE ISLE OF WIGHT.

The Queen and Prince Albert left Buckingham Palace at ten minutes past two o'clock, on Monday afternoon, for her Majesty's marine residence, Osborne, Isle of Wight.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

The Queen and Prince, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, and younger members of the Royal Family, arrived at Gosport at about twenty minutes before five P.M., on Monday, and crossed to Cowes, in the Fairy yacht, under the command of Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. The august party reached Osborne about a quarter before six o'clock. Her Majesty was attended by the Countess of Mount Edgcumbe, Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Miss Lennox, Maid of Honour in Waiting; the Dowager Lady Lyttelton, Mrs Hildyard; Lord Alfred Paget; Lieut. Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting; Major-General Bowles, and Mr. Birch.

On Tuesday the Queen and Prince took their usual early walk in the grounds at Osborne. His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales and the younger members of the Royal Family walked and rode in the park. There was no addition to the Royal dinner party on Monday.

THE PROROGATION.—We have authority to state that Parliament will be prorogued by her Majesty on the 2nd of August, should no alteration be determined upon in the meantime.

Sir Robert and Lady Peel entertained his Excellency the Austrian Minister and the Countess Colloredo, the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Londonderry and Lady Adelaide Vane, the Marquis of Bath, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Earl of Aberdeen, the Earl of Lincoln, the Earl and Countess of Jersey, and Lady Clementina Villiers, the Earl Grosvenor, the Earl and Countess of Verulam, Lord Howden, Mr. F. Peel, Captain W. Peel, R.N., and a distinguished circle, at dinner on Thursday evening, at the family mansion in Whitehall Gardens.

The Duchess (Dowager) of Bedford gave her first morning party for the season on Thursday last, at Bedford Lodge, Campden Hill, Kensington. The élite was of the most brilliant character, the visitors numbering upwards of six hundred members of the fashionable world—a large proportion being the juvenile members of the aristocracy. The lodge is situate on an eminence, and commands some most picturesque views. The grounds, which were thrown open to the company, are very extensive, and are remarkable for the floricultural taste which they exhibit. The Duchess left nothing undone to add to the amusements of her juvenile friends. The Hungarian singers were in attendance. Punch was stationed in the middle of the lawn, and afforded no inconsiderable amusement to the children. Her Grace was honoured by the presence of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grace Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz.

Viscount Ponsonby has left London for Vienna, to resume his diplomatic duties, after a congé of two months.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTION.

Monday being the day fixed by the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex for the nomination of a candidate to serve for the City, in the place of Mr. Baron Rothschild, who had accepted the Chiltern Hundreds, the citizens began to flock towards Guildhall from an early hour—the interest the election being considerably increased by the fact, which was not announced till Saturday, that Lord John Manners had been chosen by the Protectionist party to oppose the re-election of Baron Rothschild. By half-past eleven o'clock, the Guildhall was filled by a dense crowd.

Precisely at twelve o'clock the Sheriffs entered the Hall, and were followed by the candidates and their friends.

Mr. Raikes Currie proposed Baron Rothschild as a fit and proper person to represent the City in the House of Commons.

Mr. John Dillon, of the firm of Morison and Co., seconded the nomination of Baron Rothschild.

Mr. Thomas Baring, M.P., proposed Lord J. Manners as the Conservative candidate for the suffrages of the citizens.

Sir Peter Laurie having seconded the motion, each of the candidates, amidst the cheers of their respective partizans, addressed the electors; a show of hands was taken, and declared to be in favour of Baron Rothschild. A poll was then demanded on behalf of Lord J. Manners, and was fixed for the next day.

The day's proceedings terminated with the usual vote of thanks to the Sheriffs.

On Tuesday morning, the several polling-booths, of which there were nineteen distributed in convenient localities, established, and the doors closed in the Guildhall, where the liverymen alone enjoyed the privilege of recording their votes, were opened at eight o'clock, pursuant to the announcement made on the previous day. Baron Rothschild went ahead of his opponent in the first hour, and throughout the day maintained the advantage to the close. At four o'clock the numbers polled were declared to be Baron Rothschild, 6619; Lord John Manners, 3104: Majority, 3515.

Baron Rothschild and Lord J. Manners went round the booths several times during the day, and availed themselves of these opportunities of tendering their thanks personally to their supporters.

A protest by Lord John Manners's friends was published during the day. It cautioned the electors against giving their votes to Baron Rothschild, as they would be thereby throwing them away, inasmuch as he was ineligible, because, as alleged, he had been guilty, by himself or his agents, the wilful offence of bribery at treating and other corrupt practices, at the election of the said city held on the 29th day of July, in the year 1847; and because he did not profess "the true faith of a Christian;" and because he was, at the present time, a Government contractor.

An opinion of M. D. Hill, Q.C., was also published by the friends of Baron Rothschild, stating that his election to be a member of Parliament for the city of London would be a valid election, notwithstanding his religious faith and opinions; that such election was in no way affected by what had taken place in his absence, but that his election would be void, in case it should be shown, or should think fit to take such oaths as would entitle him to sit and vote, did not touch the question of his right to be a member; and that any notice to the electors that their votes would be thrown away in the event of their voting for the Baron Rothschild would be nugatory, and ought not to be regarded.

OFFICIAL DECLARATION OF THE POLL.

On Wednesday, at one o'clock, the Sheriffs appeared on the hustings at Guildhall, for the purpose of making their official declaration of the poll, which differs slightly from that given above. There was a very numerous attendance of the friends of both parties, and several ladies, in the gallery. The hall was also densely crowded.

The Sheriff declared the numbers polled to be as follows:—

Rothschild	..	..	.. 6017
Manners	..	..	.. 2814
Majority	..	..	.. 3203

Sheriff Finnis then said that the choice of the electors had fallen on Baron Lionel Nathan Rothschild, who had been duly elected to represent them in Parliament. (Loud cheers.)

The proceedings terminated by the delivery, amidst much uproar and cheering, of the speeches usual on such occasions by the successful and unsuccessful candidates and their supporters.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

COLONIAL BANK.—The half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of the Colonial Bank was held on Tuesday, at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street. The report of the directors showed the total liabilities of the bank to the public, viz. Circulation, £137,232 17s. 4d.; deposits and other liabilities, £477,626 18s. 11d.; paid-up capital, £500,000; fund to meet bad debts, £34,634 18s. 9d.; profit, £18,223 1s. 6d.: total, £1,155,717 16s. 6d. On the credit side the totals follow the items:—Specie, £239,146 16s. 6d.; due to the bank in the colonies, on bills discounted and purchased, including those past due, £526 691 19s. 3d; due to the bank in the colonies, on cash credits and current accounts, £117,349 13s. 4d.; due to the bank in London, on bills remitted, cash at bankers, &c., £196,681 18s.; bank premises and furniture in London and the colonies, £15,827, 19s. 6d.: total, £1,155,717 16s 6d. The report further stated, that although there had been a diminution of profits for the half-year, a diminution which was expected, that reduction was more than compensated by a diminution of risk. The business was nevertheless going on steadily and satisfactorily. They were nearly in the same position as at the last meeting, and therefore the directors recommended the same dividend; viz. of £2 per cent. per annum—£1 per cent. for the half-year. The report was adopted, an amendment, to the effect that no dividend be declared, having met with but three supporters. A new director, in the room of Mr. Barkly, M.P., resigned, was elected in the person of Sir W. M. Townsend Farquhar, Bart.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.—The seventy-fifth annual report of this eminently useful institution has been printed, and contains some interesting particulars. During the past year the committee had submitted to them 162 cases, comprising 155 persons, out of which 144 were successfully treated and recovered, and 11 were beyond recovery. Of the ordinary gold medals, and 16 honorary silver medallions were voted for cases of rescue attended by extraordinary courage and risk of life, and 22 honorary bronze medals have been awarded. The thanks of the society were likewise voted to [illegible] for their [illegible] The total number of persons who have been the Institute throughout the year was estimated at 91,720, according to the daily returns made by the supernumerary [illegible] which is decrease below the usual average of 100,000. Twenty persons were rescued from drowning by the society's boatmen, and 14 were likewise prevented or rescued from drowning by the watchfulness of the boatmen. 34 have also been saved by the exertions of the "firemen." The total number of lives saved and restored in the country alone since the foundation, in 1774, has been upwards of 25,000. Four new stations have been added, making a total of 29 stations where the society's drags are kept ready for use in case of accident. The superintendent has been engaged in taking soundings of the various depths of the water in the Serpentine, and the consequent water of St. James's and Regent's Parks, with a view to the better security of bathers and skaters. The income of the society amounted to £1830 15s., and a trifling balance remained after defraying the expenses. The gold medallion was awarded to Captain Millman, 5th Regiment, for a noble act of daring at Old Malloring, Hamptire, by which the lives of six persons in the same regiment were providentially preserved.

THE TITHE REDEMPTION TRUST.—On Wednesday afternoon, a meeting of the gentlemen composing this trust was held at their chambers, Lancaster-place. Lord John Manners presided, and was supported by Mr. Haghigh, M.P., the Rev. W. J. Irons, B.D., the Rev. W. W. Malet, Charles Dingwall, Esq., G. H. Drew, Esq., and other gent.emen. The objects of the association are:—1. To give to owners of alienated tithes an opportunity of restoring them to the spiritual purposes for which they were originally ordained, and to assist them in so doing. 2. To apply any tithes thus restored towards relieving the spiritual destitution of the parish or chapelry where they arise, before the due maintenance of such parish church or chapel, or by the endowment of new districts therein, provided that no such augmentation shall be made of any benefice unless it be met with a suitable benefaction on the part of the patron. 3. To apply to Parliament to facilitate the means of accomplishing those objects: first, by rendering the mode of the reconveyance of tithes less expensive; second, by enabling persons having limited interests to impropriate tithes, to recover them upon adequate compensation being given; and, thirdly, by enabling owners of impropriate tithes to give them by will for the endowment of the church in the place whence they arise. It appeared, from a statement laid before the meeting, that applications had been made to the trust for assistance, from Cuckfield, St. Andrew's, Droitwich, Dewsbury, Shenfield, Cark, Studley, Llangollen, Criccawell, St. Peter's (Derby), Little Malvern, Aspatria, Hillingdon, Ecclesfield, Tarrington, St. Botolph's, Abbotsham, Bolton, Allington, Great Canfield, Rackwell, Rothwell cum Orton, Hoxa (Kingston), Ash, and Wingham [illegible] tings; and, in many cases, both, producing an income exceeding £1,000,000 sterling, have been alienated from 4663, or nearly half of the 10,718 benefices in England and Wales. Several letters from various parts of the country, bearing upon the objects of the trust, were received and read, and a vote of thanks to Lord John Manners, for his courtesy in presiding, closed the proceedings.

LONDON DOCKS.—On Tuesday, at the half-yearly general meeting of proprietors, held at the Dock House, Princes-street, for the purpose of considering of a dividend, and electing twenty-four directors for the ensuing, the secretary read the report of the directors for the six months ending the 31st of May last, which showed that the number of loaded ships which entered during that period was 704, of 195,309 tons: and at the corresponding date last year, 554, of 154,693 tons, being an increase of 4910 tons. The earnings of the six months were £230,346 2s. 4d., against £197,701 2s. 3d. to the same time last year; and the expenditure was £130 897 6s., against £107,518 11s. 7d. to May, 1848. This expenditure included the income-tax. The balance to the credit of profit and loss, on the 31st of May last, was £240,875 16s. 10d.; out of which the directors recommended the payment of a dividend of £2 10s. for the half-year, which would absorb £90,957 1s. 4d., leaving a balance of £149,918 4s. 6d. still in favour of the company: and it was recommended by the directors that, of that balance, £10,000 should be appropriated to the credit of the amount outstanding under the head of new works. Of the balance to the credit of profit and loss, £106,6.8 14s. 2d. consists of outstanding charges due to the company on goods in the warehouses, the quantity of which was, on the 31st May, 1849, 107,388 tons, 31st May, 1848, 111,524 tons. Owing to the increasing quantity of wool imported into London, the directors had found it necessary to enlarge their warehouses, and they could now show for public sale more than 8000 bales. The cost of this improvement was £33,000.—The report was agreed to, and the dividend ordered to be paid on the 10th inst. The directors were elected by ballot, as usual.

PARLIAMENTARY AND FINANCIAL REFORM.—On Wednesday evening a public meeting of the Metropolitan Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association, for the borough of Marylebone, was held at the Prince's Theatre, Oxford-street, when a very numerous company, comprising both sexes, attended. On the platform were Sir Joshua Walmsley, M.P. (the president of the association), who occupied the chair; Mr. Hume, M.P.; Mr. John Williams, M.P.; Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P.; Mr. B. M. Wilkes, M.P.; Mr. Fergus O'Connor, M.P.; Mr. S. Grant Shee, W. Williams, Esq., J. H. Latrimore, Esq., &c. Several speeches in support of the object of the meeting were delivered, and the following resolution (the only one proposed) was unanimously agreed to:—"That the absence of a really representative House of Commons, the preponderance of class legislation, the unequal pressure of taxation, the general extravagance of the public expenditure, and the consequences of these evils engendering discontents, and threatening disorders fatal to the political and to the social prosperity of this empire, render the combination of the middle and working classes, for the attainment of the reform advocated by the Metropolitan Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association, a matter of momentous importance to the State. That, as one of the most powerful means for the peaceful accomplishment of the great objects now pending to be effected, the system of the Freehold Land Societies, established for the purpose of facilitating the acquisition of forty-shilling freeholds, is calculated to work great results upon the representation of the country; and that the meeting strongly recommend every reformer, by whatever his means may be, to avail himself of the great advantages of that system."

THE PRINTERS' (COMPOSITORS AND PRESSMEN) PENSION SOCIETY.—On Wednesday a meeting of the supporters and committee of this institution, established in 1827, having for its object the relief of aged and infirm printers and their widows, by granting yearly pensions for their support, was held at the London Tavern. The report for the past year stated that although, from the general causes which had affected all charitable institutions, the amount of the annual subscriptions had fallen to £470, being £50 less than last year, the benefits of the society have not been curtailed, on the contrary, an increase of £5 . . . annuitants had been during the year paid to pensioners, of whom there are now on the funds the males receiving £14, and widows £9, each per annum. The sum received at the last anniversary dinner, presided over by the Marquis of Northampton, was £330 10s. The balance-sheet figured the receipts by donations, legacies, subscriptions, &c., to be £1213 16s 11d, whilst the expenditure left a balance of £56 15s. 4d. The funded property invested with the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt was £8209 5s. 7d., producing an income of £200 a year. The anniversary dinner for the present year will take place on the 25th inst., presided over by J. A. Roebuck, Esq., M.P.

MILLINERS AND DRESSMAKERS' PROVIDENT AND BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION.—The first annual meeting of the directors and supporters of this institution was held on Saturday (Lord Ashley, M.P., in the chair), at Willis' Rooms, King street, St. James's. The meeting was numerously attended by the employers and females employed in the above trades. The report of the directors expressed satisfaction at the complete organisation of the institution, and at the auspicious commencement of its operations. There were in all eighty-one members, of whom twenty-four had joined within the last few months. There were thirty-five applications under consideration of the committee. The subscriptions already incurred amounted to £136 5s. 3d., and the total receipts to £2244 13s. 4d., £2000 of which was laid out in the purchase of stock in the Three per Cents. It would be necessary to raise the funds of the institution to £5000 before its operations could be safely and fully brought into play. Among the resolutions passed were votes of thanks to the ladies and gentlemen of the Society for the Aid and Benefit of Milliners and Dressmakers, for their co-operation in the formation of the present institution, and for their contribution of 100 guineas to its funds; and to an anonymous female donor of a piece of lace, worth, it was stated, some £200 or £300.

STATIONERS' AND PAPER MANUFACTURERS' PROVIDENT SOCIETY.—The 10th anniversary dinner of this society took place at the London Tavern on Tuesday evening. Wm. Joynson, Esq., vice-president, in the chair. The first object of this valuable institution was to raise the sum of £10,000, and then to grant annuities to its aged and decayed members, and their widows and orphans. Previous to this meeting, the sum of £1300 was needed to complete this amount, but it was hoped that by an effort worthy of the trade more than sufficient was contributed, so that the benefits of the society are now available to those that require them.

INFANT PAUPER ASYLUM.—On Wednesday, at a public meeting of the inhabitants of St. James's, Westminster, held at Willis's Rooms, King-street, the Rector, the Rev. T. Jackson, in the chair, a sum not exceeding £6000, to be levied by a rate, was placed at the disposal of the guardians of the poor, to erect an infant orphan asylum, and obviate the necessity of farming out the pauper children chargeable to the parish.

THE DEFALCATIONS OF SIR THOMAS TURTON, BART.—On Tuesday a meeting of the sufferers, from the appropriation to his own purposes of money entrusted to the charity of the above-named gentleman, when Registrar of Registrar-General to the Supreme Court of Judicature at Calcutta, was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, Mr Alexander in the chair, "for the purpose of considering the best course to be adopted in the way of obtain compensation." The chairman stated that two or three thousand persons had been sufferers from the transaction, and not only this, but a great number of the widows and orphans of officers slain in battle had been defrauded. This was an additional motive for increased exertion. (Hear.) The Government had at present no funds out of which to afford compensation, and the East India Company disclaimed the responsibility. Their only resource was, then, the passing of a special Act of Parliament; but in order to prosecute operations with the proper degree of vigour, several hundred pounds should be contributed. The way in which he should propose to raise that sum was by a certain percentage on the money claimed, and to this proposition he feared no opposition would be offered. The Hon. Stuart Wortley, M.P., would, probably, introduce their bill next session, and, as it was a money one, it was not likely to meet with any opposition, though, perhaps, from the East India Company, and that might be overcome. Ultimately, it was resolved that a percentage of £1 on the amount of each claim should be demanded from the sufferers, by means of which it was expected it would produce a special bill to the notice of the House at the commencement of next session. It would appear that the defalcation amounts to between £20,000 and £100,000.

THE CITY OF LONDON UNION.—On Tuesday, at a numerously attended meeting of the Board of Guardians, held in the Board-room of the Union, in Cannon-street, it was decided to issue general instructions to the members of the Board of Guardians to procure, regardless of expense, the services of the most talented medical man, so that the relief to the poor may be waiting during the progress of the epidemic, wherever the parties may be attacked with cholera.

THE CHOLERA.—The cholera has again broken out on board the convict ship at Woolwich, one death having occurred on Monday, and several other cases having also presented themselves.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS, &c.—The 1217 deaths registered in the week ending June 30 exhibit an excess of 304 above the weekly average of the quarter, which ends on June 30; but this unusual result is due only in part to an increased rate of mortality. The registration of a considerable portion of those deaths in the week ending June 23 was delayed, though they occurred at an earlier period, is not completed till the end of the quarter; a fact by which is explained the accumulation of deaths observed in the present return, from fractures, hanging, drowning, poison, burns, and some vaguely defined causes, "not" from the visitation of God." The number now returned by coroners, as caused by violence, is upwards of 80, though the weekly average is only 29; those enumerated in the table as "sudden deaths" are 30, though the average does not exceed 11; an excess, for the same reason, is found under "apoplexy." the cases returned being 42, while the average is 24. But the mortality from diseases of the chief organs of circulation, and from those of the organs of circulation, differs little from the average; that from diseases of the respiratory organs falls considerably under it. In the zymotic or epidemic class the increase is remarkable here, the deaths . . . which in the two previous weeks . . . 277 were last week 349, whi . . . the average is 277. Fewer affected by the disease of the days. He had lain on the floor of a miserable hovel six feet square, and within a few feet of a cesspool which accumulated and overflowed in the court. Two cases are ascribed to intemperance, two to neglect of a child during the space of 18 years died in St. Pancras of "phthisis," while left in a destitute condition by his father, who had deserted him. A woman died in the City-road sub-district at the advanced age of 100 years. The births during the week numbered 1551.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer during the week was 29.870 in. The mean temperature of the week was . . . rather higher than the average of seven years, though under it during . . . three days. It was about 8° higher than the average on Tuesday and Wednesday, and on the former day the highest in the shade was 75° 6, in the sun 109° 7. The mean temperature of the week was 60° 2.

GRAND FETE TO HER MAJESTY AT GLOUCESTER HOUSE.

THE RECEPTION OF THE QUEEN BY THE DUCHESS OF GLOUCESTER.

On Friday evening, the 29th ult., her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester gave a grand fête to the Queen, at Gloucester House, Piccadilly.

A distinguished circle were invited to meet her Majesty, at nine o'clock, and had nearly all arrived previous to the Queen, Prince Albert, and the Royal suite.

At twenty minutes before ten o'clock her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert arrived, attended by the Countess of Mount Edgcumbe, Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Eleanor Stanley and the Hon. Elizabeth Frederica Lennox, Maids of Honour in Waiting; Lord Waterpark, Lord in Waiting; Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Robert Boyle, Groom in Waiting; Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps, Equerry in Waiting; and Colonel Bouverie, Equerry in Waiting to his Royal Highness.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge received the Queen on alighting from her carriage, the Master of the Horse and the Lord Chamberlain also attending at the entrance. Her Majesty took the arm of her Royal uncle; and in the entrance-hall was received by Lady Georgina Bathurst, Lady in Waiting to the Duchess of Gloucester, and by Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Augustus Liddell, Comptroller of the Household of her Royal Highness, who conducted the Queen and the Prince to the State Drawingroom, at the entrance of which her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester received her Majesty.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz, and the Princess Mary were attended by Lady Augusta Cadogan, Lady in Waiting, and Mr. Edmond Mildmay, Equerry in Waiting, and were also conducted to the State Drawingroom.

The Duke of Wellington arrived early. Lord and Lady John Russell, and Sir Robert and Miss Peel, were also among the visitors.

The State Drawingroom, in which the reception took place, was covered with a magnificent carpet worked in needlework, and presented to the Duchess of Gloucester by eighty-four ladies, every lady having worked a compartment. The saloons were brilliantly lighted with handsome chandeliers and branches, and were tastefully decorated with beautiful shrubs and plants in flower.

Soon after the Queen's arrival, the Duchess of Gloucester, accompanied by her Majesty and Prince Albert, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Princess Mary, descended the grand staircase, and entered the Ball-room.

Strauss' quadrille band was in attendance, in a temporary tent erected over the courtyard at the end of the apartment: the lower part of the tent had a screen formed of flowering plants. The whole was tastefully designed by Mr. Benjamin Edgington. The band, on the arrival of her Majesty, played "God save the Queen;" and, on the entrance of the august party, repeated the national anthem.

A quadrille was formed, and the ball was opened shortly before ten o'clock, her Majesty honouring the Marquis of Granby with her hand; the opposite couple being his Royal Highness the Prince Albert and her Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz.

Other quadrilles and waltzes followed.

Refreshments were served in an ante-room during the evening. At twelve o'clock supper was served in the most recherché style of elegance and splendour in the banquet-room.

Among the company present were the Belgian Minister and Madame Van de Weyer, the Danish Minister and Countess de Reventlow and Mademoiselle de Reventlow, the Austrian Minister and Countess Colloredo, the Bavarian Minister and Baroness de Cetto, the Russian Minister and Baroness de Brunnow and Mademoiselle Olga de Lechner, the Netherlands Minister and Mademoiselle Schimmelpenninck, the Hanoverian Minister, the Prussian Minister and Madame Bunsen, and Mademoiselle Bunsen, Prince Metternich, Prince Schomburgh, Baron Koller, Baron Hardenburgh, and a long list of the English nobility and other personages of distinction.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

This event has now ceased to be a subject for speculation; it has been officially announced to his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and the Lord Mayor of Dublin, in the subjoined letters:—

"Dublin Castle, June 30, 1849.

"My Lord,—I have the honour to transmit herewith, by command of the Lord-Lieutenant, the enclosed copy of a letter received from Secretary Sir George Grey, communicating her Majesty's intention to visit Ireland. His Excellency has much pleasure in making this announcement, which he feels assured will be a source of gratification to you and your fellow-citizens.

"I have the honour to be, my Lord, your obedient servant,

"T. N. REDINGTON.

"Whitehall, June 27, 1849.

"My Lord,—I have the satisfaction to inform your Excellency that I have received the Queen's commands to acquaint you that her Majesty hopes to be able, in the course of the present summer, to fulfil the intention, which you are aware she has long entertained, of visiting Ireland.

"The distress, unfortunately still prevalent in that country, precludes the Queen from visiting Dublin in state, as any large expenditure on mere ceremony would be ill timed, and inconvenient to her subjects. Yet her Majesty does not wish to let another year pass without visiting a part of her dominions with which she has for so long a time been anxious to become acquainted.

"Her Majesty, therefore, proposes to embark in the Royal yacht, and to visit in the first instance, the Cove of Cork, and from thence to proceed along the Irish coast to Dublin. After remaining there for a few days, during which time her Majesty will be the guest of your Excellency, she will proceed along the Irish coast northward to visit Belfast, and from thence cross to Scotland. Although the precise time of her Majesty's visit cannot yet be fixed, it will probably take place as early in August as the termination of the session of Parliament will permit; and I feel assured that this announcement of her intention will be received with great satisfaction by her Majesty's loyal and faithful subjects in Ireland.

"I am with great regard and truth, my Lord,

"Your Excellency's obedient servant,

"His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, K.G." "GREY."

FETE AT GLOUCESTER HOUSE.

SKETCHES IN HUNGARY.

HALT NEAR PRESBURG.

THE kingdom of Hungary, united under the same civil Government, as determined after the peace of 1815, comprehends Hungary (Proper), Slavonia, and Croatia; to the last of which the circle of Carlstadt (previously part of Illyria) and the Hungarian littorale, or sea-coast, were annexed in 1822. The military frontier, though geographically a part of Hungary, is under a peculiar and entirely distinct form of Government.

The kingdom, within the above limits, is bounded on the north by Moravia Silesia, and Gallicia; on the east by Transylvania; on the south by the military frontier (which separates it from Turkey), and by the Gulf of Quarnero; and on the west by Illyria, Styria, Lower Austria, and Moravia.

Hungary lies almost entirely within the basin of the Danube, and is on all sides separated from its neighbours by natural boundaries. From Presburg to Skalitz it is bounded by the river March; and from Skalitz, by the Carpathian Mountains, which run in a north-east direction to Mount Trojatska, thence eastward, near the frontier of Gallicia, and afterwards south-east to the vicinity of the Buckowina. From the border of Transylvania the frontier runs, with many great bends, first to the west, and then to the south, to Orsowa and Mount Allion on the Danube. On the south, from Orsowa to Essek, the Danube separates the kingdom from Servia and Slavonia; and from Spek to the Styrian frontier the Drave separates it from Slavonia and Croatia. On the west, various small rivers divide Hungary from Styria and Austria.

There is, perhaps, no country of the same extent which contains such a variety of nations as Hungary. The Magyars, or proper Hungarians, are originally an Asiatic people: there are also Wallachians, Armenians, Germans, Italians, Jews Servians, and a medley of tribes distinguished by names not easily accommodated to English orthography or English pronunciation; Russniaks, Slovacs, Croats, Wendians, improperly called Vandals—these four and the Servians being of Sclavonian origin.

The face of the country is extremely varied. The northern and western parts of the kingdom are very mountainous. The Carpathians on the north, and the Alps on the frontier south of the Danube, surround almost the whole kingdom, like a girdle, and send out numerous branches, which cover nearly thirty-three counties. The se heights enclose beautiful valleys, drained by large and small rivers, verdant meadows, rich corn-fields, fruitful gardens, vineyards many leagues in extent, and vast forests. While one part of the kingdom is covered with mountains, another spreads out into interminable plains—some resembling the Pampas of South America, and others being oceans of sand like the Sahara; whilst in the mountains are innumerable caverns, many of them of great beauty.

To this brief outline of the country we append the descriptive details of the accompanying characteristic illustrations of the country and its people, now unhappily plunged into fierce contention with its powerful neighbour, Austria.

The accompanying Sketches, by a German artist, present a view of one of the principal towns of the kingdom, and three picturesque scenes of the manners and customs of the people.

PRESBURG lies near the seat of the war now raging, and is occupied almost exclusively by Germans and Jews, and is on the frontiers of Hungary, 46 miles from Vienna, and 75 from Pesth. The adjoining country is healthy, and the very reverse of the Hungarian countries, properly speaking, and the country between the Danube and the Theiss, and beyond this mighty river, where frequent swamps and morasses intersect the arable land. Here, too, lies Debreczin, a large, unpaved village; and Kerakemet, proverbial for its mud, which has proved fatal to so many Austrian men and horses. In the castle, in the hill, above the city of Pressburg, the States formerly assembled; and in the Cathedral of St. Martin the Kings of Hungary were crowned. The town is very ancient, and pleasantly situated on the Danube. The fortifications are of secondary order. The Hungarian bars, therefore, concentrated their army on the line of the Waag, near the impregnable fortress of Komorn and the walls of Raab. Of Komorn, our readers will recollect, an original view has appeared in our Journal (see No 9 of 1849)

The HUNGARIAN WAGGON shows a peculiar conveyance of the country, heavily laden with wines: it moves but slowly on its broad wheels along the sandy roads near the Platten Lake, where chaussées and artificial roads are unknown.

In the sketch of Pressburg is introduced a group of peasantry; and the two other Illustrations are of a similar character.

The Hungarian peasants wear, summer and winter, their sheepskins, dressed with the wool on, except that in the summer the wool is turned outside; but every one strives to assume something of the costume, as regards hats, jackets, boots, or hussar-jackets. The peasant on the right, in our Sketch, is a shepherd reposing on his stick; he is always accompanied by powerful dogs, the dreaded enemies of the wolves; and opposite to him is a peasant with his family. These are fine representations of the well-built, hardy race of Hungarians. The women generally have handsome faces, with an air of melancholy about them. The people, children of a wild and romantic country, have much of the fiery temper of the south, and are fierce, proud, and eager to resent an insult. They have always been reputed the best soldiers of the Austrian army, which now, by their secession, has been almost dissolved.

In the present war, the existence of the nation on the one side, and that of the dynasty of Hapsburg in Hungary on the other, are at stake. The Kings of Hungary were always elected; though, since the year 1527, the Austrians have kept the crown in their family, and in 1687 the States declared it hereditary on the Hapsburg heirs male, and at Pressburg, in 1724, likewise on the heirs female. The Hungarian States, since that time, in order to maintain the right of election, have every time elected the Royal Archduke of Austria King of Hungary, some years before he succeeded to the crown of the kingdom, as heir of his predecessor. The house of Hapsburg was invested with the crown of Hungary until the last session of the Diet, assembled at Pressburg, in December, after the horrible battles on the fields between the Theiss and the Danube, after the victories at Kapolna, Pesth, Gyöngyös, Waitzen, and at Gran, after the repulse of the Austrians from Pesth to Presburg, after the loss of 40,000 men, killed, captives, and deserters, Kossuth proposed to the Assembly the deposition, to use his own words, "of the perjured race of Hapsburg, having broken all laws and rights of the constitution, and attempted the destruction of the country by war of extermination against the Hungarian nation;" a proposition to which both Houses of the Hungarian Parliament unanimously assented. The language of Kossuth is of an exaggerated character, which has told with the people of Hungary; for it has proved no less detrimental to the Austrians than the sabres of the Hungarian hussars. The defeat of the Hungarians cannot be achieved without exterminating a whole people of warriors.

To these few explanations, pertinent to the present war, may not inappropriately be added the following emphatic passage from Blackwood's Magazine for May last, which explains the actual position of the conflicting countries:—

"The nature of the relations by which Hungary is connected with Austria—the origin and progress of their present quarrel, and the objects for which the Hungarians are contending—appear to have been very generally misunderstood, not in this country only, but in a great part of Europe. Men whom we might expect to find better informed, seem to imagine that Hungary is an Austrian province in rebellion against the Emperor, and that the origin and tendency of the movement was republican. The reverse of all this is true. Hungary is not, and never was, a province of Austria; but has been, and is, both de jure and de facto, an independent kingdom. The Emperor of Austria is also King of Hungary; but, as Emperor of Austria, has neither sovereign right nor jurisdiction in Hungary. The Hungarians assert, and apparently with truth, that they took up arms to repel unprovoked aggression, and to defend their constitutional rights, which are established; that their objects are therefore purely conservative, and their principles monarchical; and that it is false and calumnious to accuse them of having contemplated or desired to found a republic a form of government foreign to their sentiments, and incompatible with their social condition."

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

REVIEW OF THE ROYAL ARTILLERY.—The Royal Artillery were reviewed on Tuesday, by Field-Marshal the Marquis of Anglesea, Master-General of the Ordnance. The whole of the corps, with the exception of those on duty, were marched to Woolwich Common, and by their arrival at nine o'clock in the morning. At eleven o'clock the Marquis of Anglesea alighted from an open carriage and four at the residence of Lieut.-Gen. Downman, and proceeded to the common, where he was received with the customary honours. The Marquis wore the uniform of a General of Artillery, and was accompanied in the inspection by Lord Hardinge, Lieut.-Gen. Sir Thomas Downman, Colonel Crutchenden, R.A.; Colonel Parke, C.B., Royal Marines; Brigadier Major Bingham, and a numerous staff; the corps was afterwards put through the usual evolutions of a field-day, which were performed with great rapidity and precision. After the review, the officers of the regiment entertained the noble Marquis to a sumptuous dejeûner in the regimental mess-room.

EXCURSION ON BOARD THE "HINDOSTAN."—Saturday last being the day appointed by the Government officers for the inspection and survey of the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company's splendid steamer Hindostan, the directors embraced the opportunity to exhibit her to their friends, and therefore invited a large company to Southampton, to join them on the occasion. The distinguished party were conducted, on quitting the pier, to the main deck, through double rows of servants of the ship, by the saloon stairs, to the spar deck, where wines, teas, strawberries, and cakes were placed for the refreshment of the travellers. All the company having at length met (as was soon given to slip the moorings, and, at one o'clock precisely, the noble and stately ship swung round, and started down the Southampton Waters towards Spithead, gathering fresh speed at every revolution of her stupendous wheels. During the trip, the party, numbering about 250 guests, partook of a sumptuous collation, which was succeeded by the usual round of toasts, speeches, &c. The Hindostan was the first of the large class of steamers employed by the company in the Indian seas, in establishing the complete line by which they now communicate with India, China, &c., in which service she has been employed nearly seven years. Since her return to England she has undergone a thorough refit, and is now about to resume her station on one of the company's principal lines of steam navigation. She is 2000 tons measurement, and 800 horse-power, and, as stated in evidence given before a late parliamentary committee, is capable of being converted into a first class steam-frigate on a short notice.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY'S FLOWER AND FRUIT EXHIBITION.—The last floricultural fête announced by this society for the year was held on Wednesday, and indeed a season of unprecedented prosperity. The collections of flowers were remarkable for their freshness of appearance; they were much the same in general character as at former exhibitions, the distinguishing feature, however, being the graceful overlying plants coming from the tropical climes, such as the allamanda, the balsamhina, and others grown over trellis-work of elegantly diversified shapes. The fruits were very fine. Among them may be noticed, as novelties in the exhibition, an interesting collection of tropical fruits from the Duchess of Northumberland's garden at Sion, the produce of which the gamboge, the clove, allspice, nutmeg, &c. have been cultivated with much success or to anything like perfection. The bands of the Royal Horse and the 1st and 2nd Life Guards attended the meeting, which was numerous and fashionable. Among the company present were his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, the Dukes of Norfolk and Beaufort, the Duchess of Beaufort, Prince and Princess Doria Pamphili, Prince Castelcicala, &c.

IRELAND.—A tourist just returned from an excursion through the western part of the county Cork, recommends travellers to visit Glengarriffe and its beautiful scenery. The best route would be from London to Cork, the city of Cork, Skibbereen, Bantry, Glengariffe, suspension-bridge at Kenmare, by the Upper Lakes into Killarney. 18s. to Bristol, £1 10s. per s. [illegible] Bantry, and 7s. from thence to Killarney—an all, £3 2s. from London to Killarney, which, with its many other advantages, does not limit the traveller to any [illegible] time.

HONOUR TO PHILOSOPHY.—The King of the Belgians has just presented to Mr. Robert Blakey his Majesty's Gold Medal supposed to those authors of distinction, in recognition of Mr. Blakey's "History of the Philosophy of Mind," and his other works on mental science. We believe this to be the first instance of the free bestowal of the testimonial to a British author, and eight only have been previously distributed. It is a fine specimen of the medallic art: the obverse bears the effigies of King Leopold, and the reverse, "Proclamé à Bruxelles le 21 Juillet, 1831," within a wreath of oak and laurel. The value of the Medal is about £2.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—The gifts presented to this society by his late Highness Ibrahim Pacha, a few months before his death, have been successfully transported from their winter quarters at Cairo to the menagerie in the Regent's-park. They arrived at Southampton, in the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Indus, with a very valuable collection, which was obtained for the society through the active interest taken in its success by her Majesty's Consul-General, the hon. C. A. Murray. The whole assemblage of animals forms the most extensive addition ever received at one time since the foundation of the society, and includes a very instructive series of the reptiles of Egypt, which will add considerably to the attractions of that branch of the collection, which has already excited so much attention among the visitors. The gifts of his Highness consist of one female giraffe (the male which was to have accompanied her having died on the Nile), two lencorvx antelopes, two addax antelopes, a pair of ostriches, and a pair of camels. The collection obtained by Mr. Murray includes another female giraffe, and examples of the lion, the cheetah or hunting leopard, the large baboon of Upper Egypt (C. hamadryas), the flamingo, ostrich, two species of pelican, &c. making, altogether, upwards of 100 specimens. To which are to be added the gifts of the Governor of Singapore, mentioned in our last impression, and a collection of the reptiles of Portugal, presented by J. J. Forrester, Esq., of Oporto. The number of visitors to the Gardens, on Monday last, amounted to 4700.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Hon. Mr. Clemson, United States Minister at Belgium, and his lady and family, have arrived in London from the United States, on their return to his Excellency's mission.

On Monday evening, whilst shunting the seven o'clock up-train, after the passengers had alighted at the Euston-square Station to make room for the eight o'clock up-train, a first-class carriage ran off the line against one of the columns supporting the shed. The girders of the roof immediately broke, and a portion of the roof fell upon one of the first-class carriages. No person was hurt, but the damage done to the roof was considerable.

For a considerable time past, labourers have been employed on the site of the late Olympic Theatre, clearing away such worthless ruins as were occasioned by the recent calamitous fire; and on Saturday last the first stone of the new edifice was laid by Miss Elizn Cavell, daughter of the proprietor, in presence of the proprietor, the architect, and a large circle of private friends, including numerous persons connected with literature, the fine arts, and the drama

A Cork weekly journal, the Province of Munster, has the following singular paragraph:—"Sir Richard Moore, Bart, the eldest son of the late Sir Emanuel Moore, has, we are informed, just been appointed one of our city Bridewell guard by the High Sheriff. This is indeed a strange position for the representative one of our oldest baronetcies to occupy. What makes it the more distressing is, that his poverty has not come of his own folly, but has been entailed on him by the indiscretion of others."

There are two of the principal shipping houses in the port of Hull who at this moment employ less than 600 hands out of employ. Some of them have been in this condition weeks, and others several months, picking up precarious work, averaging from one to two days a week. The total number of unemployed idle-bodied workmen in the town is about 2000.

On Monday evening a public meeting of the inhabitants of St. Pancras was held in the new vestry-rooms, King's-road, Camden Town, for the purpose of aiding the freehold land movement, for the obtaining freeholds and votes in the home counties, under the auspices of the St. Pancras Freehold Land Association. Suitable resolutions were as usual agreed to.

On the 24th ult., Samuel M. Gason, Esq., assistant sub-sheriff, proceeded to the lands of Strathavohan, near Tinrier (Tipperary), accompanied by a small police force, and, under a writ of habeas, evicted 12 husbands, 11 wives, 6 widows, 40 children, and 19 other inmates—total, 88. The habitations of these persons were out of repair, in point of rent, which they had no means whatever to pay, were all locked up by the sheriff.

M. Pfleger, the French representative who escaped to Brussels on the 13th ult., is described as a furious fanatic, who after the Revolution of February put himself at the head of an armed mob for the sake of sacking the houses of the Jews living in Alsace. He does not speak French.

An extensive engineering firm in Belfast (Messrs. M'Adam) are at present executing, for a house of large means in Rouen for Calcutta.

The Earl of Buckinghamshire, the Hon. Admiral Knox, and Archdeacon Maunsel, have given their tenantry at Rathcannan, Rathmore, and Ballingaddy, in the county Limerick, 25 per cent. reduction in the rental. They also expended £1000 during the last famine in giving employment to the able-bodied labourers on their estates.

The Shannon improvement works, which consist in deepening the bed of the river, and clearing away the remains of the ancient bridge which formerly connected the provinces of Leinster and Connaught, have now 1500 men employed on them

A large amount of gold, in dust and scales, lately arrived from California, in the steamer Crescent City, from Chagres to New Orleans—viz. one million of dollars!—600,000 dollars on consignment, and 400,000 dollars belonging to passengers who are miners. There were sixty vessels in the harbour of San Francisco when she sailed.

The authenticity of a letter published by a London morning paper, and which it is pretended was addressed by the President of the French Republic to General Narvaez, has been contradicted by the Paris papers from authority. The whole letter is a mere fabrication.

The Kilkenny and Waterford Railway works are about to be resumed.

The Bishop of Down has given £50 to the poor relief fund, west of Ire and

Mr. Ponsonby Parker, of Kilcooley Abbey, has, through his agent, Mr. Joseph Walsh, given a month's provision to all his distressed tenants on his estates in Ballycanny and Waterford. He has also very liberally given green crops seed to all his tenants, and sent dresses to his labourers.

The crops are looking splendid, and a most abundant harvest is expected throughout the United States.

By the barque Sidelia we have news dates from Adelaide, South Australia, to the 19th Feb, at which time the colony was in a high state of prosperity. Labour was in great demand and wages were high; the labourers employed in sowing the ranges of land on the north and north-east of the town.

M. Salamanca, the banker, availing himself of the recent amnesty, has, after more than a year's absence from Spain, returned to Madrid. He has visited several of the Ministers.

The health of the South Wales has not abated its fatal virulence; the deaths continue as numerous as ever they were.

The Legislature of New York forbids the use of law Latin. A writ "Ne exeat" is now an order of "No go."

Jamaica advices to the 9th of May mention the wreck of the British brigantine Dane, from Liverpool, bound to Vera Cruz, on the Camanas reef. Her cargo, consisting of dry goods, &c., was saved, and disposed of by auction, but the vessel became a total wreck.

The Tempo of Naples announces the death of Cardinal GIZZI, late minister of Pius IX., on the 3d ult. at Lenola, near Gaeta.

By a paper, which bears date "Wardhouse, June 25, 1849," it appears that a sum of £19,950 16s. 8d. is required to be [illegible] to defray the excess of the army expenditure beyond the grant for the year ended on the 31st March, 1849, as shown on the annual account of army receipt and expenditure for that year.

The extensive additions and improvements which have been going on for some months past at her Majesty's Highland residence, Balmoral Castle, are now nearly completed, in anticipation of the arrival of the Sovereign and the Court. A picturesque and tasteful new approach to the Castle, which was a great desideratum, is almost finished; and the shooting lodge at Loch Muick, visited by the Queen last year, is also undergoing necessary repair and enlargement, for the convenience of her Majesty when she may direct her excursions that way.

The Journal de Rouen states that the quantity of merchandize for exportation transported by the Havre railroad within the last few days exceeds that of any former period. The warehouses at Havre are, it states, literally crowded with packages, and all the vessels leaving for New York have full freights.

A short time since, a vessel named the Gian Matteo was carried into Marseilles by a number of Poles, whom the Austrian Government were sending to the United States The French authorities refused to allow these men to land, and the vessel then proceeded to Algiers. Here also the authorities refused to receive them, and at present the Gian Matteo remains in the port apart, as if in quarantine.

Pending the bill respecting the Palace Court, about to be introduced into Parliament by the Lord Chancellor, it is stated that the long-established practice of that court have forwarded a circular to the members of the House of Commons, advocating their claims to compensation in the event of the jurisdiction being abolished.

The Free Church which stood in Great Charles-street, Dublin, was totally destroyed, on the night of Friday week, owing to an explosion from the gas-pipes. A valuable library and magnificent organ were destroyed in the flames. Since the period of the Custom House scenes, some years since, there has not been so great a fire in Dublin

The Mountstuart Elphinstone, which had the cholera on board, has sailed for its destination from the Cove of Cork with the political convicts, Martin and O'Doherty; a fact which has caused some surprise, as it was supposed that all the convicts would be sent together

The Inspector-General of the Austrian post-office, Dr. John Herz, deputed by his chief to investigate the post-office system of Great Britain, has just taken his departure for Vienna. From the central position occupied by the Austrian Empire among the states of Europe, and also with reference to this country and to the United States, the commercial relations of which call for the perfection of the Austrian postal service is one of general interest and importance

The cholera is raging in the ranks of the Austrian army in Hungary. Several officers have died of it, among whom are General Grammont and Colonel Hallawaxis von den Bruders.

In Madrid the festival of St. John (the 24th of June) is generally observed at night. The industrial holiday passed off with more than usual revelry and not-e, the intense heat of the night inviting to all kinds of potations. No fewer than nineteen persons received knife wounds, in eight quarrels, during those few hours. Several persons were in more than one case sabre-armed civic guards, who are charged with public order, were the aggressors.

An avalanche from the summit of one of the Torridon mountains, in Ross-shire, occurred on the morning of Friday, the 15th ult. There had been heavy rain during the night: about four o'clock, the rock, which could not be less than a thousand tons weight, was detached, and came thundering down the rocky hill, driving everything before it.

At St. Petersburgh, a company, under the title "Mercurius," is being incorporated for the purpose of establishing steamers on the Wolga, Oka, and Kama rivers, and their respective tributaries, for the conveyance of goods and passengers. The capital proposed to be raised is 750,000 silver roubles, in shares of 250 roubles each.

The Contemporaneo, of Rome, of the 20th ult., states that a cannon-ball has struck the celebrated "Aurora" of Guido Reni, a fresco painting; that on the same day a 36-pounder broke a piece off the cornice of the Temple of Fortuna Virilis; and that considerable damage had been done by the French batteries to the churches of St. Mary of Trastevere, St. Andrea della Valle, and St. Charles of Catinari, which contained some fine frescoes of Domenichino.

OXFORD.

The following are the subjects of the Chancellor's Prizes for the ensuing year, viz

Latin Verse.—Herodotus apud Olympiam musas sexo recitans.

English Essay.—The ancients and moderns compared in regard to the administration of justice.

Latin Essay.—Quam ob rem tanto studii apud Græcos servata fuerint, tanti neglecta obtate, artis poeticæ primordia.

Sir Roger Newdigate's Prize for the best composition in English verse, not limited to fifty lines, by any undergraduate who shall not have exceeded four years from the time of his matriculation. Subject, "The Niger."

The exercises to which the prizes shall have been adjudged will be repeated (after a previous rehearsal) in the theatre, upon the Commemoration Day, immediately after the Creweian oration.

The Rev. R. Jowett, M.A., Fellow of Baliol, has been nominated a Public Examiner in Literis Humanioribus, by the Junior Proctor.

CAMBRIDGE.

At a congregation holden on Tuesday last, Henry Day, of Trinity Hall, recited his English poem, which gained the Camden medal. John Daniel Williams, of Trinity College, recited his Greek ode and epigrams, which obtained Sir W. Browne's medal. D'Arcy Wentworth Thompson, of Pembroke College, recited his Latin ode: and Francis Rawley, of St. John's College, recited the exercise which gained the Person prize.

The Rev. R. Tatham, D.D., Master of St. John's College, has signified his willingness to grant a free lease upon his ancient family estate at Bishopswearmouth for the Hendon District Church.

Mr. G. G. Stokes, of Pembroke College, and Mr. J. Clarke, of Queen's College, have been respectively appointed deputy senior and junior Proctors.

The Professorship of Modern History is vacant by the death of Professor Smyth, of whom we last week gave a memoir. The Professorship was founded by George I in 1724, and was held by the poet Gray from 1768 to 1771. The Queen appoints during pleasure, and the salary is £400 a year.

KING'S COLLEGE, LONDON.—The annual ceremony of distributing the prizes took place on Friday, the 29th ult. The Archbishop of Canterbury delivered them to the successful candidates in the presence of the Duke of Cambridge, the Bishops of London and Lichfield, Lord Radstock, Lord Waldegrave, Mr. Bancroft (the American Minister), M. Guizot, and a large assemblage of ladies and gentlemen.

PREFERMENTS.—Rev. C. Buckner, B.D., to the Rectory of West Stoke, Sussex; Rev. E. F. Gepp to the united Vicarages of High and Good Easter, Essex; the Rev. E. Goldsmith to the Rectory of Hinton on-the-Green, Gloucestershire; the Rev. T. B. Hawshaw to the Rectory of Brampton Abbots, Hereford; the Rev. W. Horne to the Rectory of Banning, Kent; the Rev. M. Howell to the Vicarage of Tavistock; the Rev. H. R. Wilkins to the Vicarage of Fernsfield, Nottingham.

VACANT PREFERMENT.—The Rectory of Dufton, Westmoreland, £172, with house: patron, Mr. Tufton.

COUNTRY NEWS.

BEACON ON THE GOODWIN SANDS.—During the last few days, several men, under the direction of the Trinity Board, have been employed on the Goodwin, about mid-sand. It appears the object is to force, by means of atmospheric pressure, several lengths of cylindrical iron tubes into the sand until some solid material is arrived at; each length of tube is about 10 feet long and 24 in diameter; but although six lengths securely fastened have been made to penetrate a depth of about 60 feet beneath the surface, no foundation has yet been reached. It is in contemplation, as soon as a substratum sufficiently firm is found, to place several tubes of similar dimensions at approximate distances, and to erect a beacon thereupon. Should the attempt succeed, and sanguine expectations be entertained that it will, the advantages that will exist from the important effect of a structure of this kind, in diminishing the amount of danger to shipping, on a spot proverbial for its disasters, and fatal consequences to life and property.

SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.—The reparation of the spire of this venerable cathedral is progressing, and with pleasure we announce that the inhabitants of the city were gratified on Friday week with witnessing the placing of the vane on the steeple, after being down for more than twelve months.

THE CROPS.—The crops throughout the country generally look well, and promise fair for an abundant supply of food both for man and beast. The wheat crop is in the beginning of the ear. The present cheerful weather will bring vegetation rapidly forward. We have not yet heard that there are any indications of the diseases amongst the potato crops. The hay harvest has already commenced, and on gentlemen's estates the grasses are heavy crops. The gardens are looking remarkable well, although the crops of apples and pears will not be so abundant as was anticipated when the trees were in bloom.

ROMAN CATHOLICITY IN BIRMINGHAM.—A new peal of five well-toned bells has been erected in one of the towers of St. Chad's Roman Catholic Cathedral, in Birmingham. When the Rev. John Moore was removed from St. Chad's to the Presidency of Oscott College, the congregation, desirous of giving to that gentleman a small token of their regard for his great zeal and indefatigable exertions during his residence amongst them, conceived the design of presenting to him a purse of money. That, however, the rev. gentleman objected to receive; and it was determined that a peal of bells should be placed in the edifice, to commemorate the esteem in which Mr. Moore was held. Their erection being completed on Thursday, the 28th ult., the eve of the Feast of St. Peter and St. Paul, a festival which is held in great veneration in the Roman Catholic Church, it was ushered in by the first merry peal from the new bells. A large concourse of persons assembled in the neighbourhood of Lionel-street and Bath-street, and the harmony of the bells was pronounced by those who were kept up with considerable spirit by a very competent set of ringers.

DISTRESS IN HULL.—A public meeting, convened by the Mayor, on receipt of a requisition from the principal inhabitants, was held in the Town-Hall, at Hull, on Tuesday, for the purpose of adopting some means of alleviating the large and increasing amount of distress existing in that town, in consequence of the Danish blockade. J. Lee Smith, Esq., the mayor of the borough, was called to the chair, and stated that he held in his hand an authenticated document, from which it appeared that in one part of the town 2195 workmen were out of employment, and that upon these were dependent 8780 women and children; making a total of 10,975. Mr. J. Thompson, chairman of the working men's committee, presented a number of details of the suffering and distress prevalent in Hull. Mr. Alderman Gresham stated that the receipts of the butchers, bakers, and numerous other classes of tradesmen, had fallen off one-half. Mr. Alderman Jones said, that, during the forty years he had been in the retail trade, it had never been so dull as at present, except during three weeks when the cholera raged a number of years ago. Resolutions were agreed to for the formation of a relief committee and the raising of subscriptions, which the mayor headed with £50.

EMIGRATION FROM LIVERPOOL.—Emigration still continues. The number now stand as follow:—First six months of 1848, 62,680; first six months of 1849, 87,443. The increase on the last month is, in round numbers, 6000 persons. The emigrants going appear to be of moderate substance. This, too, is the case with the emigrants who have left Ireland for the United States on the loss of the unfortunate vessel Charles Bartlett, from London to New York. Of the parties saved we find some stated to have last, besides baggage, tools, &c., cash varying from £5, which is about the lowest sum with which the loss is £200. On the average, they appear to have possessed from £20 to £40 each.

IRELAND.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT.—At a meeting of the Dublin Corporation, on Monday, the town-clerk read a letter from the Lord-Lieutenant to the Lord Mayor, enclosing a communication from Sir George Grey, announcing that her Majesty would pay a visit to her Irish subjects early in August, if the termination of the present session of Parliament will permit. The Home Secretary's communication stated that, in consequence of the distress prevailing in this country, her Majesty had not visit Dublin last year; and that the Queen proposes to embark in the Royal yacht, and to visit the Cove of Cork in the first instance—thence to proceed along the Irish coast to Dublin, and, after remaining in that city for a few days as the Lord-Lieutenant's guest, to visit Belfast, and cross over from the north to Scotland.

ELECTION OF LORD MAYOR.—The town-council of Dublin on Monday elected Mr. John Reynolds, M.P., as Lord Mayor, by a majority of 30 against 13. As the approaching visit of her Majesty is not one of state, it is supposed that the present Lord Mayor of Dublin will not be made a baronet, but that knighthood will be tendered to him.

THE DEBT OF IRELAND.—An official statement recently prepared of the debt, income, and expenditure of Ireland from the Union (1801) to 1848 shows, gives the following results:—Amount of the d. bt of Ireland at the period of Union (redeemed and unredeemed), £7,792,975. Amount of Irish debt created and paid during the period of the Union at the time of the British and Irish Exchequers (18.7)—created, £.06 809 794; paid off, £26,270,853. Increase of the unredeemed debt since 1801, £20,539,939. Amount of the Irish debt created and paid off from the time of the Union to the time of the Exchequers to the 5th January, 1845—created, £1,0b5,462; paid off, £6,233,520.

DEATHS FROM CHOLERA IN THE MILLBANK PRISON.—Inquests were held on Wednesday before Mr. Bedford, in the Millbank Prison, on the bodies of four prisoners who had died therein of Asiatic cholera. Their names were James Catling, aged 16; John Donovon, aged 21; John Mountford, aged 24; and Thomas Jones, aged 13. The evidence proved that, when admitted, they were in a good state of health, but they were attacked with Asiatic cholera, of which they died. In answer to a question, Dr. Baly, the prison physician, said that the prison was unhealthy, from its being low and so near the river. Moreover, there were bone-boilers and gas-works on the opposite side of the river, and an open ditch near the prison. There had been 24 cases of cholera lately in the prison, and 14 deaths. There were at the present time three other cases which he hoped would recover. Verdict in each case, "Death from Asiatic cholera."

THE SCHOOL-BOY. BY DAVID COPPERFIELD.

Poor Traddles! In a tight sky-blue suit that made his arms and legs like German sausages, or roly-poly puddings, he was the merriest and most miserable of all the boys. He was always being caned—I think he was caned every day that half-year, except one holiday Monday when he was only rapped on both hands—and was always going to write to his uncle about it, and never did. After laying his head on the desk for a little while, he would cheer up somehow, begin to laugh again, and draw skeletons all over his slate, before his eyes were dry. I used at first to wonder what comfort Traddles found in drawing skeletons; and for some time looked upon him as a sort of heretic, who reminded himself by those symbols of mortality that caning couldn't last for ever. But I believe he only did it because they were easy, and didn't want any features. He was very honest and truthful was I; and I think if he could have done it, he would have stood by one another. He staff red for this on several occasions, and particularly once, when Steerforth laughed in church, and the beadle thought it was Traddles and took him out. I see him now, going along in custody, despised by the congregation. He never said who was the real offender, though he smarted for it next day, and was imprisoned so many hours that he came forth with a shocking crop-full of skeletons swarming all over his Latin Dictionary. But he had his reward. Steerforth told them the nothing of the sneak in Traddles, and we all felt that to be the highest praise. For my part, I could have gone through a good deal (though I was much less brave than Traddles, and nothing like so old) to have won such a response.—David Copperfield.

LINES ON A COUNTRI RESIDENCE.

A GLORIOUS amphitheater!
A home amongst the hills,
Where Nature's self doth sabbagize
With inspiration thrills;—
Where wild flowers on each summit grow,
And cultured blossoms bloom below,
Whose scent the zephyr fills,
And circling glades of varied trees
Wave gently in the summer breeze.

I sit upon a pendicous rock
Left on the mountain's breast,
When chaos, with primeval shock,
Spread into light and rest.
If not, then where it first hath been,
To martial eye an area is seen,
Not wide, nor roundly drest,
Except it dropp'd from upper sky,
From some great meteor rushing by.

Far from the busy world away,
As earth contain'd no strife
As if one man fastly
Alone were left with life.
This little hemisphere is mine,
With all its quietude and flowers,
Of which it is so rife,
So fit Napoleon, when he vlow'd
The Atlantic from his solitude.

I hear the rockoe in the vale,
The lamb's upon the hoe,
The blackbird's manly strains of love
Wh...e perch'd on yonder tree;
I see the cattle graze around,
Or up-it upon yon sun-lit mound,
In boisterous liberty!
Wh...e as my face the yellow bloom
Breathes through soft lips of sweet perfume.

I am not where the eagle builds
His eyrie in the sky,
Or climbs—as proud pedestal
The vapours sailing by.
But still his is a highland home,
Where city-spirits love to roam,
And cast reflections wan;
And feel as if they were alone,
In solitude, on Nature's throne!

I see beneath a spreading palm
That rears its branches broad,
Two little children sport in mirth
Before their new abode
In a...the quietness and truth
That litgats the cheerful feet of youth,
Fair as when first from God
No bee that roams from bush to tree
More happy and content than they.

A fair oasis, squared with taste,
In cultured beauty lies
Amid the ruder scene;
Like modern gardens.
Roses and other lush trees ache the walls,
On which the sun in goodness falls,
And evening warmth supplies;
Whilst every plot laid out with care
Seems bringing forth its treasures rare.

And far away o'er stream and plain,
Rich morsels of enriched green,
And chalse of hills, and varied woods,
Give grandeur to the scene—
The mansion in the midst, below,
Where shrubs in rich arrangement grow,
Is like enchantment seen.
And where a fountain leaps in joy
To cool the grounds of Mother-Cray

WHITE PLAIN.

DR. PERT, whose hand-writing was the very abstraction of incomprehensibility, visiting the reading-room of a watering-place, happened to find among the subscribers a name which he could decipher, I ought, few others would have been equally successful. It was that of a friend whom he had not seen for some time. Anxious for early impressions, he inquired of the proprietor of the room as to his friend's address. This, however, was not known; accordingly the doctor was obliged to leave his card, with his own address thereon written, or intended, to be written, in that peculiar vehicle of thought which has so much to do with coploy. On the next appearance of the person for whom the card was designed, it was duly put into his hand. Delighted at the proximity of his early friend, the reader proceeded to inquire at the talisman where he (Perry) was to be found; but it pertinaciously refused to declare—not a letter was decipherable. Whether crescent, street, or square, was undiscoverable. Thus foiled, the reader, with some so despite the unsuccessful attempter, had no other resource save to leave his own card, with his address (as he imagined) written thereon. But, alas! he and his friend were similar in their ideas of penmanship as well as of other things; and when Perry, surprised that he had not called at his old companion, again betook himself to the room, heard the history, and received the card, he was equally at fault; and the result was that two friends, anxious to meet, and living in the same town, actually lost the opportunity of intercourse, through the equivocal character of their writing. A more serious instance is recently reported in the papers. The news of the late dreadful event at Stanfield Hall was communicated immediately to Norwich by telegraph. But what the marvels of modern discovery could effect for celerity was more than counterbalanced by slovenly writing. The telegraphic message was so miserably penned, that the authorities of the police did not comprehend its import till the next morning.—Sherry's London Magazine.

LAMB-COURT, UPPER TEMPLE.

When Major Pendennis reached that dingy portal it was about twelve o'clock in the day; and he was directed by a civil personage with a badge and a white apron, sitting on a bench at the door, and under various emanations from the inmates' pots and pans, to a house more dismal than the other, until, finally he reached Lamb-court. If it was dark in Pall Mall, what was it in Lamb-court? Candles were burning in many of the rooms—in the pupil-room of Mr. Hodgson, the eminent special pleader, where six pupils were scribbling declarations under the tallow; in Sir Hokey Walker's clerk's room, where the clerk, a person far more gentlemanlike and dignified in appearance than the sable counsel, his master, was conversing in a patronising manner with the managing clerk of an attorney at the door; and in Carling, the wig-maker's melancholy shop, where, from behind the feeble glimmer of the lights, large sergeants' and judges' wigs were looming drearily, with the blank blocks looking at the lamp-post in the court. Two little urchins were playing at toss halfpenny under that lamp. A laundress in pattens passed in at one door; a newspaper boy passed from another. A porter, whose white apron was faintly visible, paced up and down. It would be impossible to conceive a place more dismal, and the Major shuddered to think that any one should select such a residence. "Good God!" he said, "the poor boy mustn't live on here." The feeble and filthy oil-lamps, with which the staircases of the Upper Temple are lighted of nights, were of course not illumining the stairs by day, and Major Pendennis, having read with difficulty his nephew's name under Mr. Warrington's on the wall of No. 5, C, and still greater difficulty ascending the abominable black stairs, up the banisters of which he groped painfully until he came to the third story.—Pendennis

PRESENT STATE OF THE FIELD OF WATERLOO.

A recent visit to the field of battle discloses extensive changes. The plain is rapidly losing its original character. Picton's tree has been cut down by the ruthless farmer to whom the ground on which it stood belongs, and the forest of Soignes has been cut away that the outline it presented at the time of the battle can no longer be recognised, and the last vestiges of the wood are vanishing from the face of the earth. It appears that the King of Holland, eager to turn his property into cash as quickly as he could, sold the timber in a block of Beaulieu, and the bank (which has since failed) sold it away in lots to divers purchasers. The fate of the forest, therefore, was to be cut down. Even the Duke of Wellington has had a gift from the King of a thousand trees in this lot; so that at the present moment little more remains than a few clumps of white beech, like spectres haunting the green places of the ancient wood. The plain of Water-oo itself, too, is greatly altered. A large establishment for the manufacture of beet-root sugar rears its heavy shadow over the spot where the last crash of bayonets scattered the disordered retinue of Napoleon. Cottages have sprung up by the road-side; the greater part of the field is now industriously cultivated; and small enclosures filled with shrubs, and gardens, have displaced that tone of desola ion which formerly gave such a melancholy aspect to the scene. The château of Hougomont alone retains its early characteristics. The ruin remains just as it was after the battle, making a tremendous allowance for the decay and patching of more than a quarter of a century. There is the orchard neglected and overgrown with rank grass and dusty weeds; the shattered wall, the mutilated statue with the black ivy clinging round the fissured upon its crumbling sides, and a thousand names scrawled and daubed upwards even to its roof. Bentley's Miscellany

PRINCE RUPERT.

It was during the closing lull of his stormy life, that Prince Rupert discovered or improved the art of mezzotint, fabricated a gunpowder of "ten times the ordinary strength," invented the composition called "prince's metal," a method of fusing back lead and restoring it again, a mode of "blowing up rocks in mines or under water," an instrument to "cast platforms into perspective," a "hydraulic engine," "hail-shot" guns for "discharging several bullets very rapidly," and improvements in the science of gunnery. "Nay, more," adds his biographer, "to him also is to be attributed the toy that bear his name as 'Rupert's drop;' that curious bubble of glass, which has long amused children and puzzled philosophers." The retrospect of his life opens up a sort of heroic romance. He possessed all the vigorous and daring qualities of a knight-errant, and had a genius for adventures which wasnever at a loss to make them, if they were not really made to his hand. His valour, and the mere naked energy of the soldier, he was equal to Fairfax; in judgment and military knowledge, he was obviously inferior. His temperament had much to do with his fortune and his misfortunes. He suffered under extraordinary reverses and calamities; but he was favoured also with extraordinary opportunities, which his constitutional impetuosity would not suffer him to improve. The grand feature of his character, and that which gives the noblest stamp to his actions, was the integrity with which he carried out whatever he undertook. His fidelity to the King took the colour of an antique virtue. It may be reasonably doubted, however, whether he is destined to occupy a very dignified niche in history. His career was so uniformly unfortunate, and his efforts at distinction were so constantly marred by wayward circumstances, partly of his own creation, that while generous biography discovers in his life a variety of sources of interest to fascinate the imagination, history will scarcely applaud his valour, and declines pain from her page with no higher tribute than a soldier's honours.—Fraser's Magazine.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

MEETINGS.

ASHBURTON, NEWTON, AND SOUTH DEVON.—June 28: Half-yearly Meeting: Ashburton: Mr. B Canner in the chair.—The report declared that the Directors had refrained from prosecuting the works, under the continued depression of railway affairs. The provisions of the Bill for Dissolution of Railway Companies would probably be made use of, if the proprietors were agreeable. The funds in hand amount to £1000

DUBLIN, DUNDRUM, AND RATHFARNHAM.—June 28th: Special Meeting: Dublin: Dr. Fulton in the chair After much confusion and disturbance, the proprietors elected new directors, having increased the number to 18, and having enforced the resignation of the former board. It was also resolved to stop all the works and every description of expenditure until affairs had been thoroughly investigated. Legal proceedings are to be taken against defaulting shareholders without further notice.

EASTERN COUNTIES.—July 2: Special Meeting: London: Mr. Anderson in the chair.—The shareholders met to consider the authorising the long proposed amalgamation with the Norfolk, and the lease of, or amalgamation with the Eastern Union. The same scene of uproar and angry display of feeling was enacted as at the last three meetings. An amendment for adjourning the proceedings was proposed. On the second day's polling it was announced that there was a majority in favour of the Norfolk amalgamation, &c., of 18,533 votes. The election of the new directors is to occur on the 13th inst.

EAST INDIAN.—July 4: Special Meeting: London: Mr. Aglionby, M.P., in the chair.—Authority was given for carrying out the amendments of the bill now before Parliament, for incorporating the company, reducing its shares from £50 to £20, lessening the number of directors, who are to be under the supervision of the Board of Control and the East India Company, and other general purposes.

LANCASTER AND PRESTON.—July 2: Special Meeting: Lancaster: Mr J. Bushell in the chair.—After the rejection of an amendment affecting the contract of the company with the South Union Central, the proprietors agreed to the proposals of the directors for ratifying the agreement with the Canal Company, who are to give up the lease of the line, for remodelling the board of direction, and for confirming the transfer of the line by the Carnforth to the Lancaster and Carlisle, as agreed upon last May. Special meetings of the Lancaster and Carlisle and of the Canal Company also sanctioned their share of these arrangements.

WATERFORD, WEXFORD, AND WICKLOW.—July 2: Meeting of Proprietors: London: Mr. De Lacy Nash in the chair.—The report from the committee of investigation recommended the suspension of payment of calls until the past expenditure had been clearly investigated. The committee recommend resistance to the suits instituted by the directors, and it was agreed to commence subscriptions for this object. A petition to Parliament in support of the Dissolution Bill was adopted.

The proceedings at the MIDLAND meeting, on the 4th, were confined to adjourning the assembly, as the report of the committee of investigation was not completed.

The line from Reading to Farnborough, and from Reigate to Dorking, of the junction line of the READING, GUILDFORD, AND REIGATE, was opened on the 4th. The station at Reading is nearly completed.

Orders for winding-up have been made in the Vice-Chancellor's Court in the METROPOLITAN JUNCTION RAILWAYS scheme.

The Dundee Railway viaduct, joining the SCOTTISH CENTRAL line, is to be open and in about ten days.

In the GRAND TRUNK and STAFFORD and PETERBOROUGH, before the Master in Chancery, Mr. Thomas Read was appointed official manager. The undertaking has been dissolved, but the allottees will perhaps be called upon to defray the outstanding debts by a pro rata contribution of £5.

The provisions of the RAILWAY PASSENGERS' ASSURANCE ACT come into use on the 22nd. They secure a sum of money to any passenger, on payment of a trifling amount in the event of loss of life or personal injury while travelling on the railway

The opening of the HUDDERSFIELD and MANCHESTER, fixed for the 28th ult., has been delayed.

The large claims of the SOUTH WALES COMPANY against the LONDON and SOUTH-WESTERN, for compensation for land, have been happily settled without recourse to a jury.

The line of the STOUR VALLEY, SUDBURY, and BURY, branching from the Eastern Counties four miles this side of Colchester, was opened on the 2nd for public traffic.

The NORWICH extension of the EASTERN UNION to Diss and Bury on was opened to the public on the 2nd, being within twelve miles of Norwich. It branches from the Eastern Union at Haugley road through Elmsted, Thurston, Diss, and Burston.

The Servants' Provident and Benevolent Society has received from his Royal Highness Prince Albert a donation of £10*l*.

TRAVELLING ARRANGEMENTS FOR THE AUTUMN.—We think that the home circuit will, this autumn, be decidedly preferable to the grand tour; for although the tourist can see St. Peter's from the top of Primrose-hill, or walk upon the Prado within sight of the New River, still he will, in all probability, return from either of the places we have mentioned with the same number of cares, and perhaps with more he brought with him, and without having run the slightest risk of being shot by Republicans for a Monarchist, or of being hanged by Monarchists for a Republican.—Man in the Moon.—(New Series, No. 1.)

CARD-TABLE SIGNALS.—Theodore Hook's Code of Card-table Signals, in his clever novel of "Gilbert Gurney," might be very effectually reduced to practice. He says he, "and his wife play together at whist. There are always family telegraphs; and, if they fancy their looks are watched, they can always communicate by words. I found out that I could never win of Smigsmag and his wife. I mentioned this one day, and was answered: 'No, you never can win of them.' 'Why?' said I. 'Because,' said my friend, 'they have establ.shed a code.' 'Dear me!' said I; 'signals by looks?' 'No,' said he; 'by words. If Mrs. Smigsmag is to lead, Smigsmag says, Dear, begin; Dear begins with D; so does diamond; and each comes out from the lady. If he has to lead, and she says S. my love, she wants a spade. Smigsmag and spade begin with the same letter, and sure enough down comes a spade. Harkee, my dear, how long you are sorting your cards!' Mrs. Smigsmag stumps down a heart; and a gentle Come, my love! on either side produces a club.'"

NATIONAL BANK, NEW BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

IN presenting to our readers views of the New Buildings just completed for the National Bank of Scotland, Glasgow, we feel assured that the beauty and elegance of their architectural character will be at once apparent; but the charm of colour, which adds to the expressiveness of the letter-press, is, unfortunately, not in our power to display, and our readers must therefore imagine the exquisite glowing beauty of the interior of the Telling-room, and its delicate architectural enrichments, from our verbal description, being guided in the general form and effect by our pictorial representation.

The building stands in a square, three sides of which are surrounded by buildings of admirable design, including large warerooms, the Stock Exchange, &c., which have been erected since 1844, from the designs of the talented architect whose last achievement we now chronicle. The front faces is in Queen-street, and presents a façade divided into two stories, each having windows in them, the lower enriched with pilasters of the Ionic, and the upper with those of the Corinthian order, the whole being crowned with a highly-enriched entablature and cornice, and we should observe, the orders are not the pure Greek, but of the Venetian school. The central part of the front somewhat projects from the side portions, having three-quarter columns in couples; and in this portion, the centre is the lower story, instead of a window, is the entrance door. The windows to the lower story are rusticated in courses, and the keystones to them and the doorway are sculptured with heads emblematic of the principal rivers of the United Kingdom. The windows to the upper story are proportioned, and, as we before mentioned, the entablature and cornice are exceedingly ornate and well sculptured. Surmounting the centre of the building are the national arms, with colossal figures representing Peace and Commerce at the extremities of the sky line of the building is broken by vases of elegant form and detail. A stone balustrade on a rusticated base surrounds and gives character to, and guards the building.

Having thus briefly noticed the exterior of the building, we quote a glowing passage from our contemporary, the Glasgow Herald, descriptive of the general appearance of the interior:—"The vestibule, entering from Queen-street, is of elongated shape, with an arched ceiling broken by two hemispherical coves, whose domes—in one of which is a stained cupola—are painted bright blue, and studded with stars of gold. The walls and arch are painted in imitation of the Aberdeen granite, slightly enriched by inlays of porphyry, while the cornice is supported by pilasters of Bavarian jasper. The effect of this fine passage, from its color and style, is cool, massive, and substantial; forming, by its powerful contrast, an artistical introduction to the thousand lines of richly-tinted light diffused around from every point and corner of the into which we are immediately ushered. On entering this magnificent saloon, we find that the elaborate architectural enrichments are enlivened and brought out to the greatest advantage by a gorgeous arrangement of sparkling colour, and the eye is at once led upwards from the floor, and counters, with their golden lamps, its questioning solicitude, along the columns and pilasters to the cornice and dome overhead, from whence it is as quickly attracted by the dazzling shower of coloured rays profusely shed through the deep-stained glass of the cupola. These columns and pilasters are in hanging imitation of very warm-coloured porphyry, their capitals and bases being of pure white marble; and the ceiling and dome, each lavishly adorned with figured devices, are admirably set off by hatchments of blue, crimson, and gold, but all so balanced in size and shape as to produce a beautiful prismatic effect.

"The principal walls of this beautiful room are rendered in imitation of Sienna marble, with a fidelity and power which might well rival the choicest specimens of the genuine material—forming a judicious middle tone between the warm blood-red of the columns and the cold neutral tint of the Dove marble surrounding the doors and windows, between which again and the Sienna there is a uniting stripe of Nuremburg. Right opposite the door of entrance, but almost out of sight, are planted two very elegant lamps with tall slender stalks, the latter in imitation of French bronze of an exquisitely delicate tint, with their most prominent members slightly hatched in gold.

In surveying the coup d'œil of this magnificent saloon, we know not whether most to admire its general brilliancy, grandeur, and good taste, or the truth-telling beauty of the imitations; and we may add that each of the other apartments, however different in appearance and in the purposes for which they are intended, display a similar harmony in their design, and equal talent in their execution: nor are they beholdenhand in the richness and propriety of their decoration; and the whole work has elicited the approval of no less mature a judgment than that of Ralph Wornum, Esq., the Government Inspector of the National Schools of Design."

Having thus rapidly sketched the character of this beautiful addition to the public buildings of Glasgow, it is our pleasing duty to record the names of the parties engaged on the building. First, our warmest commendations must be bestowed on the architect, John Gibson, Esq., of London, who not only designed the building in its general plan and outlines, but likewise all its minuter details were carefully studied and arranged by him, in colour as well as form; and he has been most ably seconded in the coloured and gilded decorations by Mr. Bennett, of the firm of Bogie and Co., of Glasgow; and in the stained glass by Ballantine and Allan, of Edinburgh—the gentlemen who have furnished the stained glass windows for the House of Lords. The national arms, the colossal figures, the decorative vases, and the keystones to the windows, are in the best style of Mr. John Thomas, whose talents, so often called into requisition have been so often eulogised in our pages; and the decorative parts of the architecture, generally, were executed from his models. The stone employed in the building is from the Bamie quarries, near Edinburgh; the masonry was executed by the late John Buchanan.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. SCHOLEFIELD, M.P.

MR. WILLIAM SCHOLEFIELD, who, in conjunction with Mr. Muntz, represents the important borough of Birmingham, is the second son of the late Mr. Joshua

MR. SCHOLEFIELD, M.P. FOR BIRMINGHAM.

Scholefield, who, for many years, to the period of his death in 1844, sat in Parliament as member for that great centre of commercial and manufacturing industry, where he carried on extensive business both as a banker and merchant. The present member is also a merchant of Birmingham, and is a disciple of the same liberal school of politics to which his father was so unswerving an adherent, and which now, making "financial," as well as "parliamentary" reform an essential tenet of its creed, with appropriate courtesy takes Mr. Hume—the patriarch of fiscal retrenchment—as its leader, while it constitutes Mr. Cobden as its chief missionary exponent.

Mr. Scholefield, though a constant attendant at his post in Parliament, is by no means a frequent speaker in the House. When he does address "the collective wisdom" of the nation, he is, like most men of business, plain of speech, and matter-of-fact in his reasoning, being alike remote from twaddle as he is from ornate rhetorical flourish. His abilities were early recognised by his townsmen, who, when Birmingham received its charter of incorporation in the year 1838, elected him, at the age of 29, the first Mayor of the borough.

His conduct in that responsible office won him the approbation and regard of a large body of the inhabitants; and when the death of his father, in 1844, created a vacancy in the representation of the borough, he was universally regarded by the Liberal party there as the fittest person in their ranks to fill it up, and he was accordingly set up as their candidate. He was opposed, however, on the Conservative interest, by one who, like himself, possessed the local influences in the town attaching to the successful pursuit of commerce—Mr Spooner, the banker, who now sits for North Warwickshire, and was defeated in the contest. At the general elections in 1847 he again presented himself at the hustings, a candidate for the suffrages of the Birmingham constituency, and was successful after a sharp struggle, having polled 2824 votes while Mr. Spooner obtained 2302.

Mr. Scholefield is a magistrate for Warwickshire and a director of the Birmingham and Midland Bank he was born in the year 1809, and is a widower, his wife (daughter of J. Miller, Esq.) having died in 1843.

In addition to what has been already indicated of the hon. gentleman's political creed, it may be stated that he is in favour of a wide extension of the suffrage, of triennial parliaments, vote by ballot, currency reform, and the removal of all religious disabilities: he is opposed to the endowment of the Roman Catholic clergy.

In the House of Commons, on Tuesday evening last, the honourable gentleman was one of the minority of thirteen who voted in favour of Mr. Feargus O'Connor's motion for the adoption of "the People's Charter."

MADAME SONTAG.

THIS distinguished cantatrice, whose engagement at Her Majesty's Theatre we announced last week, arrived in town on Saturday, and will make her appearance this evening (the 7th) in the character of Linda, in Donizetti's popular opera of that name. We learn that at Berlin his Excellency Count Rossi, Sardinian Minister to the Prussian Court, had an audience to take leave, on his retirement, on the 20th ult. The King of Prussia likewise received Count and Countess Rossi (Madame Sontag) in private audience, on the 25th; after which they quitted Berlin for England.

Madame Sontag, a German by birth, began her career at fifteen years of age; and, on her first appearance, at the German Opera at Vienna, created the greatest enthusiasm. The celebrated Barbaja, who at the same moment was the impresario of three of the greatest operatic theatres of Europe, having heard her sing at Vienna, employed every means to withdraw her from the German to the Italian lyrical stage. Having succeeded in his object, she made her début in the "Donna del Lago," at the Grand Opera of the Carinthia; and her talent created such a sensation, that offers of unlimited liberality poured in from every quarter; and, after the season, Barbaja was compelled to part with his new star, Severini having secured Madame Sontag's services for the Italiens, in Paris. There she met with another celebrated prima donna, who had long preceded her, Madame Malibran; and, although so young, she maintained her position with her great colleague. She sang, as with an elder sister, in "Tancredi," "Il Matrimonio," and many other operas. Such was her success, that every means were employed to bring her to England; and tempted by the liberality of the offers made her, she arrived the following season. Her début took place at a concert at Devonshire House on a Tuesday in Easter week. Such was her reputation, not only for musical genius, but for beauty, elegance, and fascinating manners, that the curiosity of the spectators in the streets equalled the throng of nobility, rank, and fashion under the roof of that great dilettante and patron of art, the Duke of Devonshire. On the following 16th April she made her first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre, and her success even surpassed expectation.

MADAME SONTAG.

Most of the great prima donne of our times have been compelled, in soprano parts, to compensate by their genius and their science for the original defects or want of compass of their voices; for example, in the case of Pasta, whose natural voice was a rugged mezzo soprano, or of Malibran, who was a real contralto. In Madame Sontag the public found a real soprano, enabling her to perform with certainty of tone, exquisite ease, purity, and delicacy, the most intricate passages and original embellishments, whether in full tone or mezzo voce. When she first appeared in Rosina, she revelled and luxuriated in roulades, arpeggios, and fanciful divisions; whilst subsequently, in Donna Anna, she proved that she could sing in the most chaste and classical style, and produce the same effect by pure sentiment as she did before by fioriture and staccato passages.

Subsequently, from England Madame Sontag went to Berlin, where, through the influence of her amiable qualities, no less than by her talents, she became so great a favourite of the late King of Prussia and of the Royal Family, that she was induced to settle in Berlin. There—having in her career, although so short, acquired a fine fortune—she became attached to a young Piedmontese nobleman (Count Rossi), himself possessed not only of fortune and rank, but representative of his Sovereign. Her last performance in "Semiramide" appeared as if it were a national celebration; the enthusiasm was intense, and the whole audience almost wept when she bade adieu. The King of Prussia attended by all the Princesses of the blood, himself gave away the bride.

During the missions of her husband at St. Petersburgh, as well as at Berlin Madame Sontag (now Countess Rossi) was received at Court with the greatest distinction, and delighted the circles of the King and the Emperor by the occasional display of her genius at St. Petersburgh, where she eclipsed all the professional vocalists. Such a sensation did she occasion by singing at Court that the Emperor and Empress on her departure determined to establish the Italian Opera, now one of the first establishments in Europe. The recent revolutions, which have deposed so many Princes and Potentates, and have overthrown so many fortunes, have altogether ruined those of Madame Sontag; and, to provide for her family, she returns to the stage in England, where she possesses many influential friends.

These poetic statuettes are from the chisel of Mr. Lough, and are to be seen at Messrs. There are impersonations in marble of "the proud Titania," Queen of the fairies; "the jealous Oberon," the King; and Puck—

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The new ballet of "Les Plaisirs du Hâvre" was produced at Her Majesty's Theatre, with great success, on Thursday night.

It presents the most beautiful and novel features, in the contrast of the flowery scenes of the tropical, with the pastimes of the hyperborean regions; together with the employment of electricity in one of its most striking forms. This ballet was first performed at the Court Theatre at Berlin, in 1840, under the title of "Lieibeshändel." It is composed by Paul Taglioni, the maître de ballet to the King of Prussia (now temporarily at Her Majesty's Theatre). It was at first reserved for the precincts of the Court Theatre; but last year it was yielded up to the requests of the Marshal Prince Paskiewitch, the greatest amateur and patron of ballets in Europe. At his private theatre (the Taglioni, at Warsaw, although there are no Taglionis or Rosatis, there is a Polish corps de ballet, which, for beauty, agility, and mimic power, has no equal in Europe. Here the ballet had immense success; and all the great theatres in Germany imitated it. Such was the effect, that Meyerbeer—who is composer to the same theatre of which Paul Taglioni is ballet-master—about to produce the "Prophète" in Paris, asked the latter, on his way to London, to furnish the suggestions, plans, and models requisite to introduce some of its principal features in the opera. This Paul Taglioni most cheerfully accomplished from regard for Meyerbeer, and the "Pas des Patineurs" had the same success in Paris as in Berlin. As the principal attractions of its merits naturally led to its production by its author at Her Majesty's Theatre on Thursday last, with triumphant results. The first tableau represents the celebration of a Polish marriage, which takes place on the borders of a lake. It presents some of those new artificial contrivances by means of which the rich noblemen of the north console themselves for the rigour of their climate. In this tableau the fascinating Rosati and other principal dancers display the bravure display their grace and spirit in novel and piquant steps. Having disported themselves within, the gay votaries join the country people without in another pastime of their own. The latter form the second tableau, in which they pierce the frozen Danube. Crowds of skaters throng the frozen waters, attended by vendors of every species of ornament as well as of refreshment. On one side you behold ladies dressed in their fur dresses on sledges; on the other, those who are enjoying the montagne Russe. Presently room is made for the dancing of the skaters. The programme of amusements begins. First comes the pas des frères. The laughter and shivering creep, by the execution of a peculiar Hungarian step, dance themselves into warmth. Then comes the pas à la hussarde, a curious, lively, and varied step, performed by Mdlles. Petit, Marra, Thomasini, and Rosandon, Julien and Armoureux. This is followed by the most remarkable and characteristic step of all, the grand quadrille des patineurs. Of this prolonged, varied, and curiously intricate pas, every step is executed by skaters with the most remarkable characteristic aptidness and effect the illusion is complete. Between each figure there are solos of mimic action—ep sodes of the life of the north, performed with remarkable graphic fidelity and spirit by M Charles. But, at last, the hour comes when the feast within must follow the sport without. As the curtain falls again, the hour of retiring to genial fires, and the curtain descends amidst the fall of snow

The pictorial portion of the peculiar, spirited, characteristic, and novel ballet is highly creditable to the talents of Mr. C. Marshall; whilst M. Paul Taglioni (who, after the conclusion of the performance, returned to Berlin) has earned here another well-merited triumph. The mise en scène is worthy of the work. The music, by Bugni, characteristic of the country, is of his peculiar mastery; and will add to success, in every respect, is complete. We shall, next week, engrave the "Pas des Patineurs."

The great event of this week, however, is the appearance of Madame Sontag. We have had the good fortune to hear her in "Linda." Her singing, alone, of "Luce di quest' anima" would be worth a pilgrimage. The finesse, the power of modulation, the expression which conceals the mechanism of voice, the ascent to the highest regions of melody, are managed by her with a mastery which no power can surpass, no auditor can resist. To this must be added the graceful looks and manner are such as are seldom beheld on the stage, not only possessing the highest degree of elegance, but that which is most irresistible—natural unaffected dignity. To find so celebrated an singer restored to us after a lapse of years, neither impaired in looks, form, nor voice, and with the addition of that experience of dramatic and vocal resources which recent years have yielded, is one of those extraordinary effects which we owe to the revolutions of the times—which, alas! have produced little in other respects that is harmonious or agreeable.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The eighth performance of Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," on Saturday night, was honoured by the presence of her Majesty and Prince Albert. The opera will be repeated next Thursday, for Grisi's benefit. On Tuesday night, Mdme Persiani's farewell appearance took place in "Donna del Lago" and "Ecco di Figaro," and acted the part of the Countess charmingly, and was most enthusiastically greeted.

Mdme. Persiani is the daughter of the celebrated tenor, Tacchinardi, and wife of Persiani, the composer of "Inez da Castro," "La Fantasma," and other operas She has maintained her position as a prima donna in Paris and London for the last fifteen years with distinguished success; and as an accountant of vocal difficulties, has never been approached. The fancy and genius of Madame Persiani in the selection of graces and ornaments seemed inexhaustible. She has never been known, on an encore, to repeat the same roulades; and in the present season she introduced quite novel and elegant fiorture.

Mozart's opera went off with infinite spirit Grisi, Persiani, and Angri, Tamburini, Lavia, Tagliafico, Polonini, and Marini shining with evident relish the music of this fascinating lyric comedy. The overture and several pieces were encored.

On Thursday, for the benefit of Signor Mario, Rossini's "Donna del Lago" was announced, but owing to the indisposition of Mr. Sims Reeves, who was to have sung Rodrigo, the opera was changed to "Norma," with Mr. Hargitt in an alteration with which the public was quite content. Lavia sang the "Ra-ta-plan" couplets, in place of Reeves. Mario was in splendid voice, and was cordially greeted. The "Donna del Lago" will be given next Tuesday; and the "Puritani" this evening (Saturday).

MUSIC.

Ernst, the violinist, and Hallé, the pianist, gave a concert on Monday evening at the Hanover Rooms. Ernst performed Mendelssohn's violin concerto with the finest effect. As to pianoforte playing, we entirely see nothing to the composition, which was as poetical as it was wonderful in its executive feats. He also played his "Papageno" rondo, and, with Hallé, a sonata by Bach, and some elegant pensées fugitives by Stephen Heller and Hallé. Hallé executed Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in G with classical taste and skill. Miss Dolby was encored in a pretty ballad by Wallace, "The Fireside Song," the words by Mr. H. F. Chorley; and Miss Lucombe, Mdlle. Vera, Mdme Macfarren, Mdlle. Nissen, with Herr Stigelli and Herr Damcke, sang pieces for vocal and instrumental items of the two bénéficiaires, whose splendid playing was of course the main attraction of the concert. Benedict was the conductor, and Willy the leader of a select band.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The fourth and last morning concert of the season was given on Friday, at the Royal Italian Opera, a notice of which will appear in our ensuing number.—Jarman gave a farewell matinée musicale on Friday, at the Riding School of the Knightsbridge Barracks, under the most distinguished patronage.—This morning (Saturday) will be the fourth and last concert of the Royal Academy of Music.—The eighth and last meeting of the Musical Union will take place on Tuesday.—On Thursday will be Mr. R. Blagrove's final concertina concert, and Mdme. Oury's matinée.

THE GOUTY SHOE.—James Smith used to tell, with great glee, a story showing the general conviction of his dislike to ruralities He was sitting at the library at a country-house, when a gentleman proposed a quiet stroll into the pleasure-grounds: "Stroll? why don't you see my gouty shoe?" "Yes, I see that, then enough." "Why, you don't suppose I'm going to stroll now?" "Well, and what then?" "What then? why, my dear fellow, you don't mean to say that you have really got the gout? I thought you had only put on that shoe to get off being shown over the improvements."—Railway Anecdote Book, just published.

JACK KETCH.—The earliest hangman whose name is known was called Derrick. He lived in the reign of Elizabeth, and is recorded by Stowe, in his "Gull's Hornbook," and by Middleton, in his "Black Book." He was succeeded by Gregory Brandon, who, it is said, had arms confirmed to him by the College of Heralds, and bequeathed the figure of his office to his son. Brandon was succeeded by Dun, "Esquire Dun," as he is called; and Dun, in 1684, by John Ketch, commemorated by Dryden in an epilogue, and whose name is now synonymous with hangman.—Cunningham's Hand-book for London.

GENERAL POST-OFFICE, June, 1849.—In concluding the recent postal convention with the United States, the British Post-Office has been unable to make provision for the safe transmission of registered letters between the two countries, no system of registration being in operation in the United States. The public, however, may still continue to register letters for the United States as far as the port of despatch, according to the present practice; but it must be distinctly understood that such registration will be effectual only to the port of despatch in the United Kingdom.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE occurrences of the last few days possessed very little interest beyond the moment, but, from the uninterrupted fineness of the weather, passed off with considerable éclat. The principal event brought to an issue on the turf was the July Stakes, for which a field of moderate animals appeared at the post. The race was won by a canter by a horse recently defeated at the Stockbridge, after a dead heat, by the Bee-Hunter. Thirty to one was afterwards betted against the winner (Sweetheart) for the Derby, about three times the odds that were laid against the Flying Dutchman, after winning the same race against bad horses, and, certainly with no greater ease than it was won this year. This was the only race of any importance during the meeting, which, nevertheless, was very well attended.

The ensuing week will be prolific of all kinds of seasonable sports. To begin with the turf, we have the Liverpool on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, with a very good looking field. The grounds at the end of the meeting, the Clock-field, are a dead heat, by the Bee-Hunter. The ensuing week will be prolific of all kinds of seasonable sports. To begin with the turf, we have the Liverpool on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, with a very good looking field. The grounds at the end of the meeting, the Clock-field, are decided on Thursday; but the first and second days will be scarcely less interesting, inasmuch as the Flying Dutchman is engaged on both, and, in all probability, will run—on paper he cannot possibly lose The aquatic fraternity will find ample resource of enjoyment in the Lambeth, St Clement Dane's, St. John's (Westminster), and Limehouse regattas on Monday, and the Thames Regatta at Putney, on the two following days. The cricketing fixtures in the metropolis, are Kent against England, on Monday, and the Undergraduates of Oxford and Cambridge against all England, on Thursday; both at Lord's. An interesting match will also be played at Kennington Oval, on Wednesday, between the Surrey Union and Stockwell Clubs.

PALACE AND MARSHALSEA COURTS.—By a return moved for by Lord Dudley Stuart, it appears that Mr. Serjeant Manning, Bart., Knt. Marshal and Judge of the Palace and Marshalsea Courts, received £714 0s. 6d. in fees during the year ending July, 1848. The other officers of the court received the following amounts:—Clerk of the Papers, Mr. Brent Brent, Esq., Steward and Judge, £742 16s. 4d.; Sir Henry Frederick Campbell, K.C.B., prothonotary, £780 6s. 3d.; Mr. John Charrier Hewlitt, deputy-prothonotary, secondary, &c., £1214 11s. 7d.; Mr. William Ely, crier, £143 15s. 2d.; Mr. John Charrier Hewitt, clerk, £311 19s. 6d.; Mr. Thos. Hicks, marshalsea officer, £118 14s. 4d.; Messrs. Joseph Holden Turner, Benjamin Edward Willoughby, James Dolman, Clerk Bowers Miller, Thomas Hicks, and Mark Shepherd, attorneys of the court, received respectively £740 0s. 2d., £1049 16s. 6d., £1027 19s. 4d., £1049 16s. 6d., £1349 14s., and £3337 11s. 10d. The same paper shows the sums received by these officers from July, 1838, to July, 1848, by way of compensation. The number of writs received, with year ended July, 1848, was 2000, and the number of causes tried during the same time 1167. Of these 95 were for sums above £20. The number of causes defended was 126, and verdicts were found for the defendant in that number

THE CLUB.—The members of the old-established literary society, known as "The Club," founded by Dr. Johnson, held their last banquet for the season on Tuesday evening, at the Thatched House Tavern, St. James's-street. In the absence of the Earl of Ellesmere, who was to have presided, the chair was occupied by the Rev. H. Milman. There were present the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Bishop of Oxford, the Dean of Westminster, Sir David Dundas, Mr. Pemberton Leigh, Colonel Leake, Mr. Scaford, M.P., and Dr. Holland.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The closing prices of Saturday were firmly maintained on Monday in the English Market, until nearly the close of business, when a slight reaction left Consols at 91¼ ⅞ for the opening, or 4½. This reaction was principally occasioned on Tuesday, the City Election superseding business. On the news transpiring of the arrival of the 7th, with a large sum of specie on merchants' account, as well as the despatching of the Queen's Messenger with the news to negotiate, Consols became firmer, closing at 91⅝ buyers; and on Wednesday, when the telegraphic despatch announcing the capitulation of Rome was received, an improvement to 92⅛ was the result. Sometime elapsed before a reaction, however, took place, towards the closest business, and 92⅛ was the last quotation. At this price the market was nearly stationary during Thursday, business generally being very limited at the hour of writing, the Yorkshire Election appearing to be regretable, Consols became firmer, closing at 91⅞

Yet if wild winds blew
Never more on the lea;
And no blossoms grew
On the healthy tree;
And the river untrue
Escaped the sea;
And they all had ceased blowing,
And growing, and flowing;
I'd ne'er cease loving thee.

And till that hour,
In the day or night;
In the field or bower;
In the dark or bright;
In the fruit or the flower;
In the bloom or the blight;
In my reaping or sowing,
My coming or going;
I'll ne'er cease loving thee.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

No. 380.—Vol. XV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1849. [Sixpence.

HOPE FOR IRELAND.

HE Earl of Clarendon as Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland at one of the most critical periods of its history, has had opportunities, which are happily rare, of forming a correct judgment upon socialits sufferings. He has seen in full operation the causes which have combined to produce its present and past misery, and to render it in ordinary times the prey of the demagogue and disturber, and in extraordinary times to cover it with famine and desolation.

In a remarkable letter, addressed to the Corporation of London, his Lordship has stated his views upon the subject with great clearness and ability; and has lent all the aid of his public position and his high personal character to support the project first authoritatively broached in Parliament by Sir Robert Peel, for the infusion of English capital into the west of Ireland. His Lordship, though fully aware, we must presume, of the various political influences which have conspired to make Ireland unhappy and unprosperous, is convinced that her greatest evils are entirely social in their origin and progress. In a few emphatic sentences he describes her deep-rooted disease and the sole available remedy. "The whole social system of Ireland," he says, "has been based upon the potato, and the failure of that root has consequently entailed universal distress. Hence so many landed proprietors are now unable to pay the interest on their mortgages. Tenants can no longer pay their rents; and the peasants, for want of employment, are driven upon the rates, of which the collection daily becomes more difficult. Such a state of things contains within itself no germ of amelioration. It cannot even remain stationary: it must go from bad to worse, for the means of improvement are altogether wanting, and the national resources are gradually wasting. Even if the potato were to revive (and to that all classes are now clinging with desperate hope), it would only bring back the evils under which the country has been so long labouring. It is manifest," he adds, "that a complete change of system as regards agriculture, the tenure of land, and the social habits of the people, has become indispensable, and that change can only be effected by the introduction of English capital enterprise, and skill."

The Corporation of London has the capital, and the enterprise to set the example; and, if we may judge from the mode in which it has managed the Irish estates which it acquired in the reign of James I., it has also the skill necessary for the cultivation of Irish lands upon a better principle for the people, and upon a more remunerative plan for the landlords, than are at present in operation in the purely Celtic portions of the country. The City of London seems willing to lend a hand in this great work; and it is to urge the leading members of the Corporation to consider the subject fully, that the Lord-Lieutenant has penned the able letter from which we have quoted. The Corporation has manifested an extraordinary unanimity in favour of an investment of its surplus revenues in Irish acres; and there seems every probability that ere a very long period of time shall have elapsed, a great experiment will be made to test the virtues of the half-starved men of Munster and Connaught, under circumstances favourable for their development, and to discover whether these "potato-feeding, pauper-breeding" myriads can be transformed into the independant and industrious labourers of a skilful and solvent proprietary.

Too much unanimity is often dangerous. There is a risk of folly in a contagious enthusiasm. Therefore, although we incline very strongly to the opinion of those who maintain that the purchase of Irish property by the City of London is likely, with ordinary good management, to return a fair profit to the City for its outlay, and still more materially to benefit the districts which shall be fortunate enough to be honoured by its selection, we are glad to see that those who have objections to the plan have stated them We are equally glad to believe that in the committee of the Corporation to which the letter of Lord Clarendon, and the whole subject, have been referred, all these objections will be fairly, dispassionately, and thoroughly considered. As far as we can understand it, the principal, if not the sole objection seems to be, that the Corporation will of necessity be an absentee proprietor. A fear is also expressed that an attempt will be made to expatriate or otherwise remove a large portion of the present redundant population, and to supply the place of the pure Celts with a somewhat smaller number of Anglo-Saxons. The objection, however, is but of little worth, if the absentee proprietor be solvent, and represented by resident agents of enterprise and knowledge of their business. Upon this point we think the Corporation of London may very safely be trusted by the greatest sticklers for a resident proprietary. The fear as to the expatriation of the Celtic people is another matter. Its realisation is not to be thought of. The cry of "Ireland for the Irish" is in this respect a sacred principle. If the City of London attempted to carry any such scheme into operation, it would not only excite the just hostility of the Irish, and the condemnation of the English people, but it would defeat its own purpose. That purpose is not merely to make money, but to set a great example of confidence in the remunerativeness and stability of Irish property; and thereby allure into Ireland the shy and sensitive, but essential and clear-sighted class of men, who possess spare capital for profitable investment. It is not from what the Corporation of London can do of itself, but from what it may induce others to do, that social benefits of any magnitude are to be anticipated for Ireland. We consider it of the happiest augury for that long-suffering country—which has had a reputation for its treatment of landlords almost as ugly as the story of its miseries—that such a body as the Corporation of London has manifested a willingness to risk its capital in it.

Agrarian outrages have, unhappily, been too frequent; but if, in despite of history, capitalists, in one instance, are not afraid to invest itself in the waste lands of Connaught and Munster, other capitalists will follow their example, if the old traditional outrages be not repeated. We think, too, that these outrages are peculiar to one district and one temperament of the people. Tipperary and Donegal, if equal in misery, are not equal in crime. There need be no fear that the Irish peasant will not work when he is fairly treated. A bad system may have demoralised him to some extent; but Englishmen know, by the evidence of their own harvest-time, how hard the Celtic immigrant will occasionally labour. It may be that his industry is capricious, not regular; but the testimony of all unprejudiced investigators, shows that what the Irishman really lacks is not the will to labour, but a fair opportunity to labour profitably. The skill and solvency of the landed proprietors, added to a determination on their parts to cultivate the land upon the principles of a fair return for capital invested, co-existent with, and dependent upon, a fair remuneration to the labourer, will do much to bring the irregular peasantry into a regular state. It will also wean them from that root of idleness and mischief, the potato, by accustoming them to a diet of bread and meat—a change incalculable for the good it will effect, if happily made to supersede the old system of a reckless rental, a small potato patch, a multitudinous family, and a pig.

The recommendation of the Government to advance money to construct the railway from Dublin to Galway has received the sanction of Parliament, and the sum of £500,000 has been ordered to be paid out of the Consolidated Fund for that purpose. This, also, may turn out a favourable circumstance for Ireland. Although the country is not in a condition to lend money, and although much may be said in favour of allowing railway speculators, whether in Ireland or elsewhere, to raise their funds in open market, the circumstances of Ireland justify the Government in stretching a point in both respects; and in this instance the country are fain to hope that the large advance just authorised is safe and prudent, and made on a reasonably good security. There can be little doubt that the judicious expenditure of such a sum in the western districts will benefit the people; and as little, we should think, that the completion of such a line of railway will of itself very greatly assist in the introduction of other capital, and encourage individuals or corporations to imitate the example of the city of London in investing their money in the purchase of reclaimable land.

But among the favourable circumstances that are emerging into public notice from the thick darkness in which the prospects of Ireland have so long been shrouded, we hold the approaching visit of her Majesty to be among the most cheering and important. Her Majesty's successive visits to Scotland have made travelling in that country fashionable, and led to a large and useful expenditure of money. Ireland can boast scenery as romantic and as beautiful as Scotland; and once the yearly increasing stream of tourists is directed into that channel, they who wealth lures to the Emerald Isle will not fail to fructify. The pleasure-seeker is always a beneficent visitant. He leaves gold upon his footsteps, and flowers follow upon his track as upon that of the fairies in our nursery tales. Her Majesty, by setting the example of trusting to the Irish and admiring their country, will, there is every reason to believe, induce countless multitudes to explore its hitherto unknown beauty, and expend that surplus wealth of holiday-making Englishmen which is now expended upon the portions of the world that have greater claims upon our admiration than Ireland, and not a tithe or a hundredth part of the claim that she has upon our sympathy or commiseration. We must consider, too, that the Royal visit will in all probability be repeated periodically—a boon to Ireland which, though easily bestowed, will be of incalculable benefit to its recipient: her Majesty will deserve and receive the hearty homage and sincere gratitude of all the people, but more especially her long-suffering but attached Irish subjects. There is no night without a morrow, and the morrow of Irish misery seems to be dawning at last.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

MEETINGS.

YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND.—July 12: Special Meeting; Mr. Crawshay in the chair. The report of the committee of investigation, issued in the early part of the week, was carried with a slight verbal amendment made by the committee Mr. Allis, referring to the statement in the report that £7000 or £8000 belonging to the revenue account had been carried to the capital, and comparing it with a recent assertion of Mr. Hudson's, that the whole of the dividends had been fairly paid out of profits, moved a resolution condemnatory of the conduct of that gentleman; but, after a short conversation, the resolution was withdrawn; and a vote of thanks having been given to the chairman and the committee of investigation, the meeting separated.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR.—July 11: Special Meeting: New Broad-street: Lord Wharncliffe in the chair.—The bill of incorporation was sanctioned. It provides that the directors may negotiate with the East Indian Company; that the capital be £500,000, in £5 shares to be increased at will to £850 or £50 each, and that extensions, when necessary, may be undertaken The first section would be 35 miles in length

MOLD.—July 10: Adjourned Half-yearly Meeting: Moorgate-street: Mr. Thomas in the chair. There not being a sufficient attendance of shareholders, the proceedings were adjourned to the 9th of August. The chairman stated his belief that before the next meeting their line would be opened and have a good traffic on it.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK.—July 11: Special Meeting: York: Mr. R Davies in the chair The Lord Mayor of York asked for an adjournment till the 19th, as the committee of investigation had not been able to complete their report. A shareholder proposed that the number of directors be increased to twelve.

MALTON AND DRIFFIELD.—July 4. Half-yearly Meeting: the Earl of Carlisle in the chair. By the report presented, it appeared that a sum was owing to the bankers of this company of £11,000 to £12, but that there are large arrears of calls. The uncertainty about the construction of the Malton and Driffield branch had injured the property of the company. It was resolved, on the suggestion and proposal of [illegible] that the line should be completed and [illegible] traffic is anticipated sufficient to pay 3½ per cent. on completion of the works.

The first report of the YORK AND NORTH MIDLAND committee of investigation, just issued, especially narrates the transactions of the purchase of the Hull and Selby shares by Mr. Hudson. The sum of £58,842 17s. 10d being the sum paid to Mr. Hudson by the company for his purchase, with 5 per cent. interest, is to be repaid, and the shares are to be transferred to Mr. Hudson. Falsified returns have been made of the earnings of the line. Mr. Peter Clarke, the officer who was concerned in making these entries, resigns his office in August. An amount of £70,000 to £80,000 will be required to put the books in order; and so carelessly has the business been conducted, that the committee crave the patience of the proprietors for the results of their continued investigation.

The Doncaster portion of the GREAT NORTHERN will be ready for the visitors to the September races.

The GRAVESEND line will now certainly be opened on the 2nd for public use.

In the winding-up of the NORTHAMPTON, LINCOLN, AND HULL there are between 2000 and 3000 persons liable as contributaries for the legal expenses.

The outstanding liabilities in the winding-up of the EASTERN COUNTIES AND NORTHERN COUNTIES JUNCTION amount to nearly £200 l. There were no less than 500 provisional committee men in the origin of the scheme.

The LEEDS AND THIRSK was formally opened on the 9th. The line passes through most beautiful districts, affording visitors full views of the valleys of the Aire, Ure, Wharfe, the Crimple, and the Nidd. Leeds and Manchester, by this route, are brought into [illegible] direct communication with the north.

IRELAND.—In our paper of last week, it was stated that the first Electric Telegraph work was to be in Ireland, but has just been erected on part of the great southern and Western Railway. A correspondent states this to be wrong, as one was laid up several years ago on the Dalkey Atmospheric Railway, and is still in existence.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The accounts this week from Paris are chiefly taken up with the recent occurrences at Rome, and their probable consequences. The only domestic intelligence of any note is the return of the Conservative candidates, by a large majority, at the elections, which commenced in Paris on Sunday. There were eleven vacancies, and all have been filled up by the Moderates who were put forward by the club of the Union Electorale.

M. de Lamartine has not refused to join the Loret. In the other departments, the Moderate candidates are successful

A motion for the raising of the state of siege of Paris was negatived on Tuesday by the Legislative Assembly, by a majority of 370 to 131.

On Monday, a vote of thanks to the army in Italy, failed, in consequence of the Left having refused to vote, and thus rendered the proceedings nugatory.

The warlike preparations at Toulon, having reference to the expedition at Rome, have been stopped, in consequence of the cessation of hostilities. A direct post-office service will be established between that port and Civita Vecchia during the occupation of Rome by the French army. The departures are to take place every two days.

Accounts from Bordeaux mention that the appearance of corn crops in the Gironde is admirable. The beans have suffered from the intense heat. The potato crop in that district promises a fair average return; and the vineyards, which it was feared had been seriously injured by the late frosts, now give hope of a moderate stock of wine.

M. Desnyn De l'Huys is the new French Ambassador at London.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT.—Accounts from Turin of the 7th inst. announce that the negotiations for peace with Austria, which had been interrupted, had been renewed. The Austrian Government had abandoned its exorbitant pretensions, and proposed more moderate but at the same time unacceptable conditions. The commercial question still continued to offer the principal difficulties

King Victor Emmanuel was completely recovered, and resided in the Villa Moncalieri.

VENICE.—Venice still holds out against its Austrian besiegers. The people have unanimously refused to accept the conditions of surrender offered by the Austrian commissioners.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The slow but certain advance of the combined Imperial forces towards the centre of Hungary has called forth all the energies of the great Hungarian leader, Kossuth. This extraordinary man has appealed, in a proclamation couched in the most eloquent and impassioned terms, to his countrymen to make a grand effort to repel the invader. In this document the priests are ordered to take up the cross, and to head their parishioners in the defence of their religion and liberty. The people are to arm themselves as they best can, "with scythes, pickaxes," &c. The line of the Theiss and the fords of that river are to be defended; and the inhabitants of the towns and villages shall, on the approach of the enemy, leave their houses and homes, and, carrying away all provisions, take refuge in the fastnesses of the mountains and the marshes of the morasses. They are further instructed to set fire to the places in which the enemy are quartered, and to molest them by nocturnal attacks. M. Kossuth finally states that the Hungarian army now numbers 200,000 men. This proclamation, it is thought, cannot fail to act most powerfully on the Hungarians.

The Emperor of Austria returned to his palace at Schönbrun, on the 5th inst.

The head-quarters of Prince Paskiewitch were on the 30th ult. at Torro, near Tokay.

Kossuth left Pesth for Szegedin on the 1st inst.

The Imperialist troops have been forced to retreat from the tête de pont at Atsh; and General Haynau, whose head-quarters are at Raab, is opposed by 80,000 men, under Gen. Georgey.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN

Accounts from Hamburg announce that on the 6th instant 20,000 Danes sallied forth from the fortress of Fredericia, drove the Schleswig-Holstein troops away, took their entrenchments, captured several pieces of artillery, and also much ammunition. The loss of the Schleswig-Holsteiners was very great, including several chiefs of the staff. The greatest consternation and confusion among the Germans. It is acknowledged on all hands to have been a terrific engagement, the combatants firing at five paces' distance, and then rushing at each other bayonet in hand.

PRUSSIA.

An order in council of his Majesty, published on the 8th instant, names the 27th instant as the day for the general election of members of the Second Chamber of the Prussian Parliament, which, according to a former decree, is to meet at Berlin on the 7th of next month

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to the 29th ult. have come to hand during the week. The cholera was marching rapidly with desolating strides. St. Louis, Cincinnati, and New Orleans suffered the greatest amount of mortality in proportion to their respective populations. Each city averaged nearly one hundred deaths per day from cholera. In New York, the deaths from March the 19th and the 29th ult. numbered 159, out of 333 cases.

A shocking accident had occurred at the Falls of Niagara. Miss de Forrest, of Buffalo, accompanied by a friend, was rash enough to venture on the rocks above the cataract, and was swept over the fearful precipice, together with Mr. Charles C. Addington, of Buffalo, who plunged into the torrent, in the vain hope of saving her.

At New Orleans, the great overseer at Suares had been closed; the water was receding.

The cholera had committed dreadful ravages in Texas and Mexico. At San Antonio, Texas, 750 people died out of a population of 1600. At New Braunfels, Texas, nearly all the inhabitants had repaired to the mountains, as a refuge from the pestilence.

CANADA AND NEW BRUNSWICK

There is no news of interest from Canada: all was still quiet. It was said that some arrests for high treason might be shortly expected.

Forest fires in New Brunswick and Maine, which have now been raging for weeks, have destroyed hundreds of thousands of acres of timber.

IRELAND.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT.—The Corporation of Dublin has determined upon soliciting her Majesty to permit it the honour of receiving her in state about midway between this city and Kingstown. The Directors of the Dublin and Kingstown Railway have ordered a state carriage to be built for the use of her Majesty. It will be a splendid vehicle: the cost somewhere between £500 and £600. The directors have received a satisfactory from the Lord Lieutenant that her Majesty will land at Kingstown, and travel by the railway to Dublin, where the carriages of his Excellency will be in waiting to convey the Royal family to the Castle or Viceregal Lodge, whichever residence may be more agreeable to her Majesty.

REMOVAL FROM THE COUNTRY OF THE STATE PRISONERS.—On Monday, shortly before seven o'clock, Messrs. Smith O'Brien, Meagher, Mitchel, and O Doughoe were removed to the vessel which was to convey them to their place of transportation. Mr O'Brien was accompanied to the time of his departure by his lady, his brother, the Rev. R. O'Brien, and his sister. The friends and relatives of the other prisoners were also in attendance. Mr. Meagher had a volume of Macpherson's "Poems of Ossian" in his hands, to remind him, he said of the old country he was leaving. The prisoners were conveyed from Richmond Bridewell in the prison van to the Pigeon House, where the Trident was waiting with her steam up to convey them on board the Swift at Kingstown. A large number of persons had assembled on the Kingstown pier to witness their departure, but neither Mr. O'Brien nor Mr. Meagher appeared on deck, but went at once to the cabin. At a few minutes before three o'clock the Swift proceeded on her voyage

ORANGE PROCESSIONS.—The Bishop of Down and Connor has published a letter, addressed to the members of the Established Church in his diocese from forming in party demonstrations on the 12th of July. The authorities have also taken precautions to guard against a collision between the Orangemen and the other inhabitants of the country.

RELIEF OF TRUSTEES.—The Attorney and Solicitor-General have brought in a bill to make further provision for the relief of trustees. The bill recites that whereas difficulties have arisen in the transfer of securities vested in trustees in certain cases under the provisions of an act passed in the tenth and seventh years of the reign of her present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for better securing Trust Funds, and for the Relief of Trustees," and it is expedient to make further provision for carrying into effect the objects of the said act: It is therefore enacted that in any petition presented to the Lord Chancellor or Master of the Rolls in the matter of the said act it shall appear to the Judge of the Court of Chancery before whom such petition shall be heard, that any persons, whether infants or adults, lunatics or idiots, trustees, executors, executors, or administrators, or otherwise, upon trusts within the meaning of the said recited act, and that the major part of such persons are desirous of transferring, paying, or delivering the same to the Accountant-General of the High Court of Chancery under the provisions of the said recited act, but that for any reason the concurrence of the other or others of them cannot be had, it shall be lawful for such Judge to make an order and direct such transfer, payment, or delivery to be made by the major part of such persons without the concurrence of the other or others of them; and where any such moneys or Government or Parliamentary securities shall be deposited with any banker, broker, or other depositary, it shall be lawful for such Judge as aforesaid to make such order for the payment or delivery of such moneys, Government or Parliamentary securities, to the major part of such trustees, executors, administrators, [illegible] as aforesaid, for the purpose of being paid or delivered to the said Accountant-General, as to the said Judge shall seem meet; and every transfer [illegible] munities, stocks, or securities, and every payment of money or delivery of securities, in pursuance of any such order, shall be as valid and effectual as if the same had been made on the authority or by the act of all the persons entitled to the annuities, stocks, or securities so transferred, or the moneys or securities so paid or delivered respectively, and shall fully protect and indemnify the Governor and Company of the Bank of England, the East India Company, and the South Sea Company, and all other persons acting under or in pursuance of such order.

TO LETTER-CARRIERS.—The Leeds Times says—"We received a letter yesterday containing sixpence, and a [illegible] addition the sixpence—To carriers and sorters—Don't steal this sixpence, for then it is but a sorrow, as you did last week, and so deprive me of my Sunday paper."

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

On the motion of the Earl of CARLISLE, the Drainage of Lands Bill passed through committee, and was reported to the House.

On the motion of Lord CAMPBELL, the Sheriff of Westmoreland Bill was read a third time and passed.

On the motion of Lord EDDISBURY, the Assaults (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

On the motion of Earl GREY, the Mutiny and Desertion (India) Bill passed through committee, and was reported to the House.

PRISON DISCIPLINE.

Lord BROUGHAM added two resolutions to those he had moved on Friday last on the subject of prison discipline, for the purpose of showing the necessity which existed for separate confinement in order to avoid contamination, and to shorten imprisonment before trial by making more frequent gaol deliveries, which might be effected by the county courts, the judges of which were perfectly competent to that duty. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

SCOTCH MARRIAGES.

The amendments to the MARRIAGE (Scotland) Bill having been considered,

The LORD ADVOCATE moved that the bill be read a third time on Monday next.

Mr. F. MACKENZIE complained that the committee to whom the bill had been referred had refused to receive the proffered evidence of eight gentlemen from various parts of Scotland peculiarly competent to give expression to the popular opinion on the subject. He opposed the measure as altogether contrary to the opinions of high legal authorities in Scotland, and to the feelings of the Scotch people.

After some discussion,

Mr. HUME gave the bill his most unqualified opposition; and, in answer to the argument that the bill had been three years before the House, all he hoped was, that it might be for three years longer.

On a division, the motion for a third reading of the bill on Monday next was carried by a majority of 5 only, the numbers being 73 to 68—a result which was received with loud cheers by the opponents of the measure.

Mr. GLADSTONE expressed a hope, after what was now seen to be the sense of a large portion of the House, and what was known as to the sense of the people of Scotland on the subject, that no further attempt would be made to waste the time of the House by pressing forward the measure

Lord J. RUSSELL replied, that, after what had taken place, he would consider between then and Thursday what course to pursue. In the meantime, as the motion had been carried, perhaps there would be no objection to reading the bill a third time at once.

This proposition was opposed by Mr. Mackenzie, Mr. Hume, and Lord Lincoln; when the debate was adjourned to Thursday next.

Mr. HUME hoped the Registration of Births, &c. Bill would be considered at the same time

Mr. BOTHERIE observed that many hon. members who objected to the Marriage Bill were favourable to that for Registration.

The House then, at a few minutes past four o'clock, suspended its sitting to six o'clock.

AUDIT OF RAILWAY ACCOUNTS.—The Audit of Railway Accounts Bill was brought from the Lords and read a first time, the second reading being fixed for Thursday next.

METROPOLITAN GRAVEYARDS.

Lord ASHLEY, in reply to Mr. MACKINNON, stated that there could be no doubt whatever that the graveyards of the metropolis, and other large towns, were a dangerous evil, and often exercised a baneful influence upon those living near them. On Saturday morning the Board of Health had received a report from Bristol fully bearing out that fact.

DANISH BLOCKADE.

Lord PALMERSTON answered Mr. SANDARS by stating that he had removed the Consuls (or Vice-Consuls) at Stettin and Swinemunde in consequence of their having transgressed the line of duty prescribed for such offices by taking upon themselves a responsibility which they were by no means authorised or justified in doing, with reference to the Danish blockade.

RAILWAYS IN IRELAND.

The House having resolved itself into a committee of the whole House,

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER rose for the purpose of submitting a resolution that £500,000 be granted to complete the line of railway between Dublin and Galway, the whole estimated expense of the line yet to be carried out from Athlone to Galway being £900,000. He proposed that the sum advanced by Government interest at 3½ per cent. should be paid, repayment of the capital sum not to commence before the expiration of ten years, and then to be made by instalments, the security for the loan being the whole line between Dublin and Galway. The money to be advanced in sums not exceeding £100,000 at a time; no new advance to be made until it was shown that the previous advance had been fully expended upon the works then in hand. For every £100,000 advanced by Government, the company would have to advance £50,000, and it was proposed that unless the line was completed within the stipulated period of two years, the Government should take possession of the line and dispose of it in the way deemed most expedient. He was happy in having it in his power to state that there was increased disposition on the part of capitalists to invest money in the particular line in the event of the completion of that only needed to afford such facilities as that now proposed for more ready access to the various portions of the district, and for bringing back the produce to the English markets, to increase this tendency in a greater degree.

Mr. FRENCH, in a speech of statistical details as to the cost and receipts of foreign and British railways, drew the attention of the House to the necessity of securing the completion of trunk lines of railway in Ireland, but concluded without submitting any amendment in furtherance of that more general object

After speeches from Mr. Goulburn, Mr. Hume, Mr. O. Gore, Mr. Roebuck, Mr. Newdegate, Mr. W. Barron, Mr. Sharman Crawford, Sir T. D. Ackland, Mr. Frewen, Sir L. O'Brien, and Mr. H. Herbert, and explanations from Mr. Hume, Mr. Roebuck, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer, the resolution was agreed to, as was also a second for the advance of £190,000 on account of distressed unions in Ireland.

POOR RELIEF BILL (IRELAND)

On the House resuming, the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill was read a third time; and, on the question that it do pass,

Mr J. O CONNELL moved a clause to the following effect: "And whereas, by the Act 1 and 2 Vic., c. 56, the Poor-Law Commissioners are empowered to grant certificates to persons to be qualified to vote, provided for and recover relief, a certificate to that effect to be furnished to the owner of the land by the Board of Guardians, and that such certificate should entitle such owner to take forcible possession."

Mr. GROGAN, for the reason that such cases were already provided for by statute, did not see what benefit could arise from adopting the clause, and should therefore oppose it; on the further ground, also, that it was inconsistent with the principle of the bill

On a division the clause was negatived by a majority of 74, the numbers being 23 to 97.

Mr. NAPIER moved the following clause:—"And whereas it is just and reasonable that the deduction for poor-rate claimable by the person immediately liable to pay tithe-rent charge should not exceed the deduction by law allowed in the case of any fee-farm rent or other rent-charge chargeable upon and payable out of the rents and profits of the rateable property charged with such rent and rent-charge: Be it therefore enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any person immediately liable to pay tithe-rent charge to deduct therefrom, for every pound in value thereof, any further or greater sum than one-half of the poundage of any rate made after the passing of this act, for the relief of the poor: Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be taken to alter or affect the right of deduction of the entire poundage of any rate made before the passing of this act."

Sir G. GREY thought very serious objections existed to the proposition, and must, therefore, oppose it

After some discussion, the House divided, when the clause was negatived by a majority of 75; the numbers being 99 to 24.

Several other clauses were proposed, and summarily negatived.

On the question being again put that the bill do pass,

Mr. STAFFORD complained that the Poor-Law Amendment Act of the last session of the bill did not bear out its title, their object being not so much to amend the Poor-Law for Ireland as to introduce perfectly new principles, those of a maximum rate and a rate in aid. He thought that a measure of such importance ought to have attended during the passing of the bill, and that the right hon. Baronet, the member for Tamworth, ought to have explained to the committee the details of his plan for regenerating Ireland, propounded earlier in the session

Mr. HENLEY replied that he had to plead guilty to the charge of being absent when the measure was under discussion, his chief reason for not desiring to take part in the discussion being that after having sat on the committee up-stairs he could not under those circumstances be a student, if not a member of the committee, without its sittings. It, then, he had voted on the various clauses, it must have voted in deference to authority on one side of the House or the other, and under those circumstances he had not meddled with the bill in the House. Had he been present he should have voted with those who opposed the maximum rate. On the general question of the bill itself he was of opinion that the result would be left, as it would in all Ireland. Efforts should be made by the landlords of Ireland to withdraw from dowse once on those who were employed vast numbers of those who were unemployed; and he looked to other measures which had passed, and were passing, as infinitely more calculated to advance the great object, rather than the present bill. He should be glad to [illegible] himself thereon, and if the bill made pauperism bearable by the complete emancipation of the soil, he should rejoice at that result, and should only vote for it because there seemed to be nothing better to propose as a substitute.

After a few words from Mr. H. Herbert and Sir D. Norreys, the bill passed.

The Joint-Stock Companies Act (1848) Amendment Bill passed through committee.

The Newgate Gaol (Dublin) Bill, and the Highway Rate Bill, severally passed through committee.

The Poor Relief (Cities and Boroughs) Bill was read a second time.

The Titles of Religious Congregations (Scotland) Bill passed through committee.

The Berwick Relief Bill, and the Trustees Relief Bill, were read a second time.

The Turnpike Trusts Union Bill passed through committee.

The Bribery at Elections Bill was considered and amended, and ordered to be read a third time on Friday.

The Friendly Societies (No 2) Bill was read a second time.

The Bankruptcy (Ireland) Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Real and Personal Property Transfer Bill was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. C. Lewis obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend an act to authorise the inclosure of certain lands, in pursuance of a special report of the Inclosure Commissioners for England and Wales.

The Solicitor-General obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend an act to regulate certain offices in the Petty Bag in the High Court of Chancery, the practice of the common law side of that court, and the Enrolment Office of that court.

Sir H. W. Clay obtained leave to bring in a bill to amend the law for the registration of certain documents commonly known as compound householders, and to facilitate the exercise by such persons of their right to vote in the election of borough members to serve in Parliament.

The three last-named bills were subsequently brought in and read a first time.

Mr. Gilpin, in the absence of Mr. Hawes, obtained leave to bring in a bill to facilitate the execution of conveyance and other instruments by and on behalf of the New Zealand Company.

Mr. Bagge moved for the following return of every requisition for negative search, in pursuance of the Act 7th and 8th Vict., c. 9, delivered unto or left with the Registrar of Judgments in Ireland, between the 1st day of January, 1848, and the 1st day of January, 1849, showing the date of each such requisition being delivered to the registrar, the date of the certificate given in pursuance of such requisition, the number of days which elapsed between the delivery of such requisition to the Registrar of Judgments, and the giving of the certificate to the person making such such requisition, and the stamp duty paid on each such negative search. Agreed to.

The House then adjourned at half-past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

The Inclosure Act (Extension of Powers) Bill and the Sites for Schools Bill severally went through committee.

THE RIVER PLATE.

Lord Colchester questioned the Government upon the progress of the negotiations between her Majesty's Government and the Governor of Buenos Ayres relative to the pacification of the countries bordering upon the Rio de la Plata.

The Marquis of Lansdowne replied that the English and French Governments were still engaged in negotiating a treaty, and therefore he could not state the distinct terms of the proposed arrangement. The negotiations were, however, in an advanced state, and he entertained a sanguine hope that the affairs of La Plata would be satisfactorily settled.

Lord Howden took the opportunity to give a narrative of the transactions in which he had a share. He condemned foreign intervention in disputes of this kind. The noble Lord informed their Lordships that he had received from her Majesty's Government thanks for the whole and every part of his conduct in relation to this matter.

The Earl of Harrowby, the Earl of Aberdeen, and Lord Beaumont made a few observations, and the subject dropped.

On the motion of the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill, brought up from the Commons, was read a first time, and the second reading fixed for Friday.

On the motion of Lord Edmesbury, the Marriages in Foreign Countries Facilitating Bill was read a second time.

Lord Montegle laid on the table a bill to provide for the taxation of costs in their Lordships' House in the passing of private bills.

It was read a first time. Adjourned to Thursday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Tuesday.

The bill for authorising the sale of the Royal Pavilion at Brighton was read a second time.

EXPORT OF COALS TO FRANCE.

Lord H. Vane inquired if the attention of the Government had been directed to the high duty imposed by France on coals imported into that country by sea, compared with those exported across the land frontier.

Lord Palmerston said the attention of the Government had been directed for years to the subject, but no communication had been made to the French Government relative thereto within the last twelve months. He considered that the differences of duties between sea-borne and land-borne coals was not in accordance with the convention of 1826, and he promised to make a representation to that effect to the French Government.

JUVENILE OFFENDERS

Mr. Monckton Milnes called attention to the treatment and condition of juvenile criminals in this country. He suggested the establishment of some sort of asylum for the reformation of young criminals. He moved for leave to bring in a bill to carry out his suggestion.

Sir G. Grey would not oppose the bringing in of the bill, though he would not pledge himself to support it hereafter.

After a few remarks from Mr. Hankes, Sir J. Pakington, and Mr. Henley, leave was given to bring in the bill.

THE IRISH CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT.

Mr B. Osborne then moved that the House resolve itself into a committee of the whole House, to consider the state and temporalities of the Church of Ireland. In support of this motion, the hon. gentleman made a long and elaborate speech, which he commenced by giving an amusing account of the birth, parentage, and abandonment of the Irish Church question, appealing in favour of his views, the opinions embodied in the speeches formerly delivered on the subject by the present occupants of the Treasury bench. He then, after showing the present position of the Established Church in Ireland, and denying that it secured the spread of Protestantism in that country, or improved the morals of its people, addressed himself to an examination of the temporalities of that church. The property of the Irish Church was much greater than [illegible], exceeding it at its sphere of operation was small, and, in fact, was the contrary. [illegible] temporalities should be retained a course which might be pursued without incurring the guilt of sacrilege. He would reduce the dignitaries of the church to one Archbishop at £4000 a year, and five Bishops at £2000 a year each. The surplus which might remain, after providing for all the real wants of the establishment, he would apply nearly to the general education of all classes of the people. He did not wish to abolish the Irish Church, nor did he desire to interfere with the vested rights of the present incumbents. But he warned the Government that something must be done in the direction pointed out by him, if it would preserve the tranquillity of Ireland; and he implored the House not to be induced to negative his motion by any allegations which might come from the Treasury bench, to the effect that this was not the proper time for the submission of such a motion.

Mr. Moore seconded the motion.

Sir G. Grey had no objection in meeting the motion with a direct negative. He did merely think that it was brought forward at an improper time, he would have contented himself by moving the previous question. But the speech by which the hon. gentleman supported the motion gave such a cast and character to his proposition that it was necessary to give a decided vote on this occasion. There could be no doubt that the aim and object of the hon. member was to subvert the Church Establishment in Ireland. Such a scheme could not have any practical effect in remedying the evils under which Ireland was suffering. The agitation of such a question at this moment would give rise to the most bitter antagonism, and without allaying any of the evils under which that country laboured. There was a vast difference between considering the propriety of modifying an existing institution and setting about to destroy it. For the total subversion of the Established Church in Ireland he (Sir George Grey) was not prepared, nor did he believe that the House would assent to any such proposition, however veiled. The subject of a modification of the Church established in Ireland was one of great difficulty, and he did not think that it could be satisfactorily approached until they had some reasonable prospect of being able to place the church of the majority of the people of Ireland on a different footing to that it then occupied. Should they be able to make this preliminary arrangement, then it would be time enough to consider the expediency of remodelling the church of the minority. Until he could see a chance of dealing fairly with the Roman Catholic Church, he could not assent to such a motion as the one submitted to the House. He had no wish to conceal any opinion formerly professed by him with respect to the Irish Church Establishment, but he could not agree to a motion which he thought ill-timed and calculated to give rise to agitation and lead to results of a merely speculative character.

Mr. Roche supported the motion, thinking the course pursued by the Government a very inconsistent one, considering the former declarations of those composing it. The evil complained of in fire and was an Established Church, and it appeared that the remedy contemplated by the Government [illegible] not to remove it, but to give Ireland another establishment.

Mr Hamilton spoke at some length in support of the Irish Church, the abuses of which he contended were either removed or in process of removal.

Mr. Hume supported the motion, contending that the monster grievance of Ireland was the [illegible] of his race caused by the Irish Church.

Mr. Fagan also supported it. Even admitting that this was not the proper time [illegible] question, he could not refrain from recording his opinion [illegible] of a motion [illegible] submitted by the hon. member for Middlesex.

Mr. Napier followed in opposition to the motion. The Irish Church was no burden to the State. Its property was its own, and it possessed it as the representative of the ancient Church of Ireland. To deprive it, therefore, of all or a portion of its property, would be a wanton and unjustifiable spoliation.

Mr. [illegible] would vote for the motion, although he would not countenance any proposition which would in his opinion lead to the demolition of the Irish Church.

Mr. Reynolds supported the motion, and thanked Mr. Osborne for introducing it. He thought that the discussion upon it would do much good in Ireland.

After some observations from Major Beresford and Mr. John O'Connell, and in reply from Mr. Osborne, the House divided, when the numbers were—For the motion, 103; against it, 170: majority against, 67.

Adjourned at half past one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Wednesday.

The House assembled at noon, and sat till six o'clock

TRIENNIAL PARLIAMENTS.

Mr. T. D'Eyncourt moved the second reading of the Duration of Parliaments Bill, which had for its object to reduce the term of Parliaments from seven to three years.

Sir G. Grey opposed the bill, on the grounds that it was uncalled for by public feeling, and calculated to produce great inconvenience, because it would take nearly three years before honourable members could become conversant with the business of legislation. The right hon. Baronet moved as an amendment that the bill be read a second time that day three months.

A discussion of some length followed, in the course of which

Mr. Hume advised his friends to abandon the Ministerial benches, to pass the gangway, and to leave the Government to its fate; because it was manifest that they were determined to oppose all reform. He considered that it would be far better to have gentlemen opposite in office.

Colonel Salwey, who spoke from the Opposition bench, declared that, in his opinion, no honest Liberal could any longer sit by the side of the Whigs, who had one set of principles to profess when out of office, and a totally different set of principles when in power.

The House having divided, there were, for the second reading of the bill, 57; against it, 132: majority against the bill, 75.

The bill was thus thrown out.

NUISANCE OF SMOKE.

Mr. Mackinnon moved the committal of the Smoke Prohibition Bill.

Mr. Roebuck opposed it, and moved, as an amendment, that the bill be committed that day three months.

After a discussion, the House divided. For going into committee, 83; against it, 64. Majority, 19.

The House went into committee, and after a long debate upon the nature and qualities of "opaque smoke," which arose on the first clause,

Mr. Roebuck moved the chairman report progress

Sir James Graham denounced the bill as one that could not be amended so as to be made practicable. This bill, which had come down from the House of Lords, was the most absurd piece of legislation he had ever had the ill-fortune to read.

Mr. Mackinnon informed the right hon. Baronet that the bill which he had so severely criticised was framed by a committee of the House of Commons.

Progress was ultimately reported—no progress beyond talk having been made.

The adjourned debate on Mr. Hume's motion for the second reading of the County Rates and Expenditure Bill was resumed.

Sir J. Pakington, who had moved, as an amendment, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the county rates and expenditure, said that he was willing to accept the amendment in the terms proposed on a former occasion by Mr. M. Gibson.

The select committee in the amended terms was agreed to, the second reading of the bill being thus negatived.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Thursday.

On the motion of Lord Campbell, the Quarter Sessions Proceeding Bill was read a second time

On the motion of the Earl of Carlisle, the Drainage of Lands Bill was read a third time and passed.

CRIMINAL LAW CONSOLIDATION.

Lord Brougham introduced a bill to consolidate the criminal law relating to homicide and offences against the person, which was read a first time.

PORTPATRICK AND DONAGHADEE.

The Marquis of Londonderry moved that after the large sum of money which had been expended at the national expense on the harbours of Portpatrick and Donaghadee, amounting to upwards of £400,000, and the grant last year of £5,000, by her Majesty's present Government, to enlarge and dredge the basins for the reception of large steam-vessels, it is highly inexpedient to remove the packet from the station, and give up the desirable communication between the south-west of Scotland and the north of Ireland.

The Marquis of Clanricarde said that the alteration had taken place for the public convenience.

Lord Rose contended that the harbour of Donaghadee ought to be kept up as a harbour of refuge.

After a few words from the Earl of Galloway,

The Marquis of Clanricarde explained, and their Lordships divided, when there appeared—Contents, 18; Non-contents, 31: Majority against the motion, 13. Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Thursday.

The Speaker took the chair at twelve o'clock.

MERCHANT SEAMEN AND PILOTS

The House resolved itself into a committee of the whole House on these questions.

Mr. Labouchere moved resolutions upon which to found two bills, one for the amendment of the laws relating to pilotage, and another for the improvement of the mercantile marine. The bill relative to light dues and pilotage he hoped to pass during the present session, as that duty was the heaviest of the light dues should be made at once. That which he meant to bring in for the improvement of the mercantile marine he did not propose to press, but to have it printed and circulated, so that its provisions might be well considered by the House.

After some discussion, a resolution—agreeing with the necessity of introducing measures upon the subject—was then agreed to.

The House then resumed, and leave was given to bring in the necessary bills.

The House then adjourned until five o'clock.

ST MARGARET'S CHURCH AND THE CHOLERA.

In the evening sitting,

Mr. Bernal rose to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the fact that, while the cholera was advancing with great rapidity, the members of that house were assailed by several nuisances which existed about the house, and particularly by the smell arising from the vaults of St. Margaret's Church, which were often so overpowering, that the members of committees were obliged to close their windows. He would also advert to the state of sewerage, which, after all their expensive measures, was so bad in his own neighbourhood, a mile from the House, that he had often been obliged to close his window

Mr. G. Grey said that all the powers which were vested in the Board of Health were being used to clear away such causes of complaint, and he himself, when he had his attention called to such subjects, always communicated with the Board of Health or to the police.

Lord Ashley said that the Board of Health had no jurisdiction to interfere, except where the cholera had broken out. They had the power to do anything for the permanent removal of disease. He admitted that the present state of the metropolis was bad enough, but not anything like what had been represented by his hon. friend (Mr. Bernal). He was convinced, however, that, should the cholera was spreading rapidly in the metropolis, and unless something was done no one could tell what would be the consequences.

Viscount Ebrington said that many of the nuisances in the neighbourhood of the House had been removed, and the drains under it were in a healthy state; but the exhalations from St. Margaret's Churchyard, which it was stated affected parts of the House, it was impossible for the Commissioners of Sewers to keep out.

Mr. Hume called upon the noble Lord at the head of the Government whether, when the Health of Towns Bill was brought in, he and those who supported him were not the cause of the Metropolis being left out of the provisions of that bill.

Lord John Russell said it was thought necessary by his noble friend at the head of the Woods and Forests, that a separate bill should be brought in for the metropolis. He had spoken to his noble friend with respect to the introduction of that bill, and he had told him that he thought it would not be desirable till the Commissioners of Sewers had proceeded further to bring in the bill.

THE SCOTCH BILLS

Lord John Russell said he wished to state the course the Government intended to adopt with respect to the two bills which affected Scotland, the Registration and Marriage Bills: and he had now to state that, after the discussion the other day, and the opinion expressed by the House in regard to the sentiments of the people of Scotland upon them, it was not the intention of the Government to proceed with these bills during the present session. (Hear)

The orders of the day respecting those bills were accordingly discharged.

SUPPLY

The House having gone into Committee of Supply, for the purpose of voting the Ordnance estimates,

Mr. Hume proposed that no vote should be taken until the report of the Select Committee on the Ordnance estimates, which had been engaged on the subject since the beginning of the session, was laid before the House.

After a few observations from [illegible] or four times, on each occasion negativing the motion,

Lord J. Russell at length consented to postpone the estimates to Monday, and the House resumed.—Adjourned.

Launch of the Bosphorus.—On Saturday afternoon last another iron screw-steamer, the property of the General Screw Steam Shipping Company, destined to run between Liverpool and Constantinople, was launched from the extensive building and iron-works of Messrs. Mare and Co., Blackwall. There were a number of distinguished persons present, amongst whom were the Turkish Ambassador and suite, Edward Zohrab, Esq., the Ottoman Consul-General; Captain Ford, of the Ottoman steam navy; the Marquess Lisburn, Viscount and Viscountess Moncorvo, with the Baron and Miss Moncorvo; Lady Morgan, Lady Blake, Mr. Milner Gibson, and a large party of ladies and gentlemen. Miss S. Zohrab, niece of the Turkish Consul, performed the ceremony of naming the vessel, by throwing the customary bottle of wine at her bows, and naming her the Bosphorus, as she glided slowly and smoothly into the element amidst the cheers of all present. She rose most buoyantly, and as she settled on the water a little by the stern, she drew forth general admiration for her symmetrical proportions, which are—length between perpendiculars, 176ft.; breast [illegible] depth, 16ft.; builds her burden in tons, 530. Subsequently the company [illegible] on board, and left, where they were very handsomely entertained [illegible]

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

Her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, with the youthful Princes and Princesses, have enjoyed uninterrupted retirement during the past week in the Isle of Wight

Sir Robert and Lady Peel and Miss Peel arrived at Osborne on Saturday, on a visit to the Queen, and remained the guests of her Majesty until Tuesday morning. There have been no other additions to the Royal circle.

On Sunday, the Court attended divine service in Whippenham Church, where the Rev. Mr. Protheroe officiated.

On Thursday his Royal Highness Prince Albert, attended by Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps and Colonel Seymour, Equerry in Waiting, crossed to Cowes in the Fairy Royal yacht, and proceeded to Winchester to see the cathedral and college at that city. His Royal Highness during the day presented new colours to the 13th Royal Welsh Fusiliers in the barrack-ground.

The Queen and the Prince and the Royal children have taken their accustomed riding and walking exercise during the week.

The Countess of Desart has relieved the Countess of Mount Edgecumbe as the Lady in Waiting on her Majesty.

GRAND ENTERTAINMENT AT CAMBRIDGE HOUSE.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge had a dinner-party on Monday last, at Cambridge House. The company consisted of his Excellency the Hanoverian Minister, the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, the Duchess of Buccleuch, the Marquis of Winchester, the Marquis of Anglesey, the Marchioness of Ailesbury, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Granby, the Earl and Countess of Wilton, the Earl and Countess of Shelburne, Lord and Lady Marian Alford, Lord Elphinstone, Lord and Lady F. Gordon Hallyburton, and the Earl of Mansfield.

The Duchess of Cambridge afterwards gave a ball, which was numerously attended by the principal Nobility. Her Royal Highness received her distinguished visitors in the principal drawingroom. The other drawingrooms and the rest of the state saloons were opened for the reception, and, together with the grand staircase and the inner hall, were most tastefully decorated with flowering shrubs and plants.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester, attended by Lady Caroline Murray, arrived at twenty minutes before eleven o'clock.

At eleven o'clock their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, the Hereditary Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, Prince George, and the Princess Mary, followed by the assembled guests, entered the ball-room, which was brilliantly lit by three magnificent crystal lustres. Herr Strauss and his orchestra were in attendance in this room. A quadrille was then formed, and dancing commenced.

At twelve o'clock a sumptuous supper was served in the state dining-room.

The Duchess of Gloucester took her departure about one o'clock on Tuesday morning. Her Serene Highness Prince Edward remained till the close of the ball, which was kept up until four o'clock on Tuesday morning, when a cotillon was danced as a finale; Herr Strauss and his orchestra introducing the "Wanderer" waltzes, and the "Alfred" and "Kahnka" polkas.

The company took their departure at half-past four o'clock.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent has left town, on a visit to her Majesty, at Osborne.

The Prince and Princess Doria Pamphili, accompanied by the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, have left town for Alton Towers.

Madame de Chrapowitzsky (née Princess Scherbatoff), accompanied by her sister, the Princess Scherbatoff, has arrived at Mivart's Hotel, from Paris

The Queen of the Belgians and the Countess de Neuilly arrived in town on Wednesday morning from St. Leonard's, paid a visit to her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent, and par-took of a déjeûner with her Royal Highness, at her residence, 4, Clarence House, St. James'.

The Duke and Duchess of Norfolk were honoured with the presence of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, Prince George, and a distinguished circle last evening, at a grand banquet given by their Graces, at Norfolk House. The Duchess had afterwards an evening party to meet her illustrious guests. The marriage of the Lady Mary Howard with Lord Foley is fixed to take place on Monday evening, at seven o'clock, in the Chapel Royal, St. James's.

The Duchess Dowager of Bedford gave her second fête champêtre on Thursday, at Bedford Lodge, Campden-hill. Her Grace was again honoured with the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Prince George, and about 600 leading members of the aristocracy.

The Duke of Devonshire has arrived at his marine residence in Kemp Town, from Chatsworth.

The Marchioness de Villa Franca (Duchess de Medina Sidonia), who has just returned to Madrid, was received, on her arrival in that city, with bands of music, and immediately visited by the principal personages in the Spanish capital.

The Earl and Countess of Eglinton have left London for their marine residence, the Pavil ion, Ardrossan, Ayrshire.

Lady John Russell was safely delivered of a son on Tuesday night. The Countess of Minto arrived in town on Tuesday, and, on Wednesday morning, went to Lord John Russell's residence in Richmond Park.

His Excellency M. Drouyn de l'Huys, the newly-accredited Ambassador, in the room of Admiral de Cecille, arrived at Hereford House (the French Embassy) on Tuesday forenoon, from Paris, and at the earliest opportunity will present his credentials to the Queen.

Matrimonial Speculations.—We are assured that M. Thiers arrived in London yesterday; and it is added that the object of his visit is to open negotiations for a matrimonial treaty between the President of the French Republic and Madame la Duchesse de Montpensier, on board of which lady it is proposed to settle the question of precedence between the Comte de Paris and the possible issue of the proposed marriage; but this point, doubtless, has not escaped the attention of M. Thiers, who is not [illegible] in what way it

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

The Coast Defences.—The batteries on the Thames and Medway districts will all be completed in about two months from the present period, and will be of a very efficient description for the defence of these important navigable rivers. The number of guns to be mounted for the defence of these rivers is—13 at Shorn-mead, 13 at Coalhouse Point, 15 at Gravesend, and 30 at Tilbury Fort. The whole of the guns are 32-pounders, mounted on wooden carriages, and they are all to have iron platforms for being fired from, on a plan submitted by Lieutenant-Colonel Hardinge, R.H., Royal Artillery. The idea of having a more extended range than at present exists in Woolwich Marshes has been received, and the advantage of a three-mile range in an easterly direction is to be submitted to the committee on the ordnance estimates, now sitting.

Malleable Iron Screw Propellers.—An experiment is now in progress in the dockyard at Woolwich Dockyard to make screw propellers of malleable iron, to obviate the inconvenience arising from the use of cast-iron or brass ones. The screw propeller at present in course of formation, and making of malleable iron, is that of one of Samuda's steamers, has four feet of pitch in flanges and the centre completely formed, and when the other flange is fully added, will weigh 2½ tons, or 50 cwt. When dressed and finished for use it is calculated it will be 2½ tons weight, and will be 10 feet in diameter, the greatest breadth of the extremity of the flanges being about 6 feet. The workman gives the curved form to the flanges with a flat-faced hammer, presenting a surface of 10 by 6 inches, by causing a steel bar of iron attached to a long iron rod betwixt the face of the hammer and the flange.

New Waistbelts, &c., for the Army.—Various improvements have just been made, under the immediate direction of Major General Brown, C.B., the Deputy-Adjutant-General of the forces, by Messrs. W. and G. Almond, O.S Bond-street, for the convenience of soldiers. One of the cross belts is to be discontinued, and, instead, a waist-belt is to be worn. This novelty will enable the soldier on the march to relieve the shoulder from the weight of a pouch full of ammunition, and shift the same more to the waist. The waist-belt is to fasten in the front with a brass plate. The frog for the bayonet is attached to this waist-belt, and so adjusted, by a peculiar method, as to suit the form of the wearer.

Uniforms of the Royal Marines.—The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty have issued the following circular, dated the 4th instant:—"The Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty are pleased to direct that the uniform shall be in every respect the same as at present, except that the skirt of the coatee is to be without lace, and a red stripe is to be introduced in the outer seam of the cloth trousers, the same as the infantry of the line; and officers hereafter joining on first appointment or from foreign service, will be allowed to wear their uniform with this alteration, which is to be adopted by the corps on the 23rd of April, 1850

The Siege Operations at Chatham.—It is not only decided by authority that these operations shall not take place this week, but, from inquiries instituted, it appears very improbable that the affair, on the grand scale at first contemplated, will take place at all this summer.

The Loss of the "Floridian" (German) Emigrant Ship.—During the last fortnight a number of bodies, supposed to be those of the unfortunate beings who perished in the Floridian emigrant ship, on the Long Sands, near Harlingen, have been picked up by the cruisers of Margate, Ramsgate, and that part of the coast. The remains are sadly disfigured and mutilated. It may be remembered that the vessel was proceeding from Antwerp to New York, and that upwards of one hundred and fifty German emigrants were lost. It is conjectured that the bodies were buried in the sand, as none of them were seen at the time, and the high winds in the early part of last week may have slightly shifted the sand, and removed them from their temporary grave.

During the excavation of the South Docks at Sunderland, a spring of water, strongly impregnated with sulphur and saline substances, has been discovered. It pushes out of the rock at the bottom of the dock, at a free strong stream, near the south east corner, and may be distinguished from a number of [illegible] salt springs in its near abouthood by a dark-coloured deposit which it [illegible] layers

THE SIERRA MADRE, BETWEEN MONTEREY AND SALTILLO.

CALIFORNIA.

By the arrival from the United States this week we have voluminous accounts of much interest respecting the "diggins," which show that even in El Dorado the way to wealth is strewn with thorns. The diggers are sometimes up to their knees in water—sometimes parched and maddened with a broiling sun—anon shaking with ague or scorched with fever—fighting with Indians, or weak and exhausted for want of food. Such are the accompaniments of success at the mines. On returning to San Francisco, gambling, drinking, and exposure produce and havoc among the reckless many; while the prudent few, who patiently submitted to toil and privation, realise tolerable fortunes.

But a crisis is threatened in California. Foreigners, and particularly Mexicans and South Americans, are pouring into the country, and already they far outnumber the Americans. The latter contend that foreigners have no right whatever to the mines, and that they must be expelled at whatever hazards. "Native American Associations" have accordingly banded together, all well armed and in process of military training, and at no distant period a collision is expected.

In the overland journey from the States, numbers of the emigrants have been thinned off by cholera, while many have returned, overcome with fatigue, and appalled with the excessive heat, the weariness, and the dangers of the prairies. The Indians, too, have assembled in great numbers, for the purpose of attacking the emigrants who journey through the Rio Grande, the Mexican, and portions of the Texan territory.

From Chihuahua we learn that a party had been attacked by Indians, and more than half killed. One party of thirty-five California emigrants, and another of twenty-eight, have been destroyed by about five hundred Indians; and a despatch from New Orleans states, that, "in all, five hundred emigrants to California have been killed by the Indians in Mexico." At the mines, five Americans and thirty-five Indians fell in a conflict on the 18th of April.

There are about 40,000 men at the mines, and from five to ten dollars a day is an average range of a gold-digger's profits; although fortunate instances occur in which a man may pick up lumps, or find earth so exceedingly auriferous as to yield 200 to 300 dollars between sun and sun.

The amounts which have reached the United States, and the consignments on the way from California, are reported at 4,000,000 dollars.

PANAMA, &c.

We have likewise some interesting intelligence from Panama, already a very important point, and promising to be of still greater consequence. The New York correspondent of the Times says, "There is no doubt of the Panama Railway going rapidly forward, as neither capital nor energy will be wanting, and it is said that it will be opened in about a year. The eventual termini will be Panama on the Pacific, and Porto des Navios, near Chagres, on this side the Isthmus. The earliest portion constructed will be from Gorgona, the highest navigable part of Chagres river, to Panama, distant about twenty miles, in order to get into operation as soon as possible; and for the navigation of the river, an iron steamer is now building in Philadelphia. The road will be entirely a New York enterprise, and when eventually finished will be 46 miles long, its summit level under 300 feet. The right of way is secured by the United States, which Government guarantees the neutrality of the Isthmus, and the sovereignty of New Grenada over it, thus rendering this route preferable to the otherwise more favourable one of Tehuantepec."

The California correspondent of the New York Herald writes:—

"I have the pleasure of at length addressing you, and of announcing to you the arrival in Panama of the long-looked for steamer California, on the 22d of May last, after rather a long passage of twenty-eight days, principally owing to the scarcity and inferiority of her coal. The information she brings sets at rest all doubts respecting the enormous mineral wealth of the gold regions. As an earnest of its existence, she brought with her about 1,000,000—600,000 on consignment, and the balance belonging to fifty or sixty miners, who are now returning with the fruits of their labour to enjoy it in a civilized country.

A correspondent, writing from Panama, May 22, says:—

"The Yankees here are all on the move for San Francisco. Nothing stops these enterprising people; many have left this in whale-boats, in "dug-outs," and in iron boats, not to mention many small vessels totally unseaworthy. One of the boats, an iron one, was dragged across the Isthmus by fifty men, and is now on her way to the new El Dorado. I trust the Panagayca in the Gulf of Tehuantepec will spare these courageous and enterprising men. The United States Government are constantly sending large sums to San Francisco by this route to pay their employés, who are numerous; when to this you add the large sums expended in the transit from the States, and in Panama and the Isthmus alone upwards of a million and a half of dollars have been spent during the last five months, it will be seen that it will take no small amount of digging to allow the emigrants to rentrer dans leur fonds, as the French say.

"We have had about 500 people here since the beginning of the year, but the American steamers Panama and Oregon, and several large barques, have taken away nearly all the emigrants during the last fortnight."

One of our subscribers resident at Panama has enabled us to illustrate the scarcity of vessels there, by sketching from under his window a party of Americans converting canoes into vessels for the voyage to California.

A private letter from San Francisco, dated April 7, states that a large quantity of the glittering sand has been found within 20 miles of Monterey, and that the citizens were leaving their homes, in hopes of realising a rich harvest.

We annex a fine view of this locality—that portion of the Sierra Madre, or great mountain chain of Mexico, which lies between Monterey and Saltillo. Here, the road, though steep, is passable for waggons. More frequently, however, the only road in these wild Sierras is an Indian path, or a mule track, pursuing its course over the highest mountains, alongside frightful precipices, and through deep ravines; rugged and toilsome ways, but presenting to the traveller scenery of the most sublime description.

We are indebted for this View to one of a series of beautiful drawings, entitled "Mexico Illustrated," by John Phillips and A. Rider, published by E. Atchley, 100, Great Russell-street, Bloomsbury.

AMERICANS CONVERTING CANOES INTO SCHOONERS, IN THE BAY OF PANAMA.

IRON STORE-HOUSE FOR CALIFORNIA.

Or kindred interest to the above intelligence is the accompanying Illustration of a large Iron House, shipped yesterday (Friday) for San Francisco. This house is constructed of corrugated iron, by Mr. John Walker, of Vincent-street, Old street-road, son of Richard Walker, the original manufacturer and patentee. The structure measures 75 feet long, 40 feet wide, and 20 feet high, and is composed of plates of iron, each 8 feet long; its cost is £600. Mr. Walker has likewise in course of construction eight other corrugated Iron Houses for California, each having three dwelling-rooms and one store-room. The Storehouse we have engraved was, before it was shipped, temporarily put together in Shepherd and Shepherdess Fields, Hoxton. Corrugated iron has all the strength of brickwork, without its great weight: it is peculiarly adapted for portable dwellings and storehouses, being very light, and packing so close, that the expense of freight is comparatively small.

PRESERVED MEATS.—The vessel Louis Charles, arrived in the Thames, from Galatz, has brought an entire cargo of preserved meats, comprising 34,170 tins of the article. This preserved meat undergoes no preparation of manufacture; but is simply boiled in tin canisters, and then hermetically sealed until required for use. It is imported in considerable quantities, for the use of the Royal, as well as the merchant navy; and a contract for nearly a million pounds weight of the article is at present under supply to the Admiralty department. It was at first considered that the meats preserved in the manner mentioned were chargeable with duty, but it has been determined that, having undergone no process of manufacture, further than the preservation before mentioned, they are admissible free.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.—The Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's Treasury having certified to the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt, in pursuance of the Act 10th George IV, c. 27, sec. 1, that the actual expenditure of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland exceeded the actual revenue thereof, for the year ended the 5th day of April, 1849, by the sum of two hundred and sixty-nine thousand three hundred and seventy-seven pounds nineteen shillings and one penny; the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt hereby give notice, that no sum will be applied by them on account of the Sinking Fund, under the provisions of the said Act, between the 7th day of July, 1849, and the 10th day of October, 1849. S. HIGHAM, Comptroller-General.—National Debt-office, July 5.

ANXIETY TO REMOVE ERROR.—A poor Cornet having got his skull severely fractured, was told by the doctor that the brain was visible, on which he remarked, "Do write to tell my father, for he always vowed I had none."

CURIOSITIES.—IV.

QUEEN ELIZABETH'S CUP.

THIS costly example of olden taste was exhibited at a soirée given by Lord Albert Conyngham, on Wednesday, at the family mansion, in Hamilton-place. There were present the leading members of the British Archæological Association, of which Lord Albert Conyngham is President.

QUEEN ELIZABETH'S CUP.

The above is in the possession of Colonel Gwatkin, whose mother (a niece of Sir Joshua Reynolds) obtained it from her sister, who married the Marquis of Thomond, in whose family it had been preserved for a long period of time. The Cup is of silver gilt; the rim around the cover is engraved with an arabesque, and bears traces of coloured enamels and stones which have decorated the leaves and flowers of which it consists. This is the only piece of engraved work upon the Cup; for the cover, sides, and knobs are completely covered with precious stones, many hundreds in number, secured in separate cells, and ranged closely together, in rows, entirely round the vessel. These stones are amethysts of various tints, the interstices of the setting of each being filled with small turquoises, which are, in some instances, as minute as seed pearls, to allow of every part of the Cup being incrusted with jewels. The knob on the top of the cover, and the three upon which it stands, are similarly covered with jewels. These which form the feet unscrew; a hollow tube affixed to the bottom of the cup passes partially through each, and a screw, the head of which contains an amethyst, fits into this tube from beneath, and completely conceals the mode of securing them. A false bottom of thin silver is held on by those screws, and covers a cypher; the letters being "E. R." conjoined in a scroll characteristic of the reign of the Sovereign whose ownership has thus been carefully stamped upon it.

The weight of the Cup is considerable; it holds about half a pint. It exhibits more barbaric magnificence than real taste, yet is characteristic of the time in which it was made. In the reign of Elizabeth, a superstitious belief in the hidden virtues of precious stones was current, which gave them a value independent of their rarity or beauty. The amethyst, in particular, was believed to possess the power of repelling intoxication, and it, therefore, became a fitting incrustation for the cup of a female sovereign; hence this gift was liberally decorated with so valued a stone.

The belief in the medical and magical virtues of precious stones was a doctrine much inculcated by the Arabian naturalists, who believed that the amethyst prevented inebriation, and the turquoise strengthened the eyes, and was a remedy against poison; and it was from the East that we obtained our belief in their hidden efficacy. During the time of Elizabeth, it is not likely that much faith was placed in such mysticism; but the affectation which characterised her court might have induced the maker of this Cup to resort to the quaint conceits of an older faith, to render his work the more acceptable.

We have selected these interesting details from a paper by Mr. Fairholt, F.S.A., drawn up with his usual care, and printed in the number of the Journal just issued to the members of the British Archæological Association.

THIS CUP, we should add, may be inspected, for a few days, at Messrs. Widdowson and Veale's, 73, Strand.

THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY.

THE third and last fête of the season took place at the Society's Gardens, at Chiswick, on Wednesday, and was in every respect the most successful of the present year. The weather was splendid, and the ordinary attractions derived an additional charm from the fact that the Duke of Devonshire had kindly thrown open the gardens and grounds of Chiswick House for the increased delight of the visitors. The beauty of the ladies, the elegance of their costumes, and the general appearance of gaiety that pervaded the scene, all combined to produce an effect which for a moment rendered it almost incredible that "the busy haunts of London" were at so short a distance from the spot. The visitors thronged in considerable numbers; and if the whole company had been concentrated within the limits of the Society's Gardens, the crowd would have been such as to detract from the pleasures of the day; but the promenade being so much enlarged, the company were most conveniently dispersed.

The show of flowers was the finest we have seen, and the tents were of unusual dimensions. The exotic orchids, the pelargoniums, the fuchsias, the calceolarias, and all the sweet varieties of greenhouse plants appeared in the highest perfection. The prevailing fruits were strawberries, grapes, peaches, and pine-apples; and there were one or two raspberry trees of most luxuriant growth.

The grounds were elegantly laid out, and there were three bands of music in attendance, whose performances were so attractive as to divide the honours with the contributors to the floricultural display. The music ceased shortly before seven o'clock, but long after that time the company continued to promenade the grounds.

We regret that we have not room for the list of Prizes awarded.

Much curiosity was excited at the Exhibition by some novel tiles, which the Managing Committee of the Horticultural Society have adopted in their grounds, for the cultivation of strawberries. These tiles when applied to the plant completely lift the fruit about three inches from the ground, out of the reach of dirt and vermin, and act as a protection against the injurious effects of heavy rains, by admitting the water to run under, instead of over their surface, as is the case with the common flat tile. The substance of the tiles, by absorbing the heat of the sun, and retaining it during night, also accelerates the ripening of the fruit; while, at the same time, they prevent undue evaporation from the root of the plant during very dry weather. Some specimens were exhibited of strawberries cultivated upon this contrivance by Mr. Myatt, of Deptford, to whom the Society awarded their certificate of merit. The contrivance is registered, and is the invention of Mr. John Roberts, of 34, East Cheap, City, who has likewise produced a tile for the more rapid ripening of the grape in the open air.

ROYAL LOO HAWKING-CLUB CHALLENGE CUP.

IN our Journal for the 30th ult. we engraved the beautiful "Remembrance Cup," or grand prize presented by the King of the Netherlands, and run for on the first day of the late races, at Loo, in Holland. We have now the pleasure of engraving another prize, "The Challenge Cup," added by the liberality of his Royal Highness Prince Henry of the Netherlands to the Hawking Club Stakes, and won by his Royal Highness' chesnut horse, Tory (a favourite horse of the late King), and ridden by Mr. Stirling Crawfurd, on the third day of the meeting.

THE LOO CHALLENGE CUP.

The Challenge Cup is of silver, and the design is highly creditable to the taste of the Dutch artist, Kempen, of Utrecht. It consists of a burnished horn, borne by a figure of Neptune, who is placed upon a frosted shell.

The Loo Races were established principally as an attraction for English visitors. The late meeting was well attended; the King and Queen of the Netherlands, and their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Orange and the Prince Maurice being present each day. Among the English company were his Grace the Duke of Leeds, the Earl of Durham, Mr. Crawfurd, Mr. Newcombe, &c.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. E. B. ROCHE.

MR. EDMUND BURKE ROCHE, who sits in Parliament for the large and important county of Cork, is one of the most efficient of the Irish representatives, both as a working and speaking member. In the present session he has taken a very active part in the transaction of the large amount of legislative business which has been got through pertaining to Ireland. Especially in the protracted and wearying discussions respecting the Irish Poor-Law Amendment Bill, the Rate in Aid, and the measures having reference to public works, and the relieving of the destitute poor by means of employment, has he been most indefatigable in advocating the popular side of those vexed questions.

Mr. Roche's style and manner of address is bold, off-hand, and energetic, pretty freely interspersed with that figurative language and luxuriance of imagery so characteristic of the speech of his countrymen; and, though he has not drifted his intellect in the pursuit of any of the learned professions (being simply a country gentleman of good education), he yet inherits enough of the native eloquence of his celebrated maternal ancestor—the great orator and statesman, Edmund Burke—to command the willing attention of the fastidious audience at St. Stephen's. He is particularly happy in the forcible use of interrogatory—putting a proposition in the shape of a question, instead of as a mere statement.

On Tuesday night he delivered a very effective speech in support of Mr. Bernal Osborne's motion on the Irish Church. Referring to the advocates of the maintenance of the present Church establishment, he asked—"Upon what grounds those honourable gentlemen could defend the Irish Church. Would they select the ground of its teaching the only religious truth? The honourable and learned gentleman the member for the University of Dublin (Mr. Napier) seemed by his cheer and gesture to assent to that. Well, then, what they wanted was to assert religious truth by act of Parliament. (Laughter and cheers.) But they had already sanctioned every form of religious worship that ever was invented within the British Luminions. (Hear, hear.) They had sanctioned by law the practice of idolatry, of Hindooism, and of Mahomedanism in India. They had established the Roman Catholic religion in Malta, and in a portion of Canada. They had established Presbyterianism in Scotland, and they now talked of defending a Protestant establishment in Ireland, because it taught religious truth. (Cheers.) But they had established all those various forms of religious worship, because the majority of the people in the several countries professed the religions respectively established. How was it, then, that they persisted in keeping up an established church in Ireland, which was professed by only a very small minority? Upon what other grounds could they defend the church establishment? Was it upon the ground of its religious efficiency? Was it because it had been able, active, and efficient in the dissemination of its tenets? (Hear.) Why, it was scarcely necessary for him to repeat the arguments of his hon. and gallant friend the member for Middlesex to prove the contrary. From the time of Charles II., when the proportion of the Protestants to the Roman Catholics in Ireland was as three to eight, to the year 1824, the proportion, instead of increasing, had decreased to three to twelve-and-a-quarter. * * *

It was in the year 1537, that the Book of Common Prayer was ordered to be read only in English or Latin in Ireland, although the Irish language was almost the only one then understood in that country; and, in order to prevent even the Irish Protestants themselves from getting into the Church, it was ordered that no Irishman should be elected to a cure, until proclamation had first been made three times in the nearest market-town for an Englishman to fill it. So that, far from disseminating the religious principles of the Church of England, every effort was directed to establishing mere political influence through its means in Ireland. It was established for the purpose of confiscation. It was established as a draw-farm for

THE HORTICULTURAL SOCIETY'S FETE, AT CHISWICK, ON WEDNESDAY.

England. It was a mere political engine, and not a religious one. Did it raise the people in the moral or the social scale? No; it made them practical hypocrites, by inducing them to profess a religion whose doctrines they believed in their hearts to be untrue, and whose teaching they believed to be unsound. Was it upon political grounds the Church was to be sustained? Had they gained one single political advantage from it? They certainly had not obtained tranquillity. It had been said that the English Protestants went into Ireland with the Bible in one hand and the sword in the other. If so, they used the sword pretty freely, but they entirely forgot the Bible. The whole system of agrarian outrage in Ireland had its origin in the Church system. Every social disturbance in the country could be traced to the Established Church. 'Captain Rock,' 'Captain Starlight,' 'Peach-of-day Boys,' all had their origin in the deep injuries and outrages inflicted under the tithe system.

As long as Popish spade and scythe
Shall dig, and cut the Sassenagh tythe,
And Popish purses pay the rent,
On Heaven's road for Sassenagh souls;
As long as millions shall kneel down,
To ask of thousands for their own
While thousands proudly turn away,
And to the millions answer 'Nay!'
So long the merry reign shall be
Of Captain Rock and his family.

The wild justice of revenge had shown itself against the tithe proctors; and when they virtually made the landlord the tithe proctor, he was but too often sacrificed to the same end. If, then, the Irish Church was not to be maintained on religious nor political grounds, he knew not upon what other ground. But he knew that the great majority of the Irish people had made up their minds that that large establishment should be, if not altogether abrogated, very much mitigated, and that object he should use his best exertions to attain.

Mr. Roche is the son of Edward Roche, Esq., of Trabolgan, in the county of Cork, where the hon. gentleman possesses a large landed estate. His country seat, near the shores of the Cove of Cork, is one of the most lovely spots in that charming locality. He was born in 1815, and was married last year to Eliza Caroline, the eldest daughter of J. B. Boothby, Esq., of Twyford Abbey, Middlesex. In politics he is a Reformer of the most liberal school, and has advocated the Repeal of the Union. He has sat for the county of Cork since 1837.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

ROYAL COMMISSION.

The Royal Assent was given by Commission to the under-mentioned bills:—Passengers, Small Debts (Scotland) Act Amendment, Highways (Annual Returns), County Cess (Ireland), Loan Societies, Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, Sculpture Copyright, Customs, and several others. The Commissioners were the Earl of Minto and Lord Campbell.

PROTECTION OF MINORS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Lord CAMPBELL moved the second reading of this bill. This bill was rendered necessary because there were no officers in Scotland exercising functions analagous to those of the Masters of Chancery in England. It had received the approbation of Lord Robertson, one of the most learned of the Scotch Judges, and of several other members of the Scottish Judicial Bench.

The bill was then read a second time.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

On the motion of the Marquis of LANSDOWNE, this bill was read a second time and ordered to be committed on Monday.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

The Estates Leasing (Ireland) Bill passed through committee, and was ordered to be reported on Monday.

JUDGMENTS (IRELAND) BILL.

The SOLICITOR-GENERAL, in moving the second reading of this bill, said that when the Incumbered Estates Bill was proposed it was stated that it was necessary not merely to pass that bill, but also to have a series of other bills, the operation of which would mutually depend upon each other.—He had stated, and it appeared to be generally concurred in by the House, that it would be useless to free certain lands from the existing incumbrances, and to give a Parliamentary title to them when sold by the Commissioners, unless they prevented for the future land getting into the same embarrassed and encumbered state in which it now existed. The present bill had, therefore, been introduced by the Government with that view, and it consisted of three objects. The first was to prevent the assignability of judgment upon estates, and the second to prevent a judgment being made a charge upon land unless in the hands of the sheriff. If this bill should pass the second reading, he was prepared to move the operation according to the suggestions of the committee that had sat upon the subject, although he was in hopes, in another session, to extend its provisions according to his own views.

The bill was then read a second time, and committed pro formâ, to be re-committed on Thursday next.

The House resumed, and adjourned till five o'clock.

In the evening sitting,

FISCAL REGULATIONS OF GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND.

On the motion that the Speaker leave the Chair for the House going into Committee of Supply,

Mr. J. O'CONNELL rose to move for a Select Committee to inquire into the fiscal relations between Great Britain and Ireland. He believed that the result of the labours of such a Committee would tend to disabuse the public mind of the error to take that this country had absolutely been lavish in the expenditure of money to Ireland, and that Ireland had only added ingratitude to want of punctuality in repaying the advances so liberally made to her. He believed it would be proved by the labours of such a Committee that, on the whole, whatever money she had received, had to the utmost of her power paid back, and with greater punctuality, considering the state of her resources, than had been the case of the many of our colonies towards the mother country.

The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER opposed the motion as being unnecessary. He was ready to grant any returns containing the requisite information which the hon gentleman might desire, but he must oppose the motion for a Committee.

The motion was negatived without division.

SUPPLY.

The House then went into Committee of Supply, when the votes of the miscellaneous and other estimates were passed. They were £42,953 for the British Museum, £112,000 for the service of the disembodied militia, and £12,000 for books and philosophical instruments for the Irish college.

The House then resumed, and shortly afterwards adjourned.

CONSERVANCY OF THE THAMES.—On Thursday, Friday, and this day (Saturday), the Lord Mayor, members of the Corporation, and a numerous company, proceeded to view the eastern boundary of the Lord Mayor's jurisdiction, as Conservator of the rivers Thames and Medway. The boundary-stone at Cookham Wood, near Upnor, was visited according to due form. The usual ceremonies were duly observed, the proceedings being crowned with the customary festivities. We shall give the interesting details next week, accompanied by illustrations.

EASTERN COUNTIES RAILWAY.—Yesterday a special meeting of this company was held at the London Tavern, when the whole of the gentlemen recommended by the directors at the last meeting, namely, Mr. Bonham Carter, Mr. Bennett, Ellis, Glynn, Margrave, Packe, Reed, and Smythe—were elected, no other candidates being proposed. In the early part of the proceedings it was stated that proxies had been lodged in favour of the line from 886 shareholders, representing £1,624,730 stock, and having 24,892 votes.

SHREWSBURY AND BIRMINGHAM RAILWAY.—Yesterday a special meeting of this company was held in Moorgate-street, when a bill for altering and amending the Shrewsbury and Birmingham Railway Act, and for other purposes, was brought before the meeting. The report and the proceedings at a long discussion took place, in which the chairman (Ormsby Gore, Esq., M.P.), and others condemned the principles of Lord Montcagle's audit bill—though acknowledging that some better system of auditing railway accounts is absolutely necessary.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE CAXTON TESTIMONIAL.—On Monday evening a meeting of the subscribers to the fund for erecting a monument to the memory of Caxton was held at the Society of Arts, Adelphi; Mr. Scholefield in the chair. The Rev. Mr. Milman read the report, from which it appeared that the total amount of subscriptions up to that time had been £400, of which £240 had been paid. The expenditure had been £69. The rapid succession of events, which during the last two years had exercised a depressing influence upon the commerce and public enterprise of the country, had of course withheld many subscriptions from this fund, although an appeal had been made to the heads of the printing and publishing business. The report was received and adopted, and, upon the motion of Mr. Clowes, seconded by Mr. Arnyot, a resolution was agreed to authorising the expenditure of further sums in collecting subscriptions, the result to be reported at a meeting in the spring of 1850.

KING'S COLLEGE HOSPITAL.—A meeting was held on Wednesday, in the board-room of King's College Hospital, in Portugal-street, Lincoln's-inn-fields, Charles Hindley, Esq., in the chair. Some routine business having transpired, it was stated that the Rev. R. Bickerstcth, M.A., had signified his intention of advocating the cause of the institution from the pulpit of St. Clement Danes Church—a hope was expressed that the sermon, and the eloquent gentleman's discourse would be of that encouraging nature so needed to maintain and extend the benefits of the charity. From the tenth annual report of the hospital, it appears that the number of patients annually benefited average 20,000.

PARLIAMENTARY AND FINANCIAL REFORM.—On Wednesday evening a public meeting was held at the Lecture Hall, Greenwich, for the purpose of forming a Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association for that district. The chair was taken by Mr. G. W. Masters. Resolutions in accordance with the object of the meeting having been passed, the formation of a local association was agreed on ASYLUM FOR AGED AND DECAYED FREEMASONS.—On Wednesday evening the annual general meeting of the friends and supporters of this institution was held at Radley's Hotel, Bridge-street, Blackfriars, Brother Wright in the chair. The Secretary read the negotiations relative to the proposed amalgamation with the Royal Masonic Benevolent Annuity Fund under one common title, which matter would ere long probably be brought before the craft generally. A site for the new asylum had been selected on Croydon Common, and although there had been some difficulties relative to the drainage, the building was rapidly proceeding. The financial report, though imperfect, from the illness of the treasurer, showed that, with a previous balance of £971 8s. 11d., dividends, profits of ball, donations, &c., the receipts were £2910 1s. 8d., and the payments, including £837 16s. 3d., for the purchase of land at Croydon, were £2239 0s. 1d.

ROYAL MATERNITY CHARITY.—On Tuesday evening, a special meeting of the friends and subscribers to this institution was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, to receive the report of the committee specially appointed to consider the present system of government of the charity. The report stated that the executive power was vested in a committee of governors, which, as a vacating body, it looked upon as a form of government insulted to the extended operations of the institution, and recommended the application to Government for a charter of incorporation. In respect of the funds, it was stated that they exhibited an annual income of £1049 18s. 6d. The report went on to say that, in 1846, the then secretary absconded, with £146, and it advised the formation of a medical committee. The committee urged numerous reasons for the adoption of the latter proposition. A warm discussion ensued, a scene of the most stormy character ended in the moving of an amendment which was carried by a large majority, and after a vote of thanks to the chairman.

SOCIETY FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF THE CONDITION OF THE LABOURING CLASSES.—The fifth annual meeting of this Society took place on Thursday, the 12th inst., at Willis's Rooms, St. James', Lord Ashley, M.P., in the chair. The Chairman said, though at this late period of the season they could not expect a very full meeting, still the committee thought it advisable to hold it, in order that the affairs of this society should be made public. During the period which had intervened since last meeting, they had not been idle; they had completed the new Model Houses, one to accommodate between fifty and sixty unmarried women, and the other capable of containing fifty families. His Lordship contended that the principal evils resulted from the overcrowded state of the habitations of the poor; and he only bodily but mentally. His Lordship read letters of regret, on account of their absence today, from several of the nobility and gentry. The secretary (Mr. Wood) read a very long report, which entered into all the details of this society since its commencement. It stated that all the works hitherto completed had cost £23,000: out of this £13,000 had been raised by contributions, and the remainder had been borrowed on the security of their property. The balance now in hand in favour was £979 0s. 6d. The report was received with considerable applause. A series of resolutions were carried, to the effect that the report be received and circulated; that the present defective state of the dwellings of the poor is one of the chief obstacles to their moral and social amelioration, and that efforts be made by this society to improve the dwellings of the labouring classes. A vote of thanks to the noble chairman closed the proceedings of the day.

ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY.—On Wednesday the ordinary general meeting of the governors of this society was held at the rooms, Trafalgar-square; B. Hawes, Esq., in the chair. The following persons were recommended for reward by the committee for the silver medal:—H. Laughrin, who saved Captain Edwards, R.N. Master Harcourt Carter, aged 12 years, saved two other boys. Mr. C. E. Tarrant, who jumped into the sea near Valparaiso and saved a mate. Lieutenant S. Osborne, who saved a seaman. J. Dickerson, who saved two men from a shipwreck. Thomas Carne, a miner, who saved the lives of nine out of thirteen other persons who were upset in a boat. In addition to the silver medal, the court awarded this person £5 for his intrepid conduct. Lieut. O. L. Jones, R.N., who saved a seaman. Master F. G. Powell, who saved the life of Thomas Simpson, a fellow colleagian, at Winchester. E. Gerrard, a Frenchman, who saved the master and crew of the vessel Thetis. William Cheesman, who saved the lives of the Rev. G. Powell and Mr. M'Donall. William Wright, who went into a well 130 feet deep to save the life of a person who fell into it. The court sanctioned the recommendations of the committee. Since December last there have been 61 general cases, and 14 attempts at suicide. Of these 61 cases successfully treated, and two attempts at suicide. The balance in hand at the last audit was £150 9s. 8d. A vote of thanks to the chairman terminated the proceedings.

NEW CHURCH IN ST. PANCRAS.—On Tuesday the ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a new church, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalen, to afford additional accommodation to the inhabitants of St. Pancras, took place, the site of the proposed new building being about the centre of Munster-place, Regent's-park. The building is intended to provide accommodation for about 1500 persons, and is expected to be completed in about twelve months.

SWIMMING MATCH.—The match between Walker and Kettle, to swim from London-bridge to Greenwich for £30, came off on Tuesday morning. The start took place at half-past 6. Both men appeared in excellent condition. Walker, the superiority of whose style as a swimmer, besides his greater speed, soon gave him the lead at once, and continued to gain on his opponent till full a quarter of a mile ahead, when position he maintained to the finish, beating his opponent easily by about 6 minutes. The match was accompanied by some 8 steamboats.

HEAT OF THE WEATHER.—In the early part of the week the heat was excessive. At the Royal Humane Society's receiving-house, Hyde-park, the thermometer stood on Monday, at noon, in the shade, at 96 degrees of Fahrenheit's scale; on the sun, in bright, at 120 in fifteen minutes. A poor woman named Barlow, working in a hay-field at Hampstead, overpowered by the intense heat, fell down speechless, was carried home in strong convulsions, and is not expected to survive. During the day two omnibus horses dropped down dead near Trafalgar-square.

FIRES IN THE METROPOLIS.—On Wednesday morning, about five o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises belonging to Mr. C. Cochrane, a corn and seed merchant, in the New Cut, Lambeth. The inmates, on being aroused, found the flames ascending the staircase so fiercely as to prevent their descending, and they were at length obliged to jump upon a bed in the room on the ground floor filled with hay and straw. Two police officers having got a short ladder, held it out at arm's length in the form of a bridge, over which the parties passed into the house adjoining. The fire was not extinguished for about twelve hours. The nitre and stock in trade were destroyed. A short time previous, a fire broke out at No. 47, Edmund-street, Camberwell, belonging to Mr. Hopkins. The Brigade and West-end of England engines quickly arrived, but it was not established until the house in which it originated was partially destroyed and the one adjoining injured. On Wednesday evening, about five o'clock, a fire broke out upon the premises in the joint occupation of Mr. Silverton, a brass-cabinet maker, and Mr. Taylor, a trimming warehouseman, in Anne-street, Bethnal-green-road. Several engines promptly attended, but the fire was not got under until property roughly estimated in value at from £400 to £500 had been destroyed.

CORONER'S INQUESTS.—THE KOMANZOFF CASE.—On Wednesday evening Mr. Payne went into an inquiry at St. John's, Horsleydown, on the body of Mary Metler, aged twenty-eight, who came to her death under the following circumstances: The deceased and her sister, Mrs. Mishin, were natives of Swits, or Prussia, and neither could speak a word of English. The former was about to be married to a young man of her own village, but he broke off the acquaintance and made proposals to another. This had been a great grief to deceased, that she induced her sister to enter into a plan to leave the place for ever and go to their brother, who is said to be living at Birmingham. Accordingly they collected what money they could, and took their passage by a steam-vessel descending the Rhine as far as Rotterdam, and from thence embarked on the Wilderforce steamer on Saturday morning last, at three o'clock. On the same night Mary Metler was taken very ill. On Monday she was not better, and having walked on the deck was obliged to be taken below again, when she remained until the arrival of the vessel in London, when she was seen by the assistant of Mr. Mishin, of Horsleydown, who gave her brandy and other stimulants, but she never rallied, and died the same night. The two sisters, it was said, had had nothing but salt herring at Hamburg and had a sup of broth; beyond this they had no food for the voyage except a few oranges; but Mrs. Meeson, the stewardess, seeing the helpless state of the two poor foreigners, gave them soup, tea, and arrowroot, and the passengers made a subscription of 25s., which the boatmen on the river had cheated the surviving sister of, and she was left helpless and friendless in London. Mr. Hill, the assistant of Mr. Mishin, had to attribute the death to disease and exhaustion arising from retching on an empty stomach occasioned by sea-sickness.

THE CHOLERA IN THE MILLBANK PRISON.—On Monday, Mr. Bedford held four more inquests in the Millbank Prison, on the bodies of convicts who had died there. A verdict of "Death from Asiatic cholera" having been returned in the case of one of the deceased, the coroner, addressing Dr. Baly, observed that this was the fourth case within a few days in which he had been called on to hold four inquests on each day; could nothing be done to better the state of the prison and the prisoners? Dr. Baly replied that the fault was not with those who had the superintendence of the prison, for the fact was that prisoners were brought in in every state of disease, and they were then kept until they were well before being sent away. The Coroner: Then the average of deaths is to be placed to the credit of Dr. Baly and the others from the present system of removal of convicts; the great mortality used to be at Woolwich, but all the convicts were now sent to Millbank Prison.—The Coroner: Has anything been done in consequence of the last inquest on four persons who died of cholera in its worst form?—Baly: Baly observed that since then a communication had taken place with the Commissioners of Sewers, who had flushed the place, and the open sewer was directed to be covered.—Coroner: Five cases of cholera in the prison, four of which were fatal, seem to be very trifling. The three other inquests were deaths from pulmonary consumption and erysipelas.

PROGRESS OF THE CHOLERA.—Mr. W. Baker held six inquests on Tuesday, in various parts of his district, on persons who had died from Asiatic cholera, and verdicts to that effect were returned in every case. It appeared that the deceased, without an exception, had been living when attacked by the disease in districts where the drainage was bad.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 7.—The births registered were 1277. The number of deaths was 1070; the weekly average for the summer quarter (which commences with the present month) of five previous years (1844-1848) is 1009; therefore, shows an excess of 62. The whole mortality is also rather high, as compared with the numbers returned from week to week during the last two months. There is an obvious increase in deaths caused by diseases of the respiratory organs. Two deaths though not to an equal extent, in those produced by affections of the respiratory organs. In the former class, during the last three weeks, the deaths have been progressively 277, 249, and 293; in the latter, the numbers in the same weeks were respectively 119, 105, and 87. Hooping-cough numbers 47, or double the usual amount of fatal cases. Diarrhœa increases a little; but the deaths from it, which last week were 49, have not reached the average of the season, which is 76; for in previous years, chiefly in a more advanced part of the quarter, this complaint has carried off many children of tender age. In the corresponding week of 1846 the deaths from diarrhœa were 76. These cases are reported of children who died, one of diarrhœa, another of hydrocephalus, at No. 3, Linney-court, Museum-street, where the back part of the house has no windows, and the smell from drains and other unhealthy effluvia is extremely offensive. The state of the Metropolis from cholera is only 8; its recent progress is shown by the deaths in the last six weeks, which were successively 5, 22, 43, 45, 124, and in last week 192; viz. 94 of males, and 98 of females. Of the 192 victims of this disease, 122 were under 5 years of age, 30 at 5 and under 15 years of age, 88 between 15 and 60 years, and 13 at 60 and upwards. The ages of two are not returned. It is worthy of observation that cases are reported of children who died, one of diarrhœa, another of hydrocephalus, at No. 3, Linney-court, Museum-street, where the back part of the house has no windows, and the smell from drains and other unhealthy effluvia is extremely offensive. METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer in the week was 29·799. On Saturday, when the temperature was highest, the thermometer reached 82·1 deg. in the shade, and 103·6 deg. in the sun. The mean temperature, which for the week was 62·7 deg., was higher than the average on five days, and on Saturday exceeded the average by 9·2 deg.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

On Friday morning week, as the Little Western steam-packet, now running between Ramsgate and London, was rounding the Ness Buoy, the foremast, with the sails set, snapped clean asunder, in a sudden gust of wind, when the yard falling on deck, killed a woman of the name of Lavenchnell, belonging to Bethel Asylum, Camberwell, and fractured the head of a young girl named Gall, living in Augusta-terrace, Ramsgate, besides wounding several other passengers.

The Presse (Paris paper) of Sunday records the fall of an aërolite of five kilogrammes in weight, at Trigulènes near Montarge, is at the close of a violent storm. It was composed of crystal, sulphur, and a substance resembling plaster.

The number of persons convicted in England and Wales, under the act of Charles II., commonly called the "Lord's Day Act," in the year 1849, amounted to 191. The offences consisted of "driving cattle through the streets to the terror of church-goers;" "playing at unlawful games during Divine service;" "exercising their worldly calling;" "travelling with a waggon;" "driving hackney-carts," "driving asses and mules laden with coal," and "working on railways"

The sum remaining to be raised on the 30th of June last, to complete the aids granted by Parliament for the service of the years 1847 and 1848, amounts to £1,109,968.

His Excellency Mr. Clemson, United States minister at the Court of Brussels, accompanied by his family, embarked, on Sunday morning last on board the steam-packet Secondgrave, Captain Jackson, on his return to Belgium.

The deliveries of tea from the London warehouses last week were 573,009lb., being a fair average

The Board of Customs being of opinion that the quantities of tobacco and snuff allowed under the present regulations to be shipped from the bonded warehouses for stores on board vessels proceeding to foreign parts are disproportionate to the present requirements of the crews and passengers, have issued orders that the quantities now allowed as the maximum be reduced to one half.

Mr. Baron Platt has been obliged to postpone the Glamorganshire assizes from the 11th inst. till the 13th of August next, on account of the cholera at Cardiff.

A supplementary mail to the United States will in future be made up and forwarded to and from Southampton by the United States contract packets Hermann and Washington.

The Mayor of Hull has headed the subscription list in aid of the unemployed poor of that port with a donation of £50. Messrs. Pease and Liddells have given £25, and Messrs. Smith Brothers a like sum. The whole of the donations, however, amount to little more than £150, a sum altogether inadequate to afford any sensible relief to the existing distress.

In making an excavation in the Market-place, near the Antwerp Hotel, Ramsgate, a considerable quantity of human remains were recently found, and at a depth of several feet below the surface of the garden a chalk coffin was dug up. It is of the rudest formation, and evidently one of the earliest construction used for interment. Its age is probably from 800 to 1000 years, the bones which it contained those of an infant—were many of them perfect.

On Tuesday last Mr. Grassie, preventive officer, Loch Carron, Inverness-shire, and the crew attached to the Loch Carron station, discovered an extensive illicit distillery on the estate of Garbich, containing all the apparentances and utensils requisite for carrying on illicit distillation on an unusually large scale. Appearances indicated that this work had been in existence for several years.

The total number of visitors admitted free of charge to the State apartments at Hampton Court in 1847, was 169,031; and in 1848, 150,321. To Windsor Castle, in 1847, 25,970; in 1848, 26,897. To Kew Gardens, in 1447, 64,282; and in 1848, 91,708

The total amount received by Greenwich Hospital on account of the institution, as freight money for the conveyance of treasure since July, 1819, was £361,262 1s. 1d. As Greenwich Hospital receives one fourth of all freight moneys, the sum received by naval officers within the same period (from the 12th of July, 1819, to 6th of June, 1849) must have been £1,042,990 1s. 3d.

The ceremony of laying the first stone of the Limerick Docks, on Friday last was duly celebrated with great pomp. A vast concourse of all classes was present, and the company were addressed appropriately by Mr. Griffith, the eminent engineer, and by the Roman Catholic bishop, Dr. Ryan. The docks will be 800 feet long, 400 broad, and 16½ deep at low water.

During Sunday last, according to the returns made by individuals stationed for that particular purpose at the different steamboat piers between Chelsea and London-bridge, it was ascertained that 324,000 persons landed and embarked from the steam-vessels plying between those places.

A commission de lunatico inquirendo has been held to determine the state of mind of John Bell, Esq., the member for Thirsk, and brother to the member for South Northumberland. The jury have given as their verdict, "Mr Bell is of unsound mind, and has been so since the 1st of June last."

Mr. T. H. Fendall is appointed a Queen's Messenger on Foreign Service, in place of Mr Fricker, deceased. Mr. Fendall owes his appointment entirely, we understand, to the strong recommendation of the late Mr. Robert Vernon, the munificent founder of the gallery of native art.

The Emperor of Morocco having solicited from the English Government the means of conveying two of the sons of the late Sultan to Mecca, on a pilgrimage to the shrine of the Mussulmans' prophet, the Admiralty have acceded to his request, and have commissioned the Growler steam-sloop, at Devonport, for the service. She will leave England by the 20th inst., and will convey the Princes of Morocco, and, after she has conveyed them to Mecca, and back again to Morocco, will join Sir W. Parker's squadron for permanent service in the Mediterranean.

A return received for by Mr. Hume states the actual decrease of charges of the public debt between 1828 and 1849, at £672,404. The deceased charge of the long annuities, life annuities, and annuities for terms of years, is £84,984.

The increase of trade and the growing importance of the French port of Havre may be inferred from the published custom-house revenue returns of that port, which amounted, for the month of June this year, on imports, to 4,358,172 francs, against 1,119,694 francs for the same month last year; and on exports, to 22,956 francs for the month of June this year, against 9560 francs for the same month last year: showing an increase of more than 100 per cent. in both departments of the customs revenue of the flourishing port of Havre.

A serious accident happened in the Parliamentary train of the South-Western Railway which left the Waterloo-bridge station on Saturday morning, in the early part of the journey, in consequence of one of the engines sparks, which the guard and with him in the passengers' luggage van, having caught fire, exploded, and caused the other signals to explode. The luggage was set on fire, and a considerable portion of it was destroyed. Fortunately, the train was near the Andover-road station, and as soon as it reached, assistance was procured, and the fire was extinguished.

The Admiralty have issued strict injunctions to the respective commanders-in-chief at the home ports, that a medical officer shall visit each ship in ordinary at least once during the day, whether his services be required on board or not.

The salmon fishing in Scotland during the present season has been hitherto more productive then for a considerable number of years. It was proceeded successfully in the early part of the season, and, although for a month or two it fell away, it has during the last few weeks regained its previous prosperity.

Reports from the moors continue favourable. In the south of Scotland, we observe, from the Dumfries Courier, grouse are plentiful, as also partridges and hares. The season altogether holds out to be a superior one for the sports of the field.

On Tuesday, at the Court of Aldermen, the Town Clerk read a letter from Mr. Peto, who was returned as one of the Sheriffs of London, together with Mr. Nicoll, Sheriff of Middlesex, at the last election, expressing his intention of the former not to serve, and assigning as one of his reasons the necessity of performing his parliamentary duties. The Court came to the determination that a new election for the office of sheriff should take place, and the letter of Mr. Peto was referred to the committee of privileges.

The council of the Royal Agricultural Society of England have awarded to Mr. J. C. Morton, of Whitfield Farm, Forfarshire, formerly of Gunnerton, the prize of fifty sovereigns, for an account of the best method of increasing the living supply of animal food.

By a return lately made to the House of Commons, it appears there have been 350 clergymen appointed since the passing of the act 1 and 2 Vic., c. 106, called the Pluralities Act, to hold two or more benefices. Two livings held by one clergyman in the diocese of St. Asaph in this return are worth £3114 1s. 2d., and the united population of the said benefices 3012; some of the other benefices are of considerable value.

The late Dean of Carlisle having given to the University of Oxford £1000 3 per Cent. ROME.—GENERAL VIEW OF THE OPERATIONS

ONE OF GARIBALDI'S LANCERS CARRYING A DISPATCH.

THE FRENCH AT ROME.

THESE are the four scenes referred to in our Artist's letter, in last week's Number of our Journal.

Upon the front page is portrayed a group of Garibaldi's men: we say portrayed, because we are not sure that the artist has not taken a little liberty in drawing, and the Illustration upon page 25, bear out the artist's assertion, that they are "wonderfully picturesque fellows," and "all more or less portraits."

In the scene of the Roman Battery at Monte Testaccio, we have San Paolo in the left hand distance; a French battery in the centre the French camp and battery to the right; and to the extreme right, the Villa Sciarra Barberini; whilst the foreground is occupied by the Roman battery at Monte Testaccio, shewing the barricade formed of sacks of earth, &c.

The whole-page Illustration is thus referred to in our Artist's letter:—

"June 24.—The large Sketch is a view from the top of a house. The French had entered by the breach during last night. The wall is tremendously battered [illegible] the Villa Savorelli to the Porta San Pancrazio. The French have made no fresh attack since that at the breach; they have possession of it, however, and are fortifying it; they will, perhaps, make a decisive attack to-night or to-morrow. Last night they threw an immense number of shells into the town."

The main points in this general view are denoted by figures of reference. At the star, our Artist says - "From this point I am making my view of Rom you will not be surprised at my leaving off."

To shew the peril of sketching in the city, he says:—"A friend went yester day to sketch a battery for me, and was taken on suspicion of being a French spy; he did not even begin to sketch, but had a book under his arm; he was taken to head-quarters by the guard."

Our correspondent adds that the state of Rome has been much misrepresented. He says: "Order is kept in a miraculous manner, considering the circumstances. The Italians have fought splendidly. The first day of the siege I and two friends walked up towards the Porta San Pancrazio. There was a fearful row of cannon and musketry. As we got nearer we me ots of poor fellows brought away wounded—it was a sickening sight. I saw one poor soldier who died as he was being carried along. We went on; it was an exciting scene. Troops were in readiness to march out, with ammunition-waggons, artillery, sides-de-camp, &c. About 200 yards from the gate we were stopped by a sentinel, so we sat down: in a little while we were about to return home, when we met some Deputies whom we knew, and they took us up to the gate. We now got upon the walls, and from thence we saw the fighting outside. In every house, behind every bit of wall, were to be seen soldiers firing right and left. A large villa was occupied by the French; they were firing from the windows. Close to us was a howitzer, which was playing upon them. A tremendous bang! and away went the shot into the house—a fearful cloud of dust—and then we saw a large hole right through it. Now and then a ball came whistling over our heads. We remained there about twenty minutes, and then came home."

We annex the details of the capitulation of the city:—

The assault (that on bastion No. 6) which led to the surrender of the city took place at two o'clock on the morning of the 30th ult., after a violent cannonade which lasted all day, and which effected a practicable breach: It is described, both in General Oudinot's despatches and in private letters, as being one of the most furious and sanguinary combats in modern warfare. It was a hand-to-hand struggle, lasting little more than an hour, and was decided chiefly by the bayonet. General Oudinot in his despatch thus describes the affair:—

"At half-past two in the morning, the preliminary preparations having been executed, all the columns moved forward at the appointed signal (the firing of three guns). The first column, under the orders of Commandant Lefebvre, arrived at the summit of the breach, notwithstanding a sharp firing of musketry. Some works thrown up by the enemy during the night completely stopped the head of the column, which had great difficulty in surmounting the obstacle. The first rushes of the attack brought to the breach nearly all the defenders of the bastion, but the cross fire in the narrow passage did not prevent our brave soldiers from reaching the head ground and advancing. At the moment Commandant Lefebvre, of the 68rd, received a wound and fell. He was immediately replaced by Commandant Rouxeau, of the 68th. Advantage was taken of our first success to enlarge the passage. Commandant Gabriel Dufour, of the Engineers, was similarly struck by a ball whilst placing the first gabions to mask this dangerous passage. The column under the orders of Commandant Laforet was received with a sharp fire of musketry. The voltigeurs of the 33rd and the grenadiers of the 36th, who composed it, made a large entrenchment, supported by the Anrelian wall, bayoneted the defenders, and contended against the crenelated houses, which incommoded our attacks. The carabineers of the 33rd battalion, the first to leave the trenches, and who were commanded by M. Laforet in person, found the first two trenches of the enemy filled with men, who fired at them, but whom they bayoneted; then, passing over the entrenchment which barred the mouth of the bastion, they rushed to a battery of seven pieces of cannon, and took possession of it. These rapid and admirably-combined movements disengaged the column which had mounted by the breach; and the gorge of the bastion was then defended itself round a small house. It was either entirely destroyed or captured. The bastion was taken, but daylight was beginning to appear. All the troops looking on the bastion were lighted with the enemy, and they marched in force to retake their guns. The reserve was then engaged by Lieutenant-Colonel Espinasse; and the grenadiers of the 36th, under Captain Tiersonnier, pressing the enemy vigorously, precipitated them at the point of the bayonet over the staircase of the entrenchment. They then took the houses which command the gate of San Pancrazio. The officers of engineers then, taking advantage of the trenches of the enemy, placed the bastion in security. The different columns were led on with equal intrepidity and energy by Lieutenant-Colonel Espinasse and the chefs de bataillon placed at the head of them. Our troops acted with vigour and enthusiasm which nothing could resist. They killed by the bayonet more than 400 Italians. Out of 126 prisoners who remained in our hands, there are 19 officers of different grades. Our loss, comparatively, has not been great: it amounts to nine killed, one of whom is an officer; 116 wounded, of whom 18 are officers."

Another account gives the number of French troops put hors de combat as 280, of whom 200 had received bayonet wounds. The attack was supported by two diversionary attacks at remote points of the city walls. The humility of resistance having become obvious to all within the walls, measures were taken to surrender; and, "while the Dictator (Mazzini) and his powerful adherents were occupied in rallying their soldiers behind the barricades, when a Commission of Public Safety were deliberating, the National Guard assembled. General Roselli caused the white flag to be hoisted, and the Constituent Assembly, under the pressure of the National Guard, authorised the Roman municipality to proceed to the French General and treat with him. It was then that Mazzini and Garibaldi quitted Rome. Colonel Masi had been killed, as well as the Negro who had always accompanied Garibaldi. The band of the latter was the one which had suffered most. They fought with desperation, because they knew that on the day when they should be driven from Rome they would lose everything. It was their prey which they defended. In order that they might be more readily rally and be reorganised, they had clothed themselves in red from head to foot; for they felt in constant apprehension of a movement on the part of the National Guard, from whom they had taken almost all their muskets."

"It appears that, so far back as the 30th of April, Armellini had recommended an arrangement to be come to with the French. Armellini is a Roman; Masi and Garibaldi, who are not Romans, and care little about the fate of the people, opposed with all their strength the opinion of Armellini, and succeeded in carrying out the idea of resistance. Armellini several times, during the continuance of hostilities, renewed his proposition to treat with the French, but always without avail; the position of the Assembly and of the party of action was suported were either intimidated or thrown into prison. The chiefs of the National Guard and the body of officers were set aside, and the National Guard itself eventually disarmed, under the pretext of changing their muskets, which had percussion locks, for those of the army of Garibaldi, which had flint ones. During the last days of the siege, another of the Triumvirs, Safli, united with Armellini in demanding the cessation of resistance, and, on the refusal of Mazzini, Saffi gave in their resignations. Mazzini then proposed to Garibaldi to place people at the Campo Vaccino (ancient Forum). A certain number of the transteverins and the lazzaroni assembled. Mazzini came, followed by Garibaldi, Avezzana, Arduini, and all the chiefs of the party collected at Rome. He harangued the crowd, telling them he had called on them to decide between his colleagues and himself, and asked them to make known their determination on the question of resistance. The crowd declared for resistance. 'For assistance at any price?' said Mazzini. The crowd unanimously exclaimed, 'For resistance at any price!' 'Take care,' replied Mazzini, 'and weigh your resolution well. The question is of resistance to the death, and without any thought of safety.' The mass violent cries were raised of 'Resistance to the death!' At the same time there were shouts for Mazzini to be proclaimed Dictator. The dictatorial power was therefore placed in the hands of Mazzini during the continuance of the danger of the country. The first use which Mazzini made of this power was to throw two colleagues of the Triumvirats into prison, as having moderate opinions. He instituted, at the same time, a company of 'guardians of public safety,' charged to second, or rather to watch, the Carabineers, and to maintain public order. As to the National Guard, it was forbidden to assemble. The dictatorship of Mazzini lasted two days."

Rome completely surrendered at discretion, there being no conditions whatever accepted by the French Commander. The French troops entered on the 3rd in two columns: one, with General Oudinot and his staff at the head, by the Porta Portese; the other, with General Gueswiller, by the Porta del Popolo and the Corso. They were well received. In the Corso, however, a group was assembled with a flag surmounted by a cap of liberty, and they shouted as if in defiance. The flag was cut down by troops. Garibaldi, with from 3000 to 4000 men, left at one side as the French entered at the other. He was believed to have taken the road to Albano. It is said that no monument sustained any damage, except one church near the bastion.

Another account, referring to Garibaldi, says that he had taken the road to Terracina, and traversed the kingdom of Naples to take refuge in the Abruzzi, where he proposed to carry on a guerilla warfare.

Within the city itself various measures of precaution were determined on; the clubs were to be shut up, the violent journals suppressed, the Constituent Assembly dissolved, the Roman troops disarmed, strangers who had taken an active part in the late troubles expelled, a municipality elected, and military tribunals to judge crimes against persons and property established. The Pontifican cap has been removed from all public places, and Rome was declared in a state of siege.

French General Rostolan had been appointed governor of the city, and Gen. Sauvan military commandant of the garrison. The Castle of St. Angelo was given up to the French soldiers on the 3rd, and the flag hoisted on it.

The Triumvirs, Mazzini, Armellini, and Saffi, it is said, had succeeded in embarking on board a British vessel, which had conveyed them to Malta. Mazzini had provided himself with a British passport, Avezzana with an American one.

LAW INTELLIGENCE.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH.

MACNAMARA v. O'CONNOR.—THE CHARTIST TRIAL.—This was an action tried before Lord Denman and a special jury at the sittings at nisi prius, against Mr. Feargus O'Connor, M.P., to recover the sum of £.201 odd, the balance alleged to be due to him on a bill of costs amounting to £316 odd. The bill of costs had been incurred for the defence of Chartist prisoners who were tried at the Old Bailey in July, 1848. The prisoners were Messrs. Ernest Jones, Mussell, Sharpe, Vernon, and Looney. The defendant put several pleas upon record, but the substantial one was that if the plaintiff had never been employed by the defendant in any manner as to be entitled to look to him for payment; but, on the contrary, that the plaintiff has been given by the defendant clearly to understand that he was to look to the funds of a committee of Chartists, called the "Defence Committee," which had been formed for the purpose of receiving subscriptions towards defraying the expense of defending the Chartist prisoners. The Jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, damages £101 17s. 6d. The foreman said the Jury had had great difficulty in coming to a verdict, on account of the plaintiff not having properly ascertained who was employer.

The Nation, new series, No. 7," edited by Mr. Gavan Duffy, is advertised to appear in Dublin on Saturday, the 28th of August.

MUSIC.

THE FESTIVALS.

There will be three Musical Festivals this autumn—the first at Liverpool, on the 27th of August; the second at Birmingham, on the 4th of September; and the last at Hereford, on the 11th of September. At each place the festival will last four days. No official programme of the Liverpool meeting has been yet issued, but we understand that Sir Henry Bishop is the conductor, and that there will be a band of 100 players, and a chorus of 200 singers. The "Messiah" of Handel, the "Elijah" of Mendelssohn, and the "Stabat Mater" of Rossini, will be executed at the morning performances in the entire form, besides selections from other sacred works. The vocalists are Madame Grisi, Madame Viardot, Mdlle. Jetty de Treffz, Mdlle. Corbari, Mdlle. Alboni, Miss Catharine Hayes, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Dolby, Signori Marco, Bartolini, Polonini, Tagliafico, Lablache, Herr Pischek, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lockey, Benson, and Whitworth. The solo instrumentalists will be Vivier (horn), Piatti (violoncello), Haldi (piano), and Bottesini (double bass). A ball, with Strauss's band, will terminate the meeting on Friday. The concerts will take place in the new Philharmonic Hall, which will be opened for the occasion.

The preliminary arrangements for the Birmingham meeting have been made. The artistes who are already engaged are—Madame Castellan, Mdlle. Jetty de Treffz, the Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Catherine Hayes, Mdlle. Alboni, Mdlle. De Meric, Signori Marco, Lablache, Mesdames. Sims Reeves, Williams, and Machin. It is probable that the gifted Viardot, the most sublime exponent of sacred and classical music, will be added to the above list. The finest orchestra ever assembled in the world has been secured for this Festival, and particular pains have been taken in the selection of the Chorus. Mr. Costa is to be the Conductor at this great meeting. Mendelssohn's "Athalie" and "Elijah," Handel's "Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt," the "Pastorale" and C minor Symphonies of Beethoven, the A minor Symphony of Mendelssohn, the "Creation," "William Tell," and "Ruy Blas" overtures, will be prominent features at this Festival.

We learn with great pleasure that the gatherings of the three choirs will not be discontinued; and that the Earl of Powis; Sir V. Cornwall, Bart.; Sir T. Hastings, Knt.; the Rev. Canon Musgrave, the Rev. Dr. Ogilvie, and the Rev. Arthur Dyne, by undertaking the office of Stewards, have secured the Festival for this year at Hereford. Mr. G. Townshend Smith, the organist of the Cathedral, will conduct the performances; and Wily and Blagrove are to be the leaders of the band. The vocalists engaged are Madame Castellan, Miss Rowe, A. and M. Williams, Messrs. Phillips, Machin, Lockey, Sims Reeves, and Hobbs.

THE MUSICAL UNION.—The eighth and last meeting of the fifth season took place on Tuesday, at Willis's Rooms. There was a numerous and fashionable company to listen to a classical scheme, commencing with Mendelssohn's Quartet in E flat, No. 2, Op. 12, and ending with Onslow's Quintet in D, No. 5. Signor Bottesini's contra-bass solo (a fantasia from the "Sonnambula:" and Hallé, Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F minor, Op. 57. Salmon, Deloffre, Hill, and Piatti were the executants in the quartet, and, with Bottesini, in the quintet. Miss Dolby sang two of their popular songs in these pieces. Mr. Ella, the director, by the exercise of tact and taste, has brought these interesting meetings to a most successful close; and we have no doubt that the season 1850 will be equally as favourable for the Musical Union, which has now become one of our most valuable institutions.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—Amongst the creditable items at the fourth and last Royal Academy Concert were a Mss. overture, by Mr. Sainton, a King's scholar; a finale to a MS. opera, composed by Mr. Thomas, entitled "Alfred:" and a part song, "Morning, by J. H. Nunn. Mr. Cusins played a movement of Field's violin concerto elegantly. Misses E. and H. Reeves, sisters of the celebrated tenor, distinguished themselves as vocalists.—Signora Garcia de Torres, a vocalist, and M. Demunck, the violoncellist, gave a matinée, on Monday, at the Hanover-square Rooms.—Mr. John Parry in the evening repeated his entertainment, at Willis's Rooms.—Mr. H. C. Cooper and Mr. T. W. Hancock, assisted by Messrs. E. W. Thomas, Hill, Bennett, and Howell, had a performance of classical chamber music on Wednesday.—The fourth and last Concertina Concert of Mr. R. Blagrove took place on Thursday, at the Mortimer-street Rooms.—Madame Oury, the celebrated pianiste, had a matinée musicale on Thursday, at the residence of the Countess of Loveiace.—Meyerbeer's "Prophète" was performed for the 35th time, at the Grand Opera in Paris, on the 6th inst. The furore produced by the acting and singing of Madame Viardot surpassed every former occasion, and the floral shower at the end of the piece lasted several minutes. She arrived in London last Monday, to commence her engagement at the Royal Italian Opera.—Mdme. de Lozano will give a concert on Monday, at the Hanover-square Rooms.—On the same morning Zoncka, the violinist, will have a matinée at the residence of Mdme. Dulcken.—On Wednesday a grand concert will be given at the Hanover-square Rooms by Sir H. R. Bishop. Independently of the strong claims he has on the public, as one of our most popular English composers, a programme will be presented of unusual attraction. In addition to the principal artistes of the two Italian Opera Houses, the élite of our native talent will be heard, besides that distinguished instrumentalists. Costa and Sir H. R. Bishop will conduct this remarkable concert.—On Friday, at the Surrey Zoological Gardens, M. Jullien will give a concert monstre.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The anticipations as to the success of Madame Sontag have been exceeded, on each of the three appearances—in Linda, on Saturday and Tuesday; and as Rosina, in "Il Barbiere de Seviglia," on Thursday. As an artist, the distinguishing characteristics of Madame Sontag are, that she possesses a real, pure, and unalloyed soprano of the highest possible register; likewise that she accompanies her marvels of execution with a degree of fine taste, and that noble style of dramatic feeling with the same absence of effort, and the same natural transition; so that there is no jarring utterance injurious to vocalization, no straining of the muscles of the face, no distressful look, as we usually observed in most other lyrical actresses. All by Madame Sontag is accomplished by the sudden poetry of art—nothing by physical exertion or appeal to physical sympathy. It is fortunate that her début in "Linda" should be in a character so simple, but irresistible, sway as an exponent of real dramatic feeling would have been denied. "Linda" drags along its heavy lingering pathos, taxing the powers of interpretation of the singer through the first three acts; and thus were the dramatic powers of Madame Sontag fully tried and fully exemplified; and that recently fashionable hyper-dramatic style of singing, and of "tearing passion to tatters," to which the many admirable artists have unfortunately, put to name, as if it were written for her vivacious and comic characters as if it had been designed for the gorgeous and form to appear in. In her aria d'entrata, the celebrated "Una voce poco fa," whilst she revelled in the most varied, brilliant, chromatic, and scientific embellishments of the then fashionable school, her tones were so pure, so genial, and so great was the ease with which all was effected, that it appeared but the gushing forth in song of the pent-up joys of a young sensitive heart. In the duet with Marini, Lavia, Soldi, Romeo, and Tagliafico one more feat of this incomparable vocalist—this was her execution of Rhode's variation. The first portion, delivered in the chastest, severest style of vocal science, was followed by a contrast, perfect in its theatrical by the mastery that intonation and accent alone can exert over the audition and feelings of an audience. Then followed the same tune embroidered in the most elaborate and intricate manner, without departing for a instant in all the minute divisions of time—in the staccatos, the arpeggios, the gruppettos, the long-sustained notes, the cadenzas innumerable, both descending as well as ascending—the perfection of vocalization. This appears to be the ultima Thule of vocal science and execution: such was its effect, that, from the moment it was given forth until the fall of the curtain, notating but exclamations of surprise were heard, interrupted by outbursts of applause.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Donizetti's "Lucrezia Borgia," with Grisi, Angri, Mario, Marini, and Tamburini, was given for the first time this season on Saturday night. On Tuesday "Linda" was performed, with Miss Catherine Hayes, Mario, Tagliafico, and Tamburini. Miss Hayes and Mario were in excellent voice, and were recalled at the end of every act with the greatest enthusiasm. Mario's last scene was as splendidly acted as it was sung.

On Thursday night last, for the benefit of Grisi, Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" was repeated for the second time. The extraordinary success attending this wonderful work has created the greatest interest in the musical circles for the production of the famed composer's last masterpiece, "Le Prophète." This opera, which was first represented at the Théâtre de l'Opera, in Paris, on the 16th of April last, had a run of twenty-five nights up to the 6th inst.; and, even in the midst of chorera and political troubles, never failed to draw immense house.

The version about to be produced at the Royal Italian Opera will include Mdme. Viardot, in her original part of Fidès, the mother of Jean of Leyden, sustained in Paris by Roger. The three chiefs of the revolt in Westphalia are to be played by Mel, Formes, and Marini. Lavia, Soldi, Romeo, Tagliafico, and Gassier are included in the cast; and Mdlle. Corbari and Mdlle. Merico have song in t. a finale of the third act, in the Coronation Scene.

"Le Prophète" in Paris surpasses every opera ever before produced at the Grand Opera; and it is to be hoped that it will be brought out here, in a grander scale.

ST. JAMES'S

The season of French plays draws to a conclusion. Last week, the Opéra Comique gave way to the Théâtre Vaudeville; the present has been devoted to a few amusing pieces of the kind, in which M. Arnal and Madame Doche have been accustomed to delight the inquiring hours of a London night. On Monday were presented the well-known vaudevilles of "Le Mari de la Dame de Chœurs," and "Monsieur et Madame Coulard:" these were once called on Wednesday by "Edmundo de Lasen, "Un Monsieur et une Dame," and "Cabaret de Lucien." The talent of Arnal and Madame Doche are unquestionable but justice has not always been done to the subordinates. Madame Manchal merits some attention; as the ancienne dancreuse, Lolotte, she was on Monday excellent: the dance into which she is taunted by Mogust won a well-deserved encore. "Le Manarde du Crime," and "Le Bal du Grande Monde," are announced as the vaudevilles intended to conclude the season, which next week will positively terminate.

Mons. Arnal's benefit is fixed for Monday next, when he will appear in (for the first time) the vaudeville of "Un Bal du Grande Monde," and (for the last time) in "Monsieur et Madame Galochard," and "La Mansarde du Crime."

Mdme. Doche's benefit will take place on Wednesday, when she will appear in the vaudevilles of "L'Image, le Livre et le Rat" (by desire, and for the last time), "Ce que Femme veut," and "Le Mari de la Dame de Chœurs," being the last night but one of the season.

HAYMARKET.

A new farce, in one act, by Mr. Buckstone, called "An Alarming Sacrifice," was successfully produced on Thursday. The hero is a linen-draper's assistant, who comes down to his late uncle's country villa to take possession of his property, and there meets with Susan Sweetapple (Mrs. Fitzwilliam), his uncle's late servant, who, insisting upon leaving his service and having her box examined, previous to her departure, gives occasion for the old gentleman's will in her favour to be found wrapped up in a dress which he had presented to her just before his illness. The fortunes of Bob Tickit (Mr. Buckstone) are thus changed; but still he has the mortification of finding himself in the power of the rightful existence of the document. Bob, however, determines to make "an alarming sacrifice" and be honest. He is ultimately rewarded for his disinterested conduct, and shares the estate, of course, with Susan. The interest of the piece depends on its dialogue, which is of the smartest, and kept the audience in perpetual laughter.

LYCEUM.

The English opera of "Guy Mannering" contains some beautiful composition of Sir H. R. Bishop, amongst which may be cited the opening glee, "The Winds whistle cold," and the "Clough and Crow," in the gipsy scene, two works remarkable with poetic feeling which would alone immortalise the composer's name Miss Cushman, on Wednesday night, appeared in this opera, in her well-known character of Meg Merrilies, which she enacts with much energy and passion. Harley's Dandie Sampson is one of his best impersonations. The Dandie Dinmont of Mr. H. Hall does not make us forget the late Mackay, but it is a good conception spiritedly carried out. Mr. Charles Romer, the new tenor, who made his début as Henry Bertram, has a powerful voice, and, with more confidence and cultivation, he will be a welcome addition to the list of our native singers. Miss Lucy Bertram was nicely played and sung by Miss Fitzwilliam. Miss Cushman received an ovation at the close of the play.

SURREY.

Under the direction of Miss Romer an operatic campaign commenced last Monday night, with Bellini's "Somnambula," Miss Romer, Miss Poole, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Travers, Mr. Leffler, Mr. Delavanti, and Mr. Weiss as the principal singers. Miss Poole has appeared in her popular part of Maria in Donizetti's "Figlia del Reggimento." Mr. Loder is the conductor. An English version of Meyerbeer's "Huguenots" will be one of the earliest novelties.

NEW STRAND.

Mr. Farren has presented his audience at this theatre with a version of the "Polichinelle," acted last season at the St. James's. Mr. Leigh Murray takes the part of Jubo, a gentleman, it will be recollected, who has to suffer from the unpleasant jests of his wife, Lauretta (Mrs. Compton). These are excited by the mystery attaching to the concealment of a hump on his shoulders. Mrs. Compton plays with pathos and spirit; and Mr. Murray, if not exactly the "inimitable Punch," was, in his solicitous regard for his jealous partner, altogether a high-minded and most loyal husband. The piece is in the second week of its attraction; but it has been corroborated by Mr. Selby's pleasant farces of "Chamber Practice," and "The Widow's Victim," in which Mr. Compton and Mr. H. Farren appear, the former as Chevy Chase, being another character of the "Scapegoat" was revived on Monday, when Mr. Farren, as Ignatius Polyglot, reminded us of his best days.

ADELPHI.

We have here, too an adaptation from the French. The "Almanack de vingt-cinque-mille Addresses" has been converted into "Webster's Royal Red Book," in which Mr. Wright and Paul Bedford, as Mr. Thomas Augustus Tadcaster and Mr. Bridge, alias Mr. Thompson, are irresistibly humorous. It will be recollected that Mr. Reach, some time ago, produced a similar drama, under the title of "Which Mr. Smith?" We cannot help suspecting, that, but for this preoccupation of the name, Mr. Bridge would have furnished us Mr. Smith on the occasion. The name in the French piece is Lefebvre, of which family, as above intimated, Paris contains a large number of individuals.

The foundation-stone of the OLYMPIC Theatre was laid on Saturday last. Mr. Spicer has retired from the management.

LITERATURE.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON SPELLING-BOOK. Published at 198, Strand. One hundred and forty pages, with one hundred and seventy-five Engravings, for one shilling, would be a tempting modicum of paper, illustration, and print, had this new Spelling Book no other recommendations to public preference. Among the latter, the arrangement of the lessons meets the first difficulty of learning to read, by the simplified combinations of letters shown in the words of one syllable. The Engravings are novel, and suggestive of inquiry, and, in execution, are decidedly superior to spelling-book illustrations generally. In some of them, too, are "lines of fair encouragement: "Home for the Holidays," the frontispiece, is a coach-load of happy boys; and "The Queen and the Blue Coat Boys" is a scene likely to kindle many an aspiring emotion in the young breast. The title-page, too, is a pleasing composition of books and play, gracefully surrounding the portrait of the Queen, as well as the feelings, there is much to commend, whilst the initial picture-letters, of which the book contains a host, form not the least inviting of its attractions.

FINE ARTS.

SATAN TEMPTING EVE.

Is the subject of a large statuesque group, by Mr. E. B. Stephens, of Upper Belgrave-place, which is now being exhibited at his studio. The subject has the advantage of being new to sculpture. The artist has, of course, omitted the "tools," in which Satan is made to tempt the mother of mankind. He has preferred Eve's own account:—

> One shaped and winged [as one of those from Heaven,
> Which in the gardens and to Eden bring
> Her daily embassies.

He has, however, invested his wings with claws, to intimate his demoniac nature. Eve is supposed to be conscious of his whisperings, as manifested by her nervous restlessness, and convulsive grasping of the hand. Satan is earnest in his persuasions, and presents a fine, bold, titanic figure, highly creditable to the sculpt-er's conception.

NAPOLEON A FONTAINEBLEAU.

M. Delaroche's fine picture of "Napoléon à Fontainbleau," is 31 Mars, 1814, is now being exhibited at Messrs Colnaghi and Co.'s A fine engraving by M. François, of Paris, is in progress, and will, no doubt, when executed, become a favourite print. The picture itself, in its style of art, is decidedly a great one. Napoleon in the hour of his despair is grandly indicated. His countenance is profoundly and painfully reflective the past, a life of enterprise and equivocal success, the future, dark, unpromising, terrible—both may be read in its earnest and anxious expression. The accessories, even to the dirty boots, are illustrative of the moment chosen; and the effect of the whole is imposing.

MONUMENT TO EARL GREY.

A monument, about to be erected in the chancel of Howick church, to the memory of the late Earl Grey—executed from the designs of Frederick J. Francis, Esq., Architect, Newcastle—we have now on view at that sculptor's atelier in Oxford-street. It is a highly enriched canopied composition, which we shall shortly illustrate.

FLYING DUTCHMAN. Painted by J. W. HILLYARD. Engraved by C. N. SMITH. Moore.

This print, nicely engraved and coloured from the original picture, represents the Winner of the Derby Stakes at Epsom, 1849; was foaled in 1844, trained by J. Fobert, and ridden by Charles Marlow. He was bred in 1846, by the late Mr. Vansittart, and is the property of the Earl of Eglinton, to whom the publisher has, by special permission, dedicated this print.

LAUNCH OF AN AUSTRIAN WAR-STEAMER.—One of three war-steamers now building for the Austrian Government, at the ship-yard of Messrs. Patterson and Co., of Bristol, was launched on Thursday afternoon (last week). The vessel, which is called the Cerva, is 160 feet in length between the perpendiculars, 24 feet 3 inches in extreme width, and 12 feet depth of hold. By the rule laid down by the British Admiralty she is 970 tons burthen. Her engines have been manufactured by Messrs. Miller and Ravenhill, of London, and are of the collective power of 220 horses.

HANWELL ASYLUM FETE.—On Thursday a fête was held at Hanwell Asylum, including a Lazaar and fancy sale of useful and other articles, the work of the female patients of the establishment. The proceeds of the day were devoted to "the Adelaide Fund, for the assistance of the convalescent patients on their discharge." Fortunately, the day was exceedingly fine, and the company both fashionable and numerous. The grounds of the asylum were admirably fitted out for display There were six or seven booths well stocked with embroidered and tasteful manufactures for sale and raffle. Speculation seemed to be going on cheerfully, and those who lost appeared to have nearly as smiling faces as those who won. The patients discharged on the occasion were indebted, it is said by, with the game of cricket, while the band of the 11th Hussars was in attendance, and entertained the company with appropriate music. A screen purchased by the Marquis of Salisbury, representing, we believe, the marriage of Henry VIII. and Anne Boleyn, was exceedingly creditable to the work.

THE WRONG LEG.—Matthews being invited by D'Egville to dine one day with him at Brighton, D'Egville inquired what was Matthews's favourite dish? "A roasted leg of pork, with sage and onions" This was thrusted; and D'Egville, carving, soon found he could not find the stuffing. He turned the joint all over, but in vain. Pork was at table, and in his quiet way said, "Don't make yourself unhappy, D'Egville; perhaps it is in the other leg."—Rambles and Anecdote Book.

THE ERROR OF THE COMMUNISTS, AND MISCHIEVOUS CONSEQUENCES OF COMMUNISM.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS )

SIR,—The error of the Communists is one of overweening presumption. Because the Government they live under has failed to make the bulk of the people opulent and happy, they think the business in hand, believing that it is in their power to promote national welfare. Because Government has violated property, they propose to regulate it, and organise society on some scheme of their own. They borrow from the statesman their aim at supplying the erroneous notion that the whole of society must be regulated by one or two individuals From confining their attention, like the generality of political writers, to the acts of Government, they see nothing beyond them, and believe that Government organises society. But the increase of population everywhere carrying with it the increase of knowledge, extending trade, improving arts, and constraining Governments to go with it, or breaking them to pieces with fearful disturbance, as we have lately seen, if they hold back, must satisfy everybody that Government does not organise society. The whole stream of modern events proves that it follows, and is the servant; while it pretends to go before, and be the master of society. In fact, the Power that places man on the earth, and makes him a gregarious animal, determines, at all times, all the conditions of his existence. It prescribes all his rights and all his duties. It never ceases to regulate the seasons and all the phenomena connected with them, such as the production of food; and, consequently, never ceases to determine the conditions of the existence of man, and to prescribe all his rights and duties.

Now, of all the rights of individuals and their correlative duties, none, except the right to live and the duty to abstain from murder, are better defined than the right of property and the correlative duty "thou shalt not steal." To make this clear, we must agree as to what is property. "Nothing," says Mr. John Stuart Mill, "is implied in property but the right of each to his own faculties, to what he can produce by them and to whatever he can get for them in a fair market, together with his right to give this to another if he chooses, and the right of that other to receive and enjoy it." This principle cannot apply to what is not the produce of labour, the raw material of the earth. Though land is not the produce of labour, most of its valuable qualities are. The land itself, therefore, the raw material, is not included in the idea of property, but only the produce of labour. Without entering into the very important question of the appropriation of the soil, further than to say that it has taken place wherever man has existed, and is necessary to secure to the labourer the produce of his toil, and without giving any opinion as to the mode in which the soil of our own country has been appropriated, but taking it as it exists, something which this generation has inherited, together with all the arts and knowledge and civilisation that have come down to them from a long line of ancestors, like Mr. Mill and Locke, I confine the idea of property to the produce of labour.

But all wealth is the produce of labour. Wheat is annually created is annually consumed. "The greater part, in value," says Mr. J. S. Mill, "of the wealth now existing in England, has been produced by human hands within the last twelve months." The most essential part of the wealth annually produced and consumed is food. Without food, life cannot be sustained; and, as what a man eats becomes a part of his body, it necessarily belongs to him. The right of property, therefore, is an essential part of the right to live; and the Communists, in proposing to regulate the distribution of the produce of labour, destroy the right of property, and only lay claim to what but, up to the present time, it has been impossible to do more than furnish a dinner daily to the working classes, and three times a week to the rest. This part of the system is very essential, as the children are, for the most part, on their entrance into the school, utterly unfit to work or learn, from their half-starved condition

It will thus be seen that this is a "Ragged School," and something more—an institution in which the wretched children of those who have no visible means of subsistence may be rescued from many of the evils of their lot, and trained up to better things, to a taste and aptitude for other and better employments than hawking and begging in the streets, not to mention those criminal pursuits to which such practices inevitably lead. During the three years the School has been in operation, sufficient has been effected to afford satisfactory proof, that the system, carried out to its full extent, would tend more than anything else to diminish the source of crime.

Altogether, this is a most promising step towards the moral improvement of one of our largest commercial and manufacturing towns; although its provision of public education is already by no means scanty, enough has been adduced to prove the necessity for this addition; and we trust to see it receive the liberal support of the upper and middle circles of the town, themselves a highly improved and intellectual community.

To effect this, it is indispensable that ample accommodation in a wholesome, well-ventilated building should be provided, to contain workshops for boys and dining-rooms, baths, kitchen, laundry, &c.; and, as "all work" is by no means a good maxim, there should be play-grounds attached. Hence, there is much to be done, though much has already been accomplished towards obtaining such accommodation.

A large plot of ground has been granted by the Governors of King Edward's School to Mr. Yorke, who has raised towards the expenses of building a sum of £800, and has also obtained a grant from the Privy Council amounting to nearly £500 more. But, in addition to these sums, it will be necessary to raise at least £500 for the building alone: and a further effort will be made to raise sum of money as a commencement of an endowment, in order that the School may not be wholly dependent on the precarious support of annual contributions.

At present, the income of the School may be estimated at £180 per annum rom all sources: viz. sermons, subscriptions, and proceeds of work done by the children. The last item amounted to £70 during 1848. During that year the ncome covered all the expenses of tuition, rent, coals, light, &c., so that the education of the children may be roughly estimated at about £1 per head. The children's food is not included in this estimate, it having been provided by other inds.

One feature of the plan, which ought to be specified in order to give a complete idea of the establishment, is the provision for boarding and lodging twenty-four deserted or orphan children (twelve boys and twelve girls). The plan of the new building contains dormitories for this number.

We have engraved a perspective view of the School-house, which it is proposed to build from the designs of Mr. G. W. Orford, Waterloo-street, Birmingham. The material will be of brick, chequered with darker bricks; whilst the gables and chimney-shafts carry the mind's eye back to the age when grammar-schools were first introduced. The plan comprises a basement, with workshops, washing-house, and laundry, and other offices. In the two wings are the boys' and girls' school-rooms, with dormitories over; the centre being occupied by the lofty dining-hall, the entire height of the building.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL WOLFE, NEAR QUEBEC.

MONUMENT TO GENERAL WOLFE.

AFTER a lapse of 70 years, it was reserved for the Earl of Dalhousie, when Governor-in-Chief of the British provinces in North America, to erect, to the memory of two gallant and distinguished officers, Wolfe and Montcalm, the monument which stands in the Government garden at Quebec, commanding a fine view of the harbour and the scenery beyond it. The first stone was laid in 1827, and the monument was completed in 1828. It was designed by Major Young, of the 79th Highlanders, and bears suitable inscriptions

This is not, however, the only memorial raised here to the memory of Wolfe. On the plains of Abraham, where the battle which gave Canada to Great Britain was fought, Lord Aylmer, in 1834, erected a small column on the spot where the young and gallant Wolfe breathed his last. It bore the simple inscription—

HERE DIED
WOLFE
IN THE ARMS OF VICTORY.

Lately, however, the column became so mutilated by the Vandal attacks of sailors visiting the port, anxious to possess themselves of some part of the pillar, that it fell down and was neglected, until the officers of the army now in Canada, stimulated and encouraged by the late distinguished Commander of the Forces, Sir Benjamin D'Urban, resolved upon replacing it by the column shown in the Engraving, which was only finished early in June of the present year. It is from a design by Sir James Alexander, A.D.C. to the late Commander of the Forces. It is a neat column, about 40 feet in height, and is visible from the St. Lewis-road. The memorial is surmounted by a bronzed bronze sword, the former being encircled with a wreath of laurel.

We are indebted to Mr. Murray, artist, of Quebec, for the sketch of this interesting tribute to British heroism.

SPLENDID TESTIMONIAL TO THE DUKE OF HAMILTON.

This magnificent silver-gilt piece of plate has just been presented to the venerable Duke of Hamilton, K.G., by his Grace's tenantry. It is a tripod-shaped candelabrum for nine lights, in the centre of which is a figure of Minerva, upon a scroll-work shaft. Below is a group of cleverly modelled figures, representing Vulcan bringing Arms from the caverns of the earth, chained, and delivering him up to Science. Genius is looking on, watching the progress of the Arts. On the other side are two figures of equal beauty—Ceres and Pluto disputing the riches of the earth.

The group rests on a plinth, bearing the Duke's crest, arms, and scrolls in relief, with an inscription running over three sides. On the first side, as follows:—

"To the Most Noble Alexander, Duke of Hamilton, Brandon, and Chatzelherault, Marquis of Hamilton, Douglas, and Clydesdale, Earl of Angus, Arran, Lanark, and Cambridge, Lord Hamilton, Aven, Polmont, Macanshyre, Innerdale, Abernethy, Jed Forrest, and Dutton; Premier Peer of Scotland, K.G., F.R.S., F.S.A., Hereditary Keeper of the Palace of Holyrood, one of her Majesty's Most Honourable Privy Council, Lord-Lieutenant and High Sheriff of the county of Lanark, Trustee of the British Museum," &c.

And the third side concludes:—"In testimony of their attachment and gratitude for his Grace's kindness and liberality during the course of half a century. A.D. 1849."

This superb plate has been manufactured by Mr. Mairhead, of Buchanan-street, Glasgow. It weighs 1200 ounces of solid silver, and is gilt: the cost has been £1200.

RAILWAY EXPRESS STEAM-BOAT.

On Saturday afternoon Messrs. Robinson and Russell, the eminent engineers and iron ship-builders, launched from their works at Millwall a beautifully constructed iron steamer, built for the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Company, and intended to run between Hull and the terminus of the railway at Great Grimsby. The novelty of the launch consisted in the vessel having her engines and boilers already fitted on board, instead of being launched empty—a plan by which much delay is saved, and great accuracy of workmanship ensured. With due regard to the nature of the services to be performed, the vessel has a large saloon or waiting-room, on deck, fifty feet in length, twelve feet wide, and nine high, so that passengers will not require to go down into the cabin. The saloon is to be fitted with plate glass windows, and furnished with sofas and seats similar to those in a first-class railway carriage.

The dimensions of the vessel are—

Length of keel	.. ..	150 feet.
Beam	.. ..	22 feet 6 inches.
Depth	.. ..	10 feet 6 inches.
Oscillating engines	.. ..	150 horse-power.

The hull, as well as the engines, were made at the works of Messrs. Robinson and Russell.

This boat, with the sister vessel built at Hull, but now in the Thames to be fitted with engines, is to form part of a great system of communication across the Humber, designed by Mr. Fowler, the engineer of the line, and is well calculated to diminish to the utmost the inconveniences of having a railway intercepted by an arm of the sea. A pier on each side runs into deep water, and carries railway trains upon it alongside the boat. On getting out of the carriages, passengers will find themselves beside the saloon of the express steam-boat, which will immediately convey them across the ferry, at a rate of not less than 15 miles an hour, to a similar pier on the opposite side. When these arrangements are finished, they will form a most complete railway steam-ferry, and much more expeditious than any hitherto brought into use.

The full accomplishment of these objects is further attained by a number of peculiar provisions. It is required that these vessels should only draw, when fully equipped and in service, less than four feet water, and the Manchester, when launched, with her engines and boilers on board, was found to draw little more than three feet. Another provision of the vessel is that she shall never have the delay of turning round, but shall steer equally from both ends. The rudders which accomplish this are peculiarly strong and accurate pieces of workmanship; the rudder-posts forming what are called snuff-box joints, and the rudders themselves forming part of the lines of the vessel, so as not to be distinguishable from its natural form when used as a bow. The existence, also, of the saloon on deck requires that the steersman be placed at a considerable height, and the vessel is steered by a wheel on an elevated platform near the centre of the ship.

The engines consist of a pair of oscillating cylinders, 48 inches in diameter, and 4 feet 9 inches length of stroke. They are fitted with a peculiar valve gear, which enables them to be stopped, started, or reversed in their action instantaneously, so as to lose the least possible time at either end of the journey, and to stop instantaneously in case of obstruction. The framing, also, of the engines is of a peculiarly light and strong description, being wholly formed of wrought iron instead of cast iron. In consequence, also, of the engine and boat being built in the same establishment, their framing has been combined together, so as to give greatly increased strength and durability to both. These are some of the provisions which have been made to suit the peculiar requisites of the service in which the vessel is to be employed.

The ceremony of christening was performed by Mrs. Cole, who gave the vessel the appropriate name of "The Manchester." A slight accident interrupted the launch for a short time, but by the aid of a tug she "took the water," amidst the cheers of a vast body of spectators, in gallant style.

After the launch, Messrs Robinson and Russell entertained a party of friends in the cabin of the Pandora, a pleasure steam-yacht, built for the Nawab Nizam, of Moorshedabad, and launched on the 21st ult. Mr. Russell took the chair, and the usual toasts were duly celebrated, the principal being, "Success to the Manchester," which was replied to by Mr. Cole, who took the opportunity to describe the enormous dock-works now in construction at Grimsby.

CANDELABRUM PRESENTED TO HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF HAMILTON, K.G.

GRAND DINNER AT THE MANSION HOUSE, ON SATURDAY.

THE BOWER BIRDS,

THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S-PARK.

THE remarkable example of bird architecture which we have represented below, is the production of a pair of Satin Bower Birds, which have lately been obtained by the Zoological Society from Mr. Aspinwall, of Sydney, by whose care and good management they were successfully imported into this country. They are the first living examples which have ever reached Europe; and their immediate recurrence to their natural habits when established in the new aviary of the Society, is a fact which cannot fail to be of great interest both to the members and to the visitors, who peek in that extensive menagerie an insight into the mysteries of exotic zoology.

The Satin Bower Bird was one of the earliest known species in the Australian fauna, and probably received the name of Satin Gracle, by which it was described in Latham's "General History of Birds," from the intensely black glossy plumage of the adult male, which the young bird at the gardens is now beginning to assume, as indicated in the upper figure of our illustration. But although the existence of this bird was noticed by most of the writers on the natural history of Australia subsequent to Latham, it appears that no suspicion of its singular economy had extended beyond the remotest settlers, until Mr. Gould, whose great work on the "Birds of Australia" is known to every one, unravelled the history of the Bowers, which had been discovered in many parts of the bush, and which had been attributed to almost every possible origin but the right one.

The constructive instinct of the Satin Bower Bird (Ptilonorhynchus holosericeus) is rivaled, according to the statement of Mr. Gould, by two species of a closely-allied form, known to ornithologists as Chlamydera maculata and Chlamydera nuchalis. The former of these constructs a bower nearly three feet in length; and there is no question but that it would thrive as well in confinement as the Satin Bird, if the Society could obtain specimens.

The bower, as will be seen by the Illustration, is composed of twigs woven together in the most compact manner, and ornamented with shells and feathers, the disposition of which the birds are continually altering. It is probable that, in a state of nature, these decorative materials are conveyed from considerable distances to the site of the bower, which is uniformly beneath the shadow of a tree. The extreme shyness of the birds, who retire from the bower on the first approach of a spectator, accounts for the origin and object of these structures remaining so long unknown, even to the settlers. They have no connexion with the nest, and are simply playing-places, in which the birds divert themselves during the months which immediately precede nidification.

The Birds in the Regent's Park are at present occupied at intervals throughout the day in altering or making additions to the bower, chasing each other through it, saluting each other with grotesque movements, and uttering varied notes of love, anger, and reconciliation. Their great liveliness and apparent health would almost lead to the conclusion, that, as they have proceeded so successfully with the bower, they may eventually make a nest, and thus elucidate the only point in their interesting history which Mr. Gould was unable to solve during his researches in Australia.

The Illustration has been engraved by permission of the Council of the Zoological Society, from a drawing in their possession made at the Gardens by Mr. Wolf, whose talent is inferior to none in delineating the characteristic action of birds. The Engraving is necessarily of small size, to suit the space here devoted to it; but the birds themselves are nearly as large as a jackdaw. The female is green in colour, the centre of the breast feathers yellowish; the burnished plumage of the male is similar: the eyes of both are brilliant blue.

BOWER BIRDS IN THE MENAGERIE OF THE ZOOLOGIC

Ledru-Rollin, Etienne Arago, Martin Bernard, and Serjeant Bolchot arrived in London on Wednesday afternoon, from Ostend.

Two musical celebrities have recently perished with arms in their hands during the political disturbances in Italy—namely, Giuseppe Viannotti, a distinguished singer, who was killed on the 3d ult., under the walls of Rome; and Marliani, the author of "The Bravo" and "La Xacarilla," who died from a wound he received at Bologna. Marliani belonged to a rich family of Lombardy, and when very young ranged himself under the banner of Carbonarism. After the year 1830, having spent his fortune in prosecuting his political ideas, he went to France, where Rossini encouraged him in his musical studies. On his return to Italy, he met his death in defending the city of Bologna.

IRISH PRODUCE.—The following compendious statement of the importations of provisions of various descriptions into the metropolis from Ireland, the produce of that country, during the period comprising from the 11th ult. to the 9th inst., will serve to show the extent of the supplies of this nature from the sister island at the present time. They comprised 37,985 casks, boxes, and other packages of general provisions; 417 packages of feathers; 980 packages of pork; 502 head of horned cattle; 181 sheep; 108 lambs; 106 calves; 1024 packages of salmon; 1089 casks of lard; 316 packages of linens; 421 packages of beef; 1360 packages of soap; 21 packages of soap, and a quantity of oatmeal, [illegible] meal, leather, skins, vinegar, and various other articles of general merchandise.

BANQUET AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

ON Saturday evening, the Lord Mayor entertained a large party of gentlemen eminent in art, science, and literature.

The list of the company comprised the names of the Earl of Rosse (President of the Royal Society), the Marquis of Westminster, Earl de Grey, the Bishops of London, Llandaff, and Norwich; Lord Dudley Stuart, the Lord Chief Baron, Hon. G. Waldegrave; Admirals Sir F. Codrington and Sir F. Beaufort; Captains Sir E. Belcher and Sir S. Brown, R.N.; Sir Roderick Murchison, Sir Henry de la Beche, Sir George Staunton, Bart., M.P.; Sir De Lacy Evans, M.P.; Sir Charles Lemon, Bart., M.P.; Sir Benjamin Brodie, Bart.; Sir Henry Dymoke, Bart., Sir Philip Grey Egerton, Bart., M.P.; Sir W. [illegible], Sir Rose, Sir R. Westmacott, Sir Henry Ellis, Sir Frederick Madden, Sir [illegible] of the Royal Society; The Dean of Westminster, Mr. C. Konzie, Mr. [illegible] Sabine, Mr. Gassiot, Mr. Graham, Dr. Miller, Dr. Roget, and Pr[illegible] Royal Academicians: Messrs. Jones, Turner, Mulready, Cooper, Baily, Cook, Leslie, Pickersgill, Etty, Eastlake, E. Landseer, Clarkson Stanfield, Cockerell, Doering, Uwins, Lee, Wyon, Maclise, Wilkerington, Hart, Hardwick, Roberts, Barry, Knight, C. Landseer, Webster, M'Dowell, Herbert, Cope, Dyce, and Sir C. Wastmacott. Messrs. Hume, M.P.; H. T. Hope, M.P.; R. Stephenson, M.P.; Locke, M.P.; Aglionby, M.P.; Anderson, M.P.; Brotherton, M.P.; Thornly, M.P.; Chaplin, M.P.; Christy, M.P.; Divett, W. [illegible]ham, M.P.; Lieutenant-Colonel Sykes, Captain Walcott, R.N.; Professors Faraday, Forbes, Donaldson, Hoffman, Brande, and Pepper; Dr. Paris, President of the College of Physicians, Mr. Stanley, President of the College of Surgeons; Mr. Field, President of the College of Civil Engineers, Doctors Lyon Playfair, Lecocq, M'William, Arnott, [illegible] Conquest, and Rolland; Alderman Farncomb, Moon, Wire[illegible] and Carden; Messrs. Rogers, Brunel, Cubitt, Rendel, Babbage, Tooke, Pim, Panizzi, [illegible] Forbes, Graves, Hopkins, G. R. Porter, Carnegie of Craigo-hall, Laurence, J. S. Green, Murdo Young, Scott Knox, Copley Fielding, Brockedon, G. F. Guthrie, Hurlestone, Bunning, Charles Dickens, Thackeray, Mark Lemon, Horace Mayhew, Doyle, Leech, Jerdan, Tom Taylor, Wood, R. Taylor, &c.

Dinner was served in the Egyptian Hall, which was superbly decorated for the occasion: covers were laid for 200 guests. The band of the Coldstream Guards performed in the gallery during dinner. Grace was said by the Rev. Mr. Cattley, chaplain to the Lord Mayor.

The Lord Mayor having pledged his visitors in the loving cup, proceeded to give the usual loyal and constitutional toasts, which were warmly responded to by the company.

The Lord Mayor then rose, and said, that though politics were, as a rule, generally excluded from that hall on occasions like the present, it was, nevertheless, customary to pay a mark of respect to her Majesty's Minister. He regretted that the late debate on the previous night in the House of Commons deprived him of the company of Lord John Russell, who was most anxious to be present to meet so distinguished a company, and he (the Lord Mayor) had also been most anxious to show his Lordship that the chief magistrate of the city of London was honoured by the presence of an array of talent not to be equalled in any other city in the known world.

The toast was drunk with applause.

The Lord Mayor next gave the health of the Earl of Rosse, the President of the Royal Society, coupling with it the healths of Mr. Jones, R.A., and the Royal Academy, and referred to the great benefits those institutions conferred on the community and on the world at large.

Lord Rosse felt how very inadequately he could acknowledge the compliment now paid to that distinguished body, the Royal Society. He must, however, express the obligation which he himself felt, and he was sure they all collectively entertained, for the high honour which had just been conferred upon them. Agreeing as they all did in a just appreciation of the importance and value of science,—surrounded as he was by men of high science, and by those who had attained distinction by the cultivation of the fine arts, he was sure it would be useless, perhaps it would be bad taste, to say anything in recommendation of the pursuit of science for its own sake. Nor was it requisite to insist on the powerful influence which the Royal Society had exercised since the days of Newton in promoting the progress of science. It was unnecessary to remind them that their "Transactions" were the records of the chief scientific achievements of this country for the last two centuries. This fact, he was sure, no gentleman in that room could for a moment overlook; but they might, perhaps, forget that speculations, however abstruse, had usually in the end a practical bearing, leading, step by step, to practical results, teaching us to change the shape and adapt the products of nature for the use of man. Surrounded on every side by the comforts and luxuries of civilised life, we should remember that for all these we are mainly indebted to the labours of ingenious philosophers, who, toiling for the pure love of science, often unheeded, perhaps unknown, had brought to light principles, at the time perhaps apparently barren and unprofitable, but destined to develope mighty and wonderful fruits. When a principle was discovered, and almost immediately afterwards applied, the world saw at once the connexion between theory and practice. Professor Gerstner stated that the discovery that electric metals, through the agency of a voltaic current, became invested with artificial polarity, and, as one of the results, we had got the electric telegraph. When we used that astonishing machine, and received intelligence of it with the rapidity of thought, we were apt to forget the debt of gratitude we owed to the distinguished philosopher who had furnished us, as it were, with a new sense—a new faculty. (Cheers.) But this principle observed might not for a long time be applied to practice. We were conveyed from town to town with the velocity of the wind, trusting implicitly to engineering science; or carried from port to port over the tempestuous ocean by powerful nautical science, but for whatever there was of certainty in engineering or nautical science, we were indebted to those geometers who worked and brought out a variety of deductions in every way the most intangible to practice—speculations about lines, and circles, and curves, and angles, made 2000 years ago. So close was the connexion between science when theoretic and everything the world called practical, useful, and valuable, that, taking the whole range of our manufactures, not an art we possessed but was traceable to the discovery of some principle. In science, manufactures had their origin. (Cheers.) Manufactures were but science applied to practice. Being, then, pre-eminent in manufactures, it was for us to consider how pre-eminent in science also? Was it not possible, if we fell behind the world in science, we might fall behind in manufactures too? He had simply glanced at the importance of science as an engine to convert to our use the materials of the globe as far as they were placed within our reach, and had spoken of the Royal Society merely as promoting science in that respect: he had taken the lowest ground, and looked at the subject merely as a utilitarian. To extend the boundaries of science was its own sake was, he was sure, in such an assembly wholly unnecessary. Every gentleman present was fully alive to the importance of science with reference to its action on the mind of man, and to the gratification it afforded to that high nature—training, elevating, and ennobling it, to comprehend the works of creation—teaching it that everywhere in the works of the Creator, whether most minute or gigantic, perfection reigned—design and contrivance at once perfect and everlasting. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. Jones returned thanks for the Royal Academy

The next toast was "The health of the Members of Westminster and the House of Peers," which was drunk with cheers, and briefly acknowledged.

The Lord Mayor next proposed "the healths of the Bishops of London, Lincoln, and Norwich."

The Bishop of London returned thanks. He felt he was indebted for his position as one of the honoured guests of the chief magistrate of the city of London to the office he held in the Royal Academy. He considered it no slight privilege to have been connected with that establishment for the last few years. There was a natural, if not a necessary, connexion between religion, art, and science. He need hardly remind them that ancient art attained its greatest splendour when employed in illustrating the mythology of the Greeks and Romans. The masterpieces of Christian art were still to be found over Catholic altars; and, though the severer genius of our own reformed church disowned the assistance of painting as an adjunct to those means by which devotion was excited, yet she did not disdain, but, on the contrary, most cordially and respectfully invited, the assistance of the sister arts of sculpture and architecture. With the finest specimens of these the city of London abounded. With respect to science, there was not merely a natural but a necessary connexion between it and religion. What was science but the knowledge of truth? Science could not but illustrate the glories of Christianity. The Holy Scriptures were but truth, truth unmixed with error; and he could not but remark that some of the most conclusive, convincing evidences of the existence, benevolence, and wisdom of the Deity had been furnished by distinguished men of science, which he could not enumerate examples. This only would be say: the dying testimony of Laplace was, "Whatever you do, never part with religion; never consent to the overthrow of your religion: from you everything may be expected—a good Government, all civil rights, all social happiness." (Cheers.) In conclusion, he right rev. prelate proposed the "health of the Lord Mayor," which was drunk amidst much applause.

The Lord Mayor returned thanks; and next proposed Earl de Grey, as president of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

Earl De Grey returned thanks, commenting on the beneficial results of the institution over which he presided.

The Lord Mayor afterwards proposed the health of "the Lord Chief Baron and her Majesty's Judges," of "Sir C. Lemon and the House of Commons," which was acknowledged respectively by Sir F. Pollock and Sir C. Lemon.

The Lord Mayor then gave "The Literary Gentlemen present," connecting with it the health of Mr. C Dickens, to whose genius he paid a high compliment.

The toast was met with the most hearty and enthusiastic cheering.

Mr. C Dickens briefly expressed his deep-felt sense of this grateful recognition of the claims of literature. It was a gratifying compliment to those who devoted their abilities to the instruction and rational amusement of their fellows, to receive such a tribute from the chief magistrate of the City of London.

The remaining toasts were "The Sheriffs and City Magistrates," which having been duly acknowledged, the company separated.

During the evening, a musical party, under the direction of Mr. Jolly, comprising, besides the leader, Miss Rainforth, Mr. Henderson, and Mr. Stanford, performed several vocal pieces, accompanied by Mr. T. Jolly on the pianoforte.

The following received invitations, but were unavoidably prevented from being present:—

Lord John Russell, the Marquis of Northampton, Earls of Burlington and Yarborough, Lord Brougham, Lord Ashley, Right Hons. T. B. Macaulay, Sidney Herbert, W. Cowper, Sir Maria Arthur Shee, Sir James Clark, Sir John Herschel, Sir R. Sinirke, Sir Denis Le Marchant, Sir W. Hooker, C. R. Cockerell, Mr. Hawes, M.P.; Sergeant Talfourd, M.P.; Monckton Milnes, M.P.; Professors Owen, Beigemann, and Airey; Messrs Hallam, Grote, Horner, M'Culloch, Alfred Chalon, F. F. Chalon, James Wasker, James Ward, Phillips, Douglas Jerrold, and J. G Shaw Lefevre

In the accompanying Illustration is shown the upper table and part of one of the side tables, during the Banquet. On the right of the Lord Mayor are seated the Earl of Rosse, Earl de Grey, the Lord Chief Baron, the Dean of Westminster, and Dr. Paris. On the left of the chairman are the Marquis of Westminster, the Bishops of London, Llandaff, and Norwich; Lord Dudley Stuart, Sir Edward Codrington, Sir Richard Westmacott, Sir W. C. Ross, and Mr. Turner. In the inner line of guests at the side table will, doubtless, be recognised Mr. Hume, Mr. Locke, and Mr. Rogers the poet.

JOHN HAY MACKENZIE, ESQ., OF NEWHALL AND CROMARTIE.

ONLY a few weeks have elapsed since the marriage of Mr. Hay Mackenzie's only child with the Marquis of Stafford. The festive rejoicings at Cliefden are quickly succeeded by funereal mourning.

John Hay Mackenzie, Esq., one of the richest commoners in North Britain, was only son and heir of the late Edward Hay, Esq., who assumed, upon his marriage with the Hon. Maria Murray, co-heiress of the Cromartie estates, the additional surname and arms of Mackenzie. His great-grandfather, Lord William Hay, of Newall, was third son of John, second Marquis of Tweeddale, by the Lady Anne Maitland, his wife, only child and heiress of John Duke of Lauderdale

Mr. Hay Mackenzie married, 23d April, 1828, Anne, third daughter of Sir James Gibson Craig, Bart., and has left an only daughter and heiress, Anne, born 21st April, 1829, who was married last month to the Marquis of Stafford. Mr. Mackenzie's decease occurred at Cliefden on the 9th inst.

SIR JOHN CHAPMAN, M.D., F.R.C.S.

SIR JOHN CHAPMAN died at Chertsey, 4th July, aged 76. He was formerly a physician at Windsor, of which town he filled the office of Mayor in 1823, when he received the honour of Knighthood.

SIR WILLIAM HYDE PEARSON, M.D., F.R.S.

THIS gentleman died on the 10th instant, in the 67th year of his age. He was a member of the medical profession, and received the honour of a knighthood, in 1838, for his services in the collection of medical and statistical information in Europe and the East.

His father, the late Sir William Pearson, Esq., of Louth, county Lincoln, derived descent from a family possessed, for many generations, of considerable property in that shire; and his mother, the daughter of J. Hyde, Esq., was sprung from the ancient Cheshire family of Hyde.

Sir William was born in 1783; and married, in 1812, Miss Jennings, eldest daughter of Thomas Francis Jennings, Esq., of Park Hill, co. Doncaster.

MR JUSTICE COLTMAN.

SIR THOMAS COLTMAN was the fourth son of John Coltman, Esq., of Beverley, in Yorkshire. He was born in 1781, and was educated at Rugby School and Trinity College, Cambridge. At Trinity, he was elected to an exhibition, and he was rated there as thirteenth wrangler in 1803. He afterwards obtained a fellowship, and he was called to the bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn in 1808. Mr. Coltman practised on the Northern Circuit, and at the Lancaster Sessions, where he obtained a very fair share of business and reputation. He was a lawyer more profound than brilliant, and to his learning especially he owed his success in his profession. He was made a judge of the Court of Common Pleas and knighted in 1837. Mr. Justice Coltman married in 1826 the daughter of George Duckworth, Esq. His Lordship died on the 11th inst., and in three of only ten hours' duration. In his private, as well as public life, his learned Judge was esteemed for his high integrity, unpretentiousness, and amiable disposition.

We have been led into error by some of our contemporaries in our account last week of the death of Colonel Weare. We are happy to say that the gallant Colonel is still living, and that there is now a hope of his getting better.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE SHERIVALTY OF WESTMORELAND.—The death of the Earl of Thanet has given rise to many anxious inquiries respecting the disposal of the high shrievalty of the county, which is hereditary in his family. It is understood that the late Earl expressed in his will his intention that the office should pass to the devisee of his Westmoreland estates, who is a French gentleman nearly related to him. But this has not yet assumed the exercise of the functions of the office, from the fact of its being necessary to procure letters of naturalisation, to enable him to inherit property in England. Meanwhile, writs of execution are being directed to the coroners The grant is so far back as 1953, in which year, as is stated in Atkinson's "Sheriff Law," page 5, second edition, King John granted the bailiwick to Robert de Veteripont, which grant was confirmed in 1203 by letters-patent, "to have and to hold of the King and his heirs to the said Robert and his heirs." On two occasions the grant was resumed by the Crown and the estates of the holders confiscated as the punishment of rebellion; but the inheritance was subsequently restored, and with these two interruptions the distinguished office has been handed down to the present time in the same family in the regular line of succession. Whether the office is capable of being derised, it is certain, though the peerage is extinct, that the shrievalty does not of course lapse. The late Earl has left a sister and nephew, the present rector of Kirkbythore, and the authority we have above quoted informs us, in another part of his work, that "the office may descend to and be executed by a female; for Anne, the Queen of Denmark, Dorset, and Montgomery, held the office of Hereditary High Sheriff of Westmoreland, and, at the assizes at Appleby, she sat with the judges on the bench."

SCHOOL TO THE DEAF AND DUMB.—On Sunday afternoon last, Mr. Henry Roxby, of Huddersfield, who is well known in the West Riding as a deaf and dumb minister of the Gospel, delivered an address, or rather communicated his thoughts, by means of the finger alphabet and other signs, in the Lecture-hall, Goodram-gate The proceedings were witnessed by a large assembly, the body of the hall being well filled, although these similarly circumstanced to Mr. Roxby, and for whose spiritual benefit he attended, did not amount to more than about twenty. A collection was made at the conclusion of the service towards defraying the expenses incurred.

RATING OF RAILWAY, GAS, AND WATER COMPANIES.—On Friday week, at Maidstone, an important decision was made in the case of an appeal of the Phœnix Gas Company, against the assessment of their property to the poor-rate in the parish of Greenwich, which assessment had been increased when the last rate was made (about 1830 to £6071), without any alteration in the value having been made by the company in the value of their station, or mains, in that parish. The Phœnix Gas Company has extensive buildings and plant, the mains extending through the parishes of Deptford, Rotherhithe, Bermondsey, Vauxhall, Bankside, and Greenwich; also store stations in Kennington-lane and Wellington-street. The gentleman, by the advice of their surveyor, valued the property between the Phœnix parish in the parish of Greenwich as separate and distinct from the rest of the works (although the whole is managed, for the board of directors, having one office and only one set of clerks and officers), by which estimate the station and the mains in Greenwich were valued to the poor rate of that parish, as well as a portion of the gas rental of the other parishes supplied from the Greenwich station, for the reason that the gas used by those parishes passed through the mains laid in Greenwich parish. They then proceeded to assess the rate in the Greenwich parish, assuming the rent which a tenant would give for the whole property in Greenwich, with the right of supplying that and the other parishes now so supplied, and this rent was arrived at by finding the amount of production of gas at the company's works in Greenwich. The surveyor of the company contended that the whole property belonging to the company must be considered as one concern, and taken as a whole, and so assessed. The court decided that the assessment must first be made on the whole of the property in the twenty-four parishes, as a whole, and that it was to be then divided as contended for by the company's surveyor. This reduced the net rateable value in Greenwich parish to £5332—viz station, £2045, and mains, £487.

CRANOE CHURCH, Leicestershire, rebuilt by the liberality of the aristocracy of the land, headed by her Majesty the Queen Dowager, has just been reopened. There is still, however, a deficiency of several hundred pounds in the funds expended, for which the Rev J. H. Hill alone is responsible. To lessen the expenditure, it is proposed to publish the five sermons preached at the reopening of the church.

THE GLOVE TRADE AT LEICESTER.—The glove hands at Leicester are again on strike, and have been perambulating the town in a body, preceded by the beating of a drum. Their object, it is alleged, is more equable prices than to obtain any general advance—some houses giving considerably less than others. They also state that the fine silk glove hands are in Leicester very much underpaid, to which the manufacturers reply that the same is the case in Nottinghamshire, and that they intend to raise the price to that given in those counties.

THE CROPS.—The uniform tenour of the accounts concerning the crops in all quarters is highly favourable. The hay crop in the south of England is unquestionably the finest that has been cut for many years, and if the present representations be fully borne out, the crops of all sorts—potatoes, wheat, oats, and hay, throughout Great Britain and Ireland will be of remarkable bulk and luxuriance.

THE CHOLERA ON THE COAST OF DEVONSHIRE.—The Admiralty have just now most liberally and properly sent an empty vessel of war, the Rangdoe, to the mouth of the Yealm River, to receive on board the part of the inhabitants of the village of Noss, where a person died on a recent day of which Sir William Burnett, the Director-General of the medical department of the navy, has sent down gratuitously a very large supply to be land profusely, under the management of Dr. Smith, the head of the Royal Naval Hospital at Plymouth, whom the Admiralty have been pleased to allow to be again sent to those infected districts. It is sanguinely hoped that these connected measures may lead to the subduing of the sad disease with which that part of the country is still afflicted.

SUICIDE OF A BRIDE NEAR LEEDS.—A sad event occurred at Holbeck near Leeds, on Monday last, in the house of Mr. William Wilkinson Wall-y, of Holbeck, near Leeds. Mr. Walley, who is a woolstapler in Leeds, was married on the 31st ult., at the church of St. Mary the Virgin, London, to Sarah Ann, the daughter of Mr. Joshua Haldron, of Boxton, the lady being about 27 years of age. Up to Monday last nothing had occurred to create any Constitution between Mr. Walley and his bride, and on the day named he was about to receive company. When Mr. Walley left home in the morning, his lady appeared in her usual health and spirits, and the female friends of the party retired to her dressing-room, for the purpose of changing her dress and preparing her toilet, previous to the arrival of her friends; but, as she did not return, the servant proceeded to her room, where the unhappy lady was found quite dead. She had committed suicide by dividing the jugular vein of the neck

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The increased amount of unemployed money consequent on the payment of the dividends has improved the value of the English funds. Consols on Monday opened at 92¾, afterwards improving to 92⅝, ultimately closing at the earlier quotation. On Tuesday prices varied to exactly the same extent, but on Wednesday a large speculation was manifested. Investments on the part of the receivers of dividends again improved the price on Thursday, the final closing being 92¾. Exchequer Bills have advanced during the week, from a disinclination on the part of large capitalists to any permanent investments during the existing state of continental affairs. India Bonds declined 5s per cent for the same reason. At the close of the week the market was buoyant, at the following prices:—Bank Stock, 198; Reduced, 92¾; Consols, 92¾; New Three-and-a-Quarters per Cent, 98¾; India Stock, 262; India Bonds, 67s to 70s; Exchequer Bills, 49 p; Consols for Account, 92¾; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 51 p, £500, June, 51 p; Small, June, 51 p.

Foreign securities displayed increased firmness this week, Russian marking an advance of two per cent, and Portuguese Four per Cents of one per cent. Spanish has also slightly improved. The market at the close of the week was firm at the following quotations:—Mexican Five per Cent., 18½; Ex Coupons Account, 37½; Peruvian Bonds, Four per Cent., Active, 51½; Portuguese Four per Cent., 30½; Russian Bonds, 106; Spanish Five per Cent., 1840, 18; Ditto, Two, 9; Ditto, Three per Cent., 5; Dutch Five per Cent., 100 per Cent. Exchange, 25f. 40c.; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 12 Guild, 51.

Railways improved towards the close of the week, the demand being greater than the supply of stock for an efficient audit, whereby a better quotation can be quoted, &c., however, operates against a permanent improvement in prices, which will not commence on the part of the public being the great cause of the existing depression. At the meetings of business continues to be for—Aberdeen, 18; Ditto, Preferred, —; Banks and Harts Extension (Great Western Per Cent.), 2½; Boston, Stamford, and Birmingham, 5½; Buckinghamshire, 3½; Caledonian, 2½; Chester and Holyhead, 2½; Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford, 2½; Eastern Counties, 1½; Ditto, Quarter Shares, ¼; Great Northern, 10½; Great Northern One-Half B, Six per Cent., 8½; Great Northern, Five per Cent., Preference, 4½; Great North of England, 23½; Great Western, 84; Hull and Selby, 99; Ditto, Half Shares, 49½; Lancaster and Preston Junction, 6½; Ditto, New, Guaranteed 6 per Cent., 12½; Ditto, West Riding Union, 4½; London and North-Western, 139; Ditto, New Quarters, 46½; London and South-Western, 43½; Midland, 25½; Ditto, £50 Shares, Per Cent., 8½; Ditto, Birmingham, 6 per Cent., 138; North British, Quarters, 3½; Ditto, Thirds, 4½; North Staffordshire, 12½; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 17½; Scottish Central, 15½; Scottish Midland Junction, 21½; South-Eastern and Dover, 19½; West Cornwall, 6½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 19½; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 13½; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 3½; York and North Midland, 15½; Ditto, New, 10½; Ditto, Extension, 4½; Ditto, Preference, —; Ditto, Scarborough, —; and the quotations advanced fully one quarter per cent. At one time for Three per Cents money—were 94, buyers the New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cents were done at 99¼; and the latter per Cents Reduced, 9 ⅝ to 93. Bank Stock was done at 198. India Bonds, 80s to 82s, and Exchequer Bills, 48s to 51s pm. A steady business was transacted in the foreign funds. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 51; Peruvian, 51¼; Portuguese, 30½; Russian, 106 to 106; and Spanish Three per Cents, 34. In Railway Shares very few transactions took place.

SATURDAY MORNING.—Consols were again buoyant, and, in the absence of a materially active news, advanced to 93, closing at 92¾ to the open sale at the. Shares were firm, and in the Foreign Market prices were well maintained.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE (3d day).—Since our last report the arrivals of English wheat constwise as well as by land carriage have been very small, and the supply of samples here to-day was trifling. All kinds commanded full a shilling, though not to the extent the brisk inquiry at fully Monday's quotations. The imports of foreign wheat have not exceeded 9840 quarters. The holders generally were firm, yet only a moderate business was transacted at previous currencies. In flour, the demand was dull, and the terms were rather in favour of the purchasers. In grinding barleys of corn very few transactions were reported. Grinding barley was scarce, and held for more money. Malting and distilling were steadily supported late rates. The quantity of malt here and an offer was not large. All descriptions were steady, at full prices. The transactions, however, were small. Beans were in good request. The value of other kinds was well supported. Both beans and peas were the turn dearer. Indian corn, meal, and flour as last advised.

ENGLISH ARRIVALS.—English: wheat, 1050 barley, 691 malt, 4856; oats, 630; flour, 1679 Irish: oats, —; Foreign: wheat, 9680; barley, 2790, malt, —; oats, 2360 quarters; flour, 1897 sacks.

Bread.—[illegible]

Provisions.—[illegible] Wheat, [illegible] 11d; oats, 17s 11d; rye, 28s 1d; barley, 23s 7d; beans, 28s 10d; peas, 28s 7d; beans and peas, 28s 8d; oats and beans, 23s 3d; wheat and rye, 25s 7d; barley and oats, 18s 6d.

Tea.—The public sales of 10,000 packages have been held this week. About 2200 sold at full prices. The trade purchased 1000 packages privately. Privately, not much doing.

Coffee.—India has declined in value 6d per cwt. The inferior qualities of Bengal and Mocha are also rather cheaper. Other kinds are unchanged. Plantation Ceylon, 39s to 39s 6d; good ordinary ditto, 38s to 38s 6d; and standard ditto, 38s to 38s 6d per cwt. English crushed, 28s to 29s.

Sugar.—Trade is still dull. Refined goods, however, are tolerably firm.

Spices.—For all kinds of foreign there is but the demand continues in a very inactive state, at barely former currencies. Pepper, 5½d to 5¾d per lb. Privately, Penang is selling at 5¾d; Singapore, 6d; Malabar, 5¾d; Sumatra Rat, 6¾d to 7¼d; fine Holland, 6¾d to 7¾d; and other kinds, 4¾d to 6¾d per cwt. Jamaica pimento for sale slowly, at late decline in value. Cayenne, Cloves, and Cassia, limited, 3¼d to 3½d; Penang, 3¼d to 3¾d; Singapore, 3¼d to 3¾d per pound. Nutmegs, 64s to 68s per cwt. Ginger, 19s to 20s per cwt. Nothing doing for forward delivery. Very few transactions have taken place in English butter. Prices, however, we have no alteration to notice. Fine Irish, 78s to 80s; fine Waterford, 76s to 78s; fine Devon, 86s to 72s per cwt.; fresh, 8d to 10d per dozen lbs. Prime Irish bacon is 48s to 50s per cwt. Hams of prime quality are in good demand, and realise high prices; in other kinds of provisions we have no change to notice. Tallow, 34s 9d to 37s per cwt, not cash, rough fat, 2s 1d per 8 lbs.

Oils.—The market is firm, especially for fish oils. Sperm and Southern are fully 1s per ton higher. Linseed unchanged.

Spirits.—Rum is in fair request. Of fully last week's prices. Proof Leewards, is 3½d per gal. Brandy and other spirits are dull, and rather lower. Geneva, is tolerably firm.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 10s to £3 15s; clover ditto, £3 0s to £5 0s; and straw, £1 15s to £1 18s per load.

Wool.—The public sales of colonial wool are progressing steadily. About 10 000 bales have been disposed of, at full prices. The imports are on a liberal scale.

Potatoes.—The supplies are still increasing, and a good business is doing, at from £6 10s to £9 per ton.

Meats (Friday).—The plantation accounts being considered worse than those received last week, the demand for the best hops has become firm, and prices have advanced 2s per cwt. The duty is decidedly in favour of buyers, at last week's £35,000 to £40,000. Mid and East Kent pockets, £3 13s to £4 10s; Weald of Kent ditto, £3 3s to £4 10s; Mid and East Kent fine ditto, £5 10s to £7 7s.

Coals (Friday) Bardill's West Hartley, 16s; New Tanfield, 12s 6d; Holl, 18s, Thornley, 18s; Hetton, 20s; and West Hetton, 18s per ton.

Smithfield (Friday).—Our market to-day was very scantily with beasts, in, for the most part, middling quality. For all kinds there was a steady demand from, at, some instances, an advance in the quotations of Monday last of 2d per 8 lbs, the top prices of the supply having been 3s 8d, at which a good clearance was effected. The supply of sheep was very moderate in point of number, and the primest mutton moved off at full prices, while only a middling business was transacted, at late rates. Lambs—the number of which was on the increase—were in fair request, but we have no further alteration to notice in their value. The veal trade was dull, at Monday's currencies. In pigs scarcely any business was transacted. Mitch cows were steady, at from £17 to £18 each, including the calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offals:—Coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 2s 10d; middling ditto, 2s 8d to 3s 0d; prime large oxen, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime Scots, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; and prime oxen, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 0d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; prime coarse-woolled ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; small ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; prime small ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; large pigs, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; small porkers, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; lambs, 4s 6d to 5s 0d. Sucking calves, 18s to 28s; and quarter old store pigs, 18s to 25s each. Total supplies:—Beasts, 3107; sheep, 16,000; calves, 300; pigs, 270; and lambs, page, 283. Foreign supplies:—Beasts, 49; sheep, 570; calves, 106. Scotch beasts, 190; sheep, 1360.

Potatoes and Leadenhall (Friday). These markets were tolerably firm to-day, at full prices.

Per 8lb by the carcass:—Inferior beef, 2s 2d to 2s 4d; middling ditto, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; prime large ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime Scots, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; coarse and inferior mutton, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; veal, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 6d to 5s 6d.

"PAS DE PATINEURS," IN THE NEW BALLET, AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE NEW BALLET AT HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

THE ballet of "Les Plaisirs de l'Hiver" increases in success every night it is performed, as might naturally be expected, considering that every day the performers acquire more experience and dexterity in the execution of the gyratory movements of skating, and in the intricate evolutions which distinguish this novelty. In this torrid season, the first aspect of the stage, with the misty veil extended over the ice-bound waters, has a refreshing effect on the audience. Then —whilst the music graphically describes every episode, even imitating the sound of gliding on the ice—the scene of actual life begins. First are seen isolated individuals, in Hungarian costume, crossing the stage, the early risers of the village rapidly gliding along in the pursuit of business or of traffic—some carrying their merchandise to market. One by one the pleasure-seekers (previously sporting in the Jardin d'Hiver) arrive on the stage—some feeling their way on the ice with hesitating step, others gyrating with the certainty and the enjoyment of the mastery of a practised art. The crowd of youths and maidens, attracted by curiosity, who are not supplied with skates, determine to resist the cold by dancing and exercise of their own: they blow on their fingers, clap their hands, foot the measure, and beat their breasts—crossing from side to side, and running from one bank of the lake to the other, to the time of a sprightly characteristic mazourka. Then comes the exquisite polka à la hussard on the ice, executed with more than even her ordinary spirit by Rosati, dressed in the most fascinating costume. Upon this ensue the feats of the skaters. Here the illusion is complete; the mechanism entirely concealed, the mazes varied, intricate, fantastic, and original, in appearance inextricable, and their solution in simple movements that fill the audience with delight and surprise, and keep up constant laughter and applause. Then appear on the stage the most renowned skaters of the district, and M. Charles' movements, as their leader, combining vigour and dexterity with attitude and mimic action in the highest degree graceful, elicit at each new episode outbursts of the loudest applause. Then the sun begins to decline, the assemblage of skaters, of traders, of ladies drawn by horses in their sledges, throng the stage in the most varied and characteristic groups. The power of illusion and of invention of the ballet master, the painter, and the musician can go no further, and the curtain drops amidst the cheers and applause of the audience, of whom the most austere, for once, find the ballet too short.

THE THAMES REGATTA.

HERRINGS are now plentiful along the coasts of the Isle of Man, and during the past week considerable quantities have been brought into Whitehaven for sale, where they have been freely disposed of at the rate of seven for sixpence.

A person, whilst ploughing a few days ago in a field about a mile south of Northallerton, turned up a silver coin rather larger than a shilling, but somewhat thinner, which, on cleaning, proved to be a coin of King Alfred, in a fair state of preservation.

IN consequence of the complaints made last year of the encroachment of foreign vessels on our fishing grounds, the Board of Trade have conferred on the various officers of the Scotch Fishery Board powers to search and seize any vessel fishing within the limits prescribed by treaty.

RAILWAY EXPOSURES.

The avaricious and gambling public, which out of a Yorkshire shopkeeper created a King of the Railways, finds every day some new flaw in the character of the man whom it once "delighted to honour." Exposure after exposure takes place, each more flagrant than its predecessor; and even "stags" are, or affect to be, smitten with horror at the enormities disclosed. We have certainly nothing to urge in extenuation of the conduct of Mr. Hudson, in enriching himself by share-jobbing at the expense of the various companies whose servant he was; or of his system of paying dividend out of capital, and of otherwise "cooking" railway accounts for the purposes of mystification: yet we think it just that the "virtuous" public should not lose sight of its own sins, or think that, by making a scapegoat of one individual, and offering him up as the sacrifice to offended morality and fair-dealing, it will atone for its own transgressions. To read the indignation expressed at public meetings, and in letters to our daily contemporaries, a stranger utterly unacquainted with the doings of the British public during the memorable period of the railway "mania," would imagine that Mr. Hudson was the sole deceiver—the only guilty party—the man who, by some inexplicable talent, set that gigantic machine in motion; that his individual will was the only motive power, and his own enrichment the only purpose he had in view; that he was the only duper, and that all the dealers in scrip, and railway gamblers of every class and degree, were his innocent and honourable, but most unfortunate victims. But this is an old failing on the part of the public. It forgets in the day of calamity its own recklessness in the day of apparent prosperity; and it is curious to trace how nearly alike in their origin, progress, and results are all the commercial manias upon record. The historian of the South Sea Bubble gives an account of the frauds and recriminations of that period, which may stand as a parallel with the spectacle we witness at the present day. It shows that guilt and folly produce punishment and calamities in all times:—

"During the progress of this famous bubble," he says, "England presented a singular spectacle. The public mind was in a state of unwholesome fermentation. Men were no longer satisfied with the slow but sure profits of cautious industry. The hope of boundless wealth for the morrow made them heedless and extravagant for to-day. A luxury till then unheard of was introduced, bringing in its train a corresponding laxity of morals. The overbearing insolence of ignorant men, who had arisen to sudden wealth by successful gambling, made men of true gentility of mind and manners blush that gold should have power to raise the unworthy in the scale of society. The haughtiness of some of these 'cyphering cits,' as they were termed by Sir Richard Steele, was remembered against them in the day of their adversity. In the Parliamentary inquiry, many of the directors suffered more for their insolence than for their peculation. One of them, who, in the full-blown pride of an ignorant rich man, had said that he would feed his horse upon gold, was reduced almost to bread and water for himself. Every haughty look, every overbearing speech was set down, and repaid them a hundredfold, in poverty and humiliation.

"Public meetings were held in every considerable town of the empire, at which petitions were adopted praying the vengeance of the Legislature upon the South Sea directors, who, by their fraudulent practices, had brought the nation to the brink of ruin. Nobody seemed to imagine that the nation itself was as culpable as the South Sea Company. Nobody blamed the credulity and avarice of the people, the degrading lust of gain which had swallowed up every nobler quality in the national character, or the infatuation which had made the multitude run with frantic eagerness into the net held out for them by scheming projectors. These things were never mentioned. The people were a simple, honest, hard-working people, ruined by a gang of robbers, who were to be hanged, drawn, and quartered without mercy. This was the almost unanimous feeling of the country."

The picture of 1720 is remarkably like that of 1849; and the vengeance demanded upon the head of Mr. Hudson is paralleled by the outcry against the South Sea directors. We do not, however, imagine that any amount of suffering caused by the eagerness of the public for sudden gains and by the inherent love of gambling which more or less pervades all great mercantile communities, will ever prevent such outbursts of national cupidity as the South Sea Bubble of the eighteenth, and the Railway Mania of the nineteenth century. But we may at least learn some lessons for our future guidance from such events, and take such means for the prevention of fraud as our unhappy experience may prove to be necessary. Of this class of prevention is Lord Monteagle's Bill for the Audit of Railway Accounts—a measure which, if it had been in operation for the last three years, would have spared the infliction of much wrong and suffering. We see that the bill is threatened with a serious opposition, both in and out of Parliament; but we trust, nevertheless, that it will become the law of the land, and that hereafter, by means of its provisions, it will be impossible for any man like Mr. Hudson, or any body of men like those directors whom he guided or coerced, to publish on authority false and fraudulent statements of the actual state of any railway company. The public requires to be protected from these huge monopolists—the railway proprietors; and railway shareholders, who have invested their money in good faith in these enterprizes, require to be protected from such men as Mr. Hudson, or any others who may slip into the management, and forget, in their lust of gain, that they are the servants, and not the masters of the companies with which they connect themselves. Public auditors of railway accounts, to be named from time to time by the Railway Commission, will act as a protection both to the public and to the shareholders; and, as far as we can understand the recommendations of the Select Committee and the provisions of Lord Monteagle's bill, these auditors will be enabled to fulfil their duties without infringement of the private commercial rights of men engaged in speculations which the Legislature has allowed—we think, unfortunately—to be private and not public undertakings.

The committee recommend "that the Railway Commission shall be empowered from time to time by law to name one auditor to act in conjunction with the two auditors named by the several companies; or to act singly, in case of a neglect on the part of the companies to appoint such auditors, or of a refusal or neglect of such local auditors to act." This is a new principle; but we think, whatever railway directors may urge against it, that neither bonâ fide railway shareholders nor the public will have any reason to find fault with, or object to it. The Select Committee confess the novelty of the recommendation, but explain and justify it by cogent reasons, which they limit strictly the powers of the officers to be thus appointed. They conceive it, they say, "to be absolutely necessary that the duties of the public auditor should be strictly defined, and limited to an examination into the truth and accuracy of the accounts, and the financial condition of the company. It would obviously be inconvenient that he should thereby acquire any power whatever to interfere in the internal administration of the company as a commercial enterprise. It is to the accounts, and the accounts only, to their verification, to the comparison of the entries with the vouchers, and to the investigation of the authorities under which payments are made, and their legality, that the duties of the auditor should be exclusively directed." Railway directors may talk loudly of the right of self-government, and may inveigh against the hardship of having their accounts inspected; but we think the public will not join in the outcry they raise, or see any fair ground for alarm in the appointment of such officers as these.

The directors of the Bank of England might complain with as much reason of the wholesome obligation which the law has laid upon them, to publish weekly returns of the gold in their coffers. Like the directors of the Bank of England, the directors of railway companies enjoy a huge monopoly; not out of any regard which the state or the public feels for them as private traders, but because it has been thought that the public interest would be served by such corporations as the Bank of England, and by such monopolies as are enjoyed by railway companies. They cannot be allowed to hold such monopolies, and wield such powers, without the check of publicity over them. This publicity rests well in the case of the Bank; it will act equally well in the case of railways; and is quite as necessary in the case of the one as of the other.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Rumours were in circulation during the week in Paris as to the probability of an approaching modification of the Ministry, but they appear to have been quite groundless. On Sunday morning the President of the Republic left Paris by railway, at seven o'clock, for Amiens, to distribute new colours to the National Guards of that town. His reception is described as having been enthusiastic. He arrived at Amiens at ten o'clock in the morning, and stayed there till eight o'clock P.M. The religious ceremony was performed by the Bishop of Amiens, and the Prelate bestowed his benediction on the colours, and delivered an address to the National Guards.

Louis Napoleon reviewed the military force as well as the National Guards. Each company carried on the top of their muskets small tricolor flags, on the white part of which was stamped a portrait of the President. He was accompanied by two of the Ministers, namely, M. Dufaure and General Rulhiere, Minister of War. General Changarnier, Ferdinand Barrot, Secretary, General of the Presidence, Dr. Conneau, and the orderly officers, also formed part of the cortège. General Changarnier was at one moment on the ground, both by the troops and civilians, with great enthusiasm. The party returned to Paris the same evening. Excursions of a somewhat similar popularity-seeking character are projected for the President. For instance, on the 22d he goes to St. Quentin, on the 28th and 29th to Tours, Saumur, and Angers, to open a section of the Tours and Nantes Railway; and, finally, on the 5th and 12th of August, to Epernay and Tonnerre, to open the Strasbourg and Lyons railways.

The financial condition of the country excited a good deal of attention in the committee-rooms of the Assembly during the week. The returns of the indirect taxes and revenues during the first six months of 1849 amounted to 334,436,000f. As compared with those of the corresponding period of 1847, there is a diminution of 36,205,000f., but they show an augmentation of 26,005,096f. over those of 1848. The direct taxes had produced on the 1st of July 160,860,000f., and 27,358,800f. remained to be collected. By the reduction of the land-tax and others is a loss of 11,376,000f., and the new postage tariff shows a diminution of 5,057,000f. in the return. In the committees, it seemed to be admitted by all that new taxes must be adopted, or the abolished rates must be imposed.

The Paris journals are also much occupied with the question of financial deficiency for 1850, which is estimated by some at about 184 million francs, while others reckon it at 170 million francs; and they all think that there is no other alternative but either to have recourse to new taxes, or to re-establish those which have been taken off.

The French Assembly has granted leave to the Procureur-Général to prosecute Serjeant Commissaire and M. Cantagral for taking part in the attempted revolution of the 13th of June.

M. Charpentier, the architect of the Palais National, has been arrested, charged with being connected with the insurrectionary movement of last month.

Vice-Admiral Parseval Deschenes has been appointed to the command of the fleet in the Mediterranean, in the room of Vice-Admiral Baudin.

The cholera broke out again in a frightful form in the Penitentiary at Tours on Friday week, and committed sad ravages. On Saturday there were but eight prisoners out of 80 who had not been seized by the attack of this dreadful malady, and 47 of the number had died, besides turnkeys and domestics.

The deaths by cholera in Paris had fallen to twelve and eleven per day.

Among the many proofs of daily occurrence, showing how strongly the tide of reaction has set, is the circumstance of the Prefect of Police having ordered one of the musical orgues in the Champs Elysées, in which it was the custom to sing the "Marseillaise."

A congress is to be opened in Paris in the commencement of the ensuing month, by the friends of peace. A number of citizens of the United States have signified their intention of being present.

In Bordeaux the Socialists still continue to disturb public tranquillity. On the night of the 12th, more than 500 persons assembled before the Town-hall, and insulted the gendarmes on duty. Several of the rioters were arrested, and it is proposed to disband a battalion of the National Guards who countenanced the proceedings.

At Arbois, in the department of the Jura, a serious conflict took place between the Socialists and the 9th Regiment of Light Infantry. The Socialists endeavoured to seize the soldiers' muskets when they were off their guard, but they were defeated in their attempt, and several were arrested.

ITALIAN STATES.

Rome.—The accounts from the "eternal city" as to the reception accorded by the Romans to the troops of General Oudinot are contradictory. According to the French accounts they were cordially received as deliverers, whilst others state that they are execrated as enemies to insult and even assassination. The truth appears to be that the Roman citizens generally are pleased to see the end of a condition of war and the violent friendship forced upon them by the revolutionary refugees, who flocked in numbers from Genoa, Lombardy, Florence, Naples, France, &c., to rally round Garibaldi, Avezzano, and the other Republican leaders; but they feel their national pride hurt at owing their deliverance to French troops, while they are at the same time uneasy for the future, lest the victors, abusing their success, should endeavour to impose upon them the old Government of the Cardinals, with all its abuses.

That the French troops, however, have been frequently addressed in abusive language (which they do not fortunately understand) —like assassinators of individual soldiers and of Italians friendly to the French took place on the first few evenings of their entering into the city, is quite certain; but the parties guilty of those outrages were members of the disarmed revolutionary bands of refugees already mentioned. These parties have been, in consequence, all ordered to quit the city, and the exercise of military law is rigorously carried out. The flag and insignia of the late Government has been taken down, and been replaced by the Papal banner; and the red cap (sign of terror and anarchy) has also disappeared by order of the French authorities

The Civic Guard has been disarmed, and is to be re-organised on its original basis, and a general disarmament of the city has taken place. These measures have tended to restore confidence and tranquillity.

Gen. Oudinot, having despatched an officer, with the keys of one of the gates of Rome to the Pope, at Gaeta, has received an autograph letter from Pius IX., in which he acknowledges the receipt of the keys of Rome, transmitted to him by the French Commander-in-Chief, and congratulates that gallant officer upon his victory over anarchy, but deeply laments the shedding of human blood. His Holiness concludes by assuring the General that he continually offers prayers to Heaven on his behalf, as well as for the French nation at large. Nothing, however, is said of the Pope's return to Rome.

Notwithstanding the rumours which had been spread throughout Europe, of the destruction, by the French cannon, of paintings and sculpture, the productions of the highest genius in art, and of some of the priceless monuments of antiquity, with which Rome abounds, it now appears that little or no damage whatever has been sustained by them.

Mazzini remains at home, under the protection of a British passport.

Piedmont.—The negotiations for peace between Austria and Piedmont are not proceeding as satisfactorily as could be wished. The territorial boundaries have been settled; but the chief obstacle is the question of indemnity. Austria demands 75 millions, but Piedmont will consent to no more than 70 millions. Thus the matter stands at present, neither party evincing the slightest disposition to give way

The state of siege was to cease at Genoa on the 11th inst

Venice.—The siege by the Austrians "drags its slow length along." The only novel feature in the state of things within the walls is the publication in the Venice Gazette of a letter from Lord Palmerston to M. Manin, the Dictator, in which he expresses the interest he feels for Venice, but regrets that the conditions of the treaty of Vienna do not permit him to do anything in favour of it, without the consent of the Imperial Government of Austria, which had already expressed its determination on the subject

Naples.—The latest intelligence states that the Grand Duke of Tuscany was about to leave Naples on his return to his dominions. He was to be escorted by a Neapolitan and French steam-frigate.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY

The intelligence from the seat of war, which comes principally through Vienna, must be taken with caution, as it never tells the truth when the Imperialists suffer, while it always exaggerates their success. With this premonitory observation, we may mention that advices from Vienna of the 13th inst. state that Buda and Pesth surrendered to the Austro-Russian troops on the 11th instant, without resistance. The Austrians immediately took possession of the former, and the Russians the latter

A report of the General-in-Chief Haynau, addressed to the Emperor of Austria, says that a very sharp conflict took place on the 11th, before Comorn, between the combined armies and the Magyars, and that the result was in favour of the Imperialists. The Austrians attempted to force the Austro-Russian line, but were driven into the fortress, which is said to be well stocked with provisions, but to be deficient in medical stores. The Hungarians intend, it is said, to make a desperate resistance.

DENMARK AND SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The negotiations for a peace, which have so long been pending between the Prussian and Danish Plenipotentiaries, were concluded at Berlin on the 10th inst., by the adoption of an armistice and general cessation of hostilities, established within eight days from that date. A period of twenty days is allowed for the two armies to take up the positions appointed them by the treaty. The armistice is to continue to the 15th of January, 1850, and then it can be renewed for separate terms of six weeks. The Prussian troops are to withdraw behind a line of demarcation to be drawn from Flensburg to Tondern, the blockade is to cease, and Prussia is to restore the captured German vessels. A Regency is to be appointed for the Duchy of Schleswig. The present Regency of the two Duchies will continue its functions for Holstein. The Schleswig Regency is to consist of three members, to be appointed by England, Prussia, and Denmark. Alsen and Æroe are to remain in the hands of the Danes.

It is stated that the following points are contained in the preliminaries for the peace:—

1. Holstein and Lauenburg are to continue in their present relations, and to receive a constitution.

2. Schleswig is to have a legislative and administrative independence, and a constitution. The political union between Schleswig and Denmark is to continue, but it shall be limited to the identity of the Sovereign. The special regulation of the succession is to be left to future negotiations, but in such a manner that,

3. Denmark endeavours, before the definitive conclusion of a peace, to regulate the succession.

Upon these conditions being communicated to the Provisional Assembly of the two Duchies, their anger and disappointment is said to have been very great at what they regarded as their unfairness to the interests of the Duchies. The Council and the Regency declared their decided opposition to the arrangement between Prussia and Denmark.

A rumour was current on 'Change at Hamburg, in the early part of the week, that the blockade of the Elbe would cease as early as Thursday, the 19th inst.

GERMAN STATES.

Baden.—The entire of the Grand Duchy of Baden is now in the hands of the Royalist troops, with the exception of the fortress of Rastadt, which still holds out, notwithstanding that the garrison is suffering from typhus.

Frankfort.—From the city, under date of the 14th inst., we learn that the Regent of Germany has entered a protest against the (without his consent) one-sided conclusion of an armistice between Prussia and Denmark. It is thought that the Prussian Government will not pay any attention to the protest of the Archduke John.

UNITED STATES.

Advices from New York to the 3rd inst. have been received during the week.

The mortality produced by the cholera in many of the large cities of the United States is very great. In St. Louis there were more than 500 deaths in one week, and full 700 the week before—nearly all from cholera. At Cincinnati the deaths range from 100 to 150 per day. The steam-boats on the western rivers arrive at the different ports, partly freighted with the dying and the dead. The trade between California from Independence (Missouri), across the prairies, is not marked alone by the foot-prints of men and horses, but is described as being "dotted and lined on either side with newly-made graves." In the Atlantic cities, on the contrary, the pestilence is not so fatal, although the mortality is great. In New York the deaths range from 20 to 40 daily; in Philadelphia from 10 to 25. In both cities, at the suggestion of their Boards of Health, public civic and military parades, on the anniversary of the anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, the 4th of July, have been postponed, from an apprehension that any great public excitement must tend to augment the disease. New Orleans still suffers under the scourge; and in several plantations in Louisiana there have been from 40 to 80 deaths among the Negroes, within brief periods of a few days only.

Public feeling was bended in New York. His reception in that city appears to have been of the most brilliant and satisfactory kind. All classes, from the highest to the lowest, have met to do him honour.

On Saturday were being made in several parts of the United States for funds to assist the Pope in his present misfortunes.

Public meetings of sympathy with the Hungarians and Italians are now frequent in all the large cities. Two have been held in New York, and the United States Government is also manifesting its favour in the struggle among the nationality of Hungary. A meeting to promote republicanism in Italy has been held at New Orleans, and a meeting of sympathy with the Romans and Hungarians was held at Cincinnati. In New York, as the close of which three cheers were given for the Romans, three cheers for the Hungarians, and three groans for Louis Napoleon.

CALIFORNIA.

We have later intelligence from California this week. Anarchy and riot are said to prevail at San Francisco; and it is asserted that General Persifer F. Smith had been frustrated in every endeavour to restore order, and finally compelled to seek safety on board a ship of war, or some other American vessel in the harbour. Several persons had been killed; and it is added, the number life nor property is safe, even in San Francisco. Bloody work is anticipated between the Americans and Mexicans at the diggings and in the town." The population is of the most motley description and character, and its different characteristics and features are thus given by a California correspondent of the New York Express, writing from the gold region. He says:—"We have great names 'at the diggings,' where all the world has its representatives! Oval-faced Chinese, greasy Sandwich Islanders, 'whole or none' men from '54 40,' skinflint Yankees from down east, chivalrous gentlemen from 'off south;' Hoosiers, Buckeyes, and Kangaroos from out west. Here too, without number, are the subjects of her Britannic Majesty, cheek by jowl with the people who come from the territories of the King of the Cannibal Islands. All are scraping and scratching away, like so many bees on a dunghill; all the languages are spoken and taught; about every religion under the sun has its devotees, but all bow down before the shrine of Mammon, the god that has the strongest and most enthusiastic worshippers—next to the Golden Calf!"

MEXICO.

The state of affairs in Mexico is unsatisfactory. The war in Sierra is prosecuted with unabated vigour. Rumours were afloat that a revolution was contemplated to put Santa Anna at President of the Republic, and elevate Santa Anna in his stead. The state of San Louis Potosi was at the mercy of the rebels.

CANADA.

The Canadian intelligence is not important. There is a strong feeling prevalent in favour of annexation to the United States.

The steamer Passport collapsed her boiler on the morning of June 29th, at Cornwall, near Montreal, by which accident nine emigrants were instantly killed and fifteen persons scalded.

A few cases of cholera had occurred.

Windsor Herald.—We are gratified to perceive, by the London Gazette, that George Harrison, Esq., of the Heralds' College, has been promoted from the office of Bluemantle Pursuivant of Arms to that of Windsor Herald. Mr. Harrison has long been at the head of his class amongst officers of arms, and this recent change in transferring him to a higher grade will tend still further to display his talents as a herald and genealogist, and render more conspicuous those acquirements which have made him so great an ornament to his profession.

Dispensary for Consumption and Diseases of the Chest.—On Monday a general court of the governors of this institution was held at the Dispensary, Finsbury-square, Campbell presided. From the report it appeared that the number of patients since the commencement of the institution, in 1847, was 1313, who had attended at the dispensary 10,434 times; the patients visited at their own homes were 180, to whom 1945 visits had been paid. 271 persons had been cured, 141 had died, and 73 had died; 262 persons had left the Institution, and 481 were at present on the books. The balance-sheet showed that, after payment of all expenses, the sum of £55 12s. 9d. remained in hand, and £192 remained due to the treasurer.

General Lying-in Hospital, Lambeth.—A quarterly meeting of the governors of this charity was held on Monday, at the institution, York-road; Lieut.-Colonel Jones, R.E., in the chair. The secretary, Mr. W. W. Hastings, read a statement of the present condition of the funds of the hospital. On the 30th of June there remained a balance of £736 in the hands of Messrs. Drummond, and of £169 in the hands of the clerks. In the year 1848 the number of patients relieved was—in-door 385, out-door 480. Up to the present period of the current year 162 in-door and 240 out-door patients have received assistance. The average cost per patient is estimated at £2 9s. 6d., and the average length of time an in-door patient remains in the house is about eight days. The Rev. Mr. Lewis having resigned his office of chaplain to the institution, the Rev. Mr. Abraham Hall was appointed his successor. A vote of thanks to Mr. Lewis for his past services was proposed by Dr. Rigby, and seconded by Mr. S. Gurney, and carried unanimously. In consequence of the increased number of applicants who have received relief, and the diminution of annual subscribers, the funds of the charity have been so much impaired as to render it necessary to effect some retrenchment in the expenses, and with this view a committee had been appointed to report on the propriety of diminishing the number of recommendations for relief at present allowed to governors and subscribers, as well as on the general expenses of the hospital. The committee not having concluded their investigation, a resolution was passed granting them prolonged time. It was stated that the governors are entitled in all to 530 recommendations for in-door relief, while the funds last year were sufficient to afford relief to but 481 applicants.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Monday.

The Pupils Protection (Scotland) Bill, on the motion of Lord Campbell, passed through Committee.

The Turnpike Roads (Ireland) Bill was read a second time.

The Duke of Richmond called the attention of the Vice-President of the Board of Trade to the inaccuracies of the corn returns, whereby the averages were made to appear greater than they were.

The Earl Granville said the subject of those returns was under the consideration of the Board of Trade.

The Sites of Schools Bill was, on the motion of Lord Redesdale, read a third time and passed.

The Tyne Conservancy Bill was read a second time after a division, and referred to a select committee.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.

The Marquis of Lansdowne moved the Committee of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill.

Lord Stanley took that opportunity of making a few observations on the course taken by the Government in reference to this measure, and on the omissions in the bill itself. The bill caused him great regret and disappointment; for while he admitted that it might effect some trifling amendments and modifications of existing Poor-Law, taken as a whole it was quite inadequate to deal with the crying evils of that law, and some of its provisions would unquestionably make the law more mischievous and dangerous than before. At an early period of the session the Government insisted on appointing a committee, though they ought to have dealt with so great and important a question on their own responsibility; and yet, having appointed the committee, the Government had neither followed the recommendations of the committee nor dealt with those subjects which the committee reported to be of the most pressing nature, but had legislated in defiance of the committee of their own nomination. The noble and learned Lord then reviewed the "maximum rate" as a gross delusion and fallacy; and maintained that, in order to make the Poor-Law work fairly, it would be absolutely necessary to renew the principle of the original act, and make in-door relief the only mode of relief administered in Ireland. The noble Lord also insisted on the necessity of establishing, as far as possible, individual responsibility, by a reduction of the area of rating, and instanced his own case as a proof that those landlords who did their duty were, nevertheless, made liable for the paupers caused by the landlords who neglected their duty. He had sent out three hundred emigrants to America, at a cost of about £1400; and having thus cleared his own estate at his individual expense, and having thus relieved the union, he found that seventy-five or seventy-six persons had been evicted from another electoral division in the union, and thus he, who had endeavoured to do his duty, was mulcted with the maintenance of paupers evicted by landlords who had not done their duty. The noble Lord, having exposed the inadequacy of the provisions of the bill, and having pointed out its omissions, declared that he found nothing in it that showed that the Government had taken a large view of the state of Ireland, and of its ability to bear the taxation arising from the Poor-law. He hoped that the Lordships would agree to such of the clauses in the bill as were ameliorative of the existing law, and reject only those which would make that law more oppressive and unjust, but, however, should it pass, he could look with no hope that it would prove an effectual remedy for that canker of a Poor-law which was eating into the very heart of Ireland.

The Marquis of Lansdowne defended the bill. He fully agreed with Lord Stanley that it would be necessary to return to the principle of in-door relief, but all out-door relief could not be withdrawn at once.

The Earl of Kingston, the Earl of Rosse, and Lord Redesdale made a few observations, and their Lordships went into committee on the bill.

On the first clause, by which the 8s. maximum rate was established,

Lord Montreagle moved its omission

The Earl of Wicklow, the Earl of Stradbroke, the Earl Fitzwilliam, and Lord Wharncliffe opposed the clause.

The Marquis of Clanricarde and the Marquis of Lansdowne defended it.

The Earl of St. Germans said he should vote for the clause, although he had great difficulty in persuading himself to do so.

Lord Londesborough supported the clause: Contents, 26, Non-contents, 35: majority against the Government, 9.

The clause was struck out of the bill.

The remaining clauses, for establishing a union rate in aid of 8s., was, in consequence of the rejection of the first clause, likewise struck out of the bill, but without a division.

On clause 8, respecting the registration of decrees in superior courts,

Lord Montreagle moved its omission.

On a division, there were, for the clause: Contents, 19; Non-contents, 32: majority against the Government, 13.

The clause was struck out of the bill, and likewise the 19th clause, which was connected with it.

The other clauses were agreed to, with amendments, and the report was ordered to be received on Monday next.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—Monday.

The House had an early sitting from noon to three o'clock.

The Inland Posts (Colonies) Bill, the Commons Inclosure (No. 2) Bill, and the County Rates, &c., Bill, were read a third time and passed.

The Small Debts Act Amendment Bill passed through committee.

ORANGE PROCESSIONS IN IRELAND.

At the evening sitting, which commenced at five o'clock,

Lord Castlereagh inquired if the Government had any intention of renewing the act which expired in 1845, for the prevention of party processions in Ireland. The Earl of Castlereagh had received information of a fatal collision in his country between the Orangemen and Ribbonmen, and he desired to know if the Home Secretary would do anything to put down party processions in Ireland, as he had some time since promised to do.

Sir G. Grey said that the Government had, on the best information, entertained the opinion that it would not be expedient to renew the act against party processions. He was sorry to say that he had received information that a collision had taken place, in which, according to one official account, five deaths were ascertained. Until the inquiry and information on this occurrence were complete, he could not say whether or not he would propose to renew the Procession Act.

REDUCTION OF GOVERNMENT SALARIES.

On the motion to go into committee of supply on the ordnance estimates,

Mr. Henley moved that a reduction of ten per cent. be made in all salaries in the ordnance department, and in all other departments of Government, at home and abroad. The hon. member urged, that, as the price of provisions and all other articles of first necessity was reduced, it was but reasonable that public officers should submit to a reduction of salary corresponding. It appeared to him that the rule henceforth to prevail throughout all the relations of society was, that there should be more work and less pay for every one, and he could not see why those in the service of the Crown should be favoured beyond all other persons.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the motion. The salaries of all the Government officers had been considerably reduced in 1831, and the reductions then made in the chief offices of the State were fully equivalent to the reductions that had since taken place in the price of articles of general consumption. He did not think it would be just to the public departments, who were already subjected to an income-tax, to make such a diminution of their salaries as that proposed; for it should be remembered that their remuneration was far less than that of persons of the same rank of life having situations in private establishments. The House had steadily refused every proposition since that of 1831 for the reduction of the salaries of the higher public officers; and as for the lower employments, it would be both cruel and injustice to subject them to the reductions proposed by the hon. member.

After some discussion,

Mr. Gladstone could not consent to rest the remuneration of the lower classes of persons employed in the public service; but he felt satisfied that the higher officers of the Government were excessively paid, and far more than ten per cent. above the fair rate of remuneration for the rank of life having situations in private establishments. The House had steadily refused every proposition since that of 1831 for the reduction of the salaries of the higher public officers; and as for the lower employments, it would be both cruel and injustice to subject them to the reductions proposed by the hon. member.

After some discussion,

Mr. Gladstone could not consent to rest the remuneration of the lower classes of persons employed in the public service; but he felt satisfied that the higher officers of the Government were excessively paid, and far more than ten per cent. above the fair rate of remuneration for the rank of life having situations in private establishments. The House had steadily refused every proposition since that of 1831 for the reduction of the salaries of the higher public officers; and as for the lower employments, it would be both cruel and injustice to subject them to the reductions proposed by the hon. member moved, as an amendment to Mr. Henley's motion, that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the salaries of public officers.

The Speaker decided that this amendment could not be put until Mr. Henley's motion should be carried.

The House divided—For going into Committee of Supply, 149; for Mr. Henley's motion, 102: majority against Mr. Henley's motion, 47.

SUPPLY.—ORDNANCE ESTIMATES.

The House went into a Committee of Supply, when the following votes were taken. £361,595 for the pay and allowances of the Ordnance Engineers' Corps; £161,450 to complete the sum required for the Ordnance Civil Establishment for defraying the expenses of the Ordnance Office.

Progress was then reported after a division, and the Chairman obtained leave to sit again on Wednesday.

The other orders of the day—of which not less than 43 stood on the paper—were then passed, and the House adjourned at half past two in the morning

HOUSE OF LORDS.—Tuesday.

PIRACY.

On the motion of Lord Campbell, the Admiralty Jurisdiction in the Colonies Bill was read a second time, the object being to extend the law relative to piracy.

METROPOLITAN BUILDINGS ACT.

The Earl of Carlisle laid upon the table a bill, which was read a first time, for amending the Metropolitan Buildings Act, but not with the scope of its present in the present session.

THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Lord Stanley asked the Secretary of State for the Colonies whether it was intended to restrict the Australian Colonies Bill to the separation of the territory of Port Phillip from New South Wales; because, if so, no objection would be offered in either House, but, if it was carried to a greater extent, the noble Earl must be prepared to meet with opposition in both.

Earl Grey replied, that, until the hon. had been dis used elsewhere, he could not give a decided answer to the question. The object of the bill merely was to extend to the Australian colonies the constitution which already existed in New South Wales.

Lord Montreagle inquired whether the bill would alter the present mode of selling land in these colonies?

Earl Grey thought no alteration of the Lands Sales Act was necessary. If, however, a federal legislature should be brought into operation, such legislature, acting on behalf of all these colonies, ought to be at liberty to amend the act in question.

Lord Stanley was now convinced the bill could not pass this session: it must be discussed at considerable length in both Houses, and was not yet printed.

(At the time this conversation was in progress, Lord J. Russell gave notice in the House of Commons that it was not his intention to proceed with the bill.)

Various bills were then advanced a stage, and their Lordships adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House met at noon.

Major Beresford presented a petition from certain gaolers and freemen of London, complaining that an undue or untrue return had been made of the person chosen at the late election to represent the City of London in Parliament.

LONDON CORPORATION.

On the question of the third reading of the London Corporation Bill,

Mr. Hume, with a view to assimilate the corporation of the City of London to other corporations of towns and cities in England, thought that the present bill should be made the means of effecting that object, by giving to all occupiers of £10 houses within the limits of the City a right to vote for the election of magistrates and members of the Common Council, provided they paid the police rates. This object he proposed to effect by striking out the word "freemen" in the first clause.

After some discussion,

The Speaker intimated that the amendment could not be entertained without having been first submitted to the committee on the standing orders, and obtained their sanction.

Mr. Hume, upon this intimation, withdrew the amendment, and the bill was read a third time and passed.

SMALL DEBTS.

The House then went into committee on the Small Debts Act Amendment Bill; and on arriving at the clause empowering the Lords of the Treasury to grant compensation to the Palace Court functionaries,

Lord D. Stuart again interposed his objections to giving this power to the Treasury, thinking it would be far better to entrust the matter to the determination of a select committee, and should take the sense of the committee on the question.

After a debate, in which the Attorney-General, Mr. Law, Sir H. Willoughby, Mr. J. Evans, Sir P. Thesiger, Mr. Hoasley, and Lord D. Stuart took part, the committee divided, when the clause was carried by a majority of 80, the numbers being 82 to 2; and the remaining clauses were agreed to.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (IRELAND) BILL.

On the motion of Sir W. Somerville, the report on this bill was brought up and agreed to.

THE CUSTOMS.

On the question that the House go into committee on the Customs Acts,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the objects he had in view were to provide for some minor points, which had been overlooked in the Customs Act, and also to meet some changes in trade which had arisen since the repeal of the Navigation Laws. It was found that coffee lost considerably in roasting, and although it might not be desirable to bring it roasted from distant colonies, yet it might still very well, in the altered state of the law, to bring it roasted from Holland. To provide against injury to the revenue in such a case was one of the objects of his resolutions. Relaxations were also introduced with respect to the importation of glass pipes for drainage, needlework from India, and other minor matters.

The House then went into committee, the resolutions were agreed to, and leave given to bring in a bill founded thereon.

Some observations followed on the subject of the Workhouses (Ireland) Bill, on the reception of the report, after which several bills passed their stages, and the House temporarily adjourned at three o'clock.

THE AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

On its re-assembling at five o'clock, Lord J. Russell intimated that it was not his intention to proceed with the Australian Colonies Bill in the present session.

PREPAYMENT OF LETTERS.

Mr. Hume wished to know whether the Post-office was about to make an order requiring the prepayment of all letters; and whether that regulation would apply to the colonies as well as to every part of this country?

Mr. Hayter said he did not apprehend that the Post-office had made any such regulation. What had really been done was this. For the last twelve or eighteen months, when a new receiving-house had been established, that receiving-house had been restricted from receiving payment in money; letters might be put in either stamped or unstamped. The object was to prevent those numerous accounts which existed where the prepayment was made in money, and in order more fully and effectually to carry out prepayment by stamps. The same plan had been adopted nearly two years ago in Liverpool and other large towns; but any one was free to prepay in money, could do so at the principal office. The Postmaster-General had decided on extending this regulation to all the provincial towns in England and Wales, so that there should be no prepayment at the receiving houses, but only at the head-office. This regulation would apply to foreign as well as to domestic correspondence.

THE NIGHT-WORK OF BAKERS.

Lord Robert Grosvenor, in an explanatory speech, in which he referred to the Factory Times Bill, the Coal-Whippers Bill, the Mines and Collieries Bill, and the Ten Hours Bill, as having laid the ground for interference with adult labour, moved for leave to bring in a bill to prohibit bakers from labouring during any part of the night. He explained the House and the Government to judge of the bill by its own merits, and not by any extraneous principles, and to assist him in carrying into effect a remedy for a system of oppression and hardship which a committee of that House had admitted to be deplorable.

Mr. Labouchere complimented the noble Lord on the score of his good intentions, but warned the House against adopting the principle he had proposed. The attempt, if successful, to restrict the hours of adult labour would be so injurious, that he called upon the House to reject the motion.

Sir De Lacy Evans expressed his intention, if an inquiry by a committee was not conceded, to vote for the introduction of the bill.

Lord D. Stuart, Mr. Duncan, and Mr. Stafford supported the motion.

Mr. Cobden, in the course of a powerful speech, stated that the object of the proposition was to limit the hours of labour of a certain class of workmen in London, which was an entirely new principle, and of world-wide application. The Coal-Whippers Act had nothing in common with the proposed bill, for that only regulated the mode of hiring labourers, and did not restrict their hours of work. Then, as regarded the Ten Hours Bill, if there had been any attempt thereby to restrict the hours of adult labour, he should have voted against it: but it must be admitted that that measure strictly applied to the hours of labour of children in factories. In answer to the question as to what his principle in respect to labour was, it was this, perfect freedom; thinking, as he did, that the freedom of labour ought to be identified with freedom of trade.

Sir G. Grey considered further inquiry altogether unnecessary, and opposed the motion for the introduction of the bill, on the ground that the success of that motion could only lead to heavy disappointment in the minds of the operative classes.

The House then divided, when the motion was negatived by a majority of 58—the numbers being 19 to 77.

SMITHFIELD MARKET.

Mr. Mackinnon having presented a petition from London, complaining of the injurious effect upon the public health by the sale of diseased meat, preferred at great length to draw the attention of the House to it as part of the committee, which had set to inquire into the subject of Smithfield Market, and concluded by moving an address to the Crown that her Majesty would give directions that the report of such committee be taken into early and serious consideration, with the view, as regarded the town, to the removal of the market, and to confer such power to the Government to appropriate a new site, and to have the whole control of the arrangements connected therewith.

Mr. Labouchere followed in opposition to the motion, the other speakers being Mr. Alderman Sidney, Sir De Lacy Evans, Sir E. Filmer, Lord R. Grosvenor, Mr. Stafford Sir J. Tyrell, Mr. O. Gore, and Mr. C. Lewis; after which,

Mr. Mackinnon intimated that he would not press the motion, if the Government would promise to take up the question

Lord J. Russell said, even if the motion had not been made, the Government would, he conceived, their duty to have taken the recommendation of the committee into consideration. But he certainly would not undertake the responsibility of removing all the evils that were under the name of "Smithfield Market," for the same evils might attach to a different site; all he could say was, the report should be considered. The motion was then withdrawn.

Sir De L. Evans postponed his motion for the extension of the franchise until next session.

Mr. Anstey's motion for considering the petition of Mr. Hercules Ellis, complaining of the conduct of the judges of the Court of Common Pleas in Ireland, was negatived.

Mr. Fagan having moved that the House go into Committee on the Benefices Pluralities (No 2) Bill,

Lord J. Russell, without at all meaning to imply that Parliament ought not to make provision for the further enlargement of pluralities, but on the ground that it was impossible the bill could pass in the present session, moved that it be committed that day three months; the amendment being agreed to.

Adjourned at a quarter before five o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The House sat from noon to six o'clock.

Mr. Rouverie gave notice that never sent should get a seconder, he should divide against every divorce bill that came before the House.

YELLOW FEVER AT BARBADOES.

Mr F Maule, in reply to a question, stated that whilst the yellow fever had been raging as it had at Barbadoes, the troops had been encamped on shore to remove them from the cancerous vicinity of the barracks. He was happy, however, to state that the fever had entirely abated, and on the approach of the rainy season, the troops had been removed back to barracks.

SUPPLY ORDNANCE ESTIMATES.

The House then went into Committee of Supply on the ordnance estimates, animated debates on the votes proposed being the result, involving not only the alleged improvident expenditure on the head of stores, in connexion with this department of the service, but the whole of the colonial policy of the country. The speakers on the first vote (£165,373), for granting the balance of the expenses to be incurred for the current year, it being generally admitted that no reduction in this vote could be effected in the present session, were Mr. Hume, Lord John Russell, Mr. V. Smith, Mr. Cobden, Mr. E. Ellice, Col. Anson, and Sir Jas. Graham

On the vote of £236,436 to complete the amount required for works, buildings, and repairs in the colonies being put,

Colonel Anson observed, that the hon. Baronet the member for Southwark had a notice on the paper for reducing the vote for works in Bermuda, the Mauritius, and the Ionian Islands; and he wished therefore to inform him, that half the originally proposed sum had been dedicated for these services, it being the intention of the Government also to stop all further expense on these heads that was not absolutely necessary

Sir W. Somerville, under this intimation given, would not submit his motion, but thought it proper to state the reasons which had induced him to place it on the paper, which he proceeded to do.

The speakers in succession on this vote were Colonel Anson, Colonel Thompson, Sir De L. Evans, Mr. Hume, Mr. V. Smith, Mr. W. Miles, Sir J. Graham, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and Mr. Cobden, the latter hon. member quoting passages made by the Marquis of Londonderry and Lord Brougham in 1816, against taking possession of the Ionian Islands: at all, as also one by the Marquis of Wellesley to the same effect, the hon. member stating that if he himself were to make such a speech now, he should be charged with seeking to destroy all the foreign possessions of the country.

After some further discussion on other votes, relating to the retirement of officers of the Artillery and Engineers, and to some recent hostile operations on the coast of Africa, the House resumed, and the report was ordered to be received on Friday.

The House having gone into committee on the Advance of Money (Athlone to Galway Railway) Bill,

Sir J. Graham expressed his earnest hope that the Chancellor of the Exchequer would give an assurance that this enormous advance of £600,000 to one single railway would not be made a precedent of.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied, that having already declined to give such a pledge to another hon. member, he could not consistently make the promise suggested. Full and tangible security was taken for the amount, and the loan would give employment to those whom it was essentially necessary to save from starvation.

In committee on the Disembodied Militia Bill.

Mr. Hume expressed his hope that next year measures would be taken to put an end to this expensive nuisance.

Mr. F. Maule replied that the militia force had become a mere skeleton: vacancies occurring were not filled up, so that the object of the hon. member was gradually in course of attainment.

Mr. Hayter introduced a bill for the appointment of commissioners to inquire into the claims over the New Forest and Waltham Forest, which was read a first time, as was also the Workhouse Loans (Ireland) Bill. —Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—THURSDAY.

TITLES OF RELIGIOUS CONGREGATIONS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Lord Campbell moved the second reading of this bill. The object of the bill was to facilitate the transfer of congregational trust property from expiring trusts to new trustees.

After a short discussion, the bill was read a second time.

HEALTH OF TOWNS (SCOTLAND) BILL.

Lord Polwarth asked when this bill would be brought forward.

The Earl of Carlisle regretted exceedingly that it would be impossible to pass the bill during the course of the present session, but he hoped it would be one of the first measures to be brought forward during the next session of Parliament.

ROME.

The Earl of Malmesbury said that he knew that several persons who had served in the Republican army at Rome had arrived here within the last few days with British passports, signed by Mr. Freeborn, the British Consul there. The lives of those persons were not in danger, and he could not understand why Mr. Freeborn should have given the British passports. He asked if Mr. Freeborn acted upon orders from England or upon his own responsibility?

The Marquis of Lansdowne, who spoke in a very low tone, was understood to say that Mr. Freeborn had given the passports on his own responsibility, but he believed that the passports had been given because the persons were in danger of their lives, and, therefore he might have thought himself justified on the score of humanity.

Lord Brougham thought it a most important question, because an English passport was always respected, and such a proceeding might diminish the respect paid to it, and this might expose English travellers to inconvenience. He did not believe that passports were of much benefit, because every knave who sought to escape from justice always took care to get a passport en règle.

The Earl of Minto said he had received a letter from Mr. Freeborn, in which he said that he had been engaged in giving passports to persons who had compromised themselves, and who thought they might, if taken, be shot, and that humanity had dictated the steps he had taken.

After a few words from the Earl of Malmesbury, the subject dropped.

THE STEAM NAVY.

The Earl Talbot directed notice to the statements lately made by Sir Charles Napier, impugning the sufficiency of our steam navy, and called on the Government to give an assurance that our steam navy was in an effective condition.

The noble Earl moved for returns.

The Earl of Minto expressed his regret that Sir Charles Napier had published the statement alluded to. Such publications were not calculated to do much good to the public service. He (Lord Minto) had perfect confidence in the efficiency of our steam navy.

The returns moved for were ordered.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—THURSDAY.

The House had an early sitting from noon to four o'clock.

The Estates Leasing (Ireland) Bill was read a third time and passed.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS (IRELAND) BILL.

On the question that this bill be read a third time,

Mr. Reynolds again expressed his regret that the Government had not deemed it necessary to assimilate the municipal privileges of Ireland to those of England. He gave notice that early next session he should move for leave to introduce a bill on the subject.

Mr. Sadlier wished to know whether it was the intention of Government to introduce a bill next session to extend municipal privileges in Ireland?

Sir W. Somerville said the matter was under consideration, but he could not pledge the Government to introduce a bill on the subject.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

SMALL DEBTS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

This bill was read a third time. On the question that it do pass,

Mr. Thornely asked if the power of granting compensation under this bill vested with the Treasury; that was, had the Treasury the power of fixing the sum to be paid?

The Chancellor of the Exchequer replied in the affirmative.

The bill was then passed.

The Stock-in-Trade Bill, the Regimental Benefit Societies Bill, the Enlistment (Artillery and Ordnance) Bill, were each read a third time and passed.

ENCUMBERED ESTATES (IRELAND) BILL.

The Lords' amendments to this bill were considered and agreed to.

ALLOWANCES BILL.

The House then went into committee on this bill.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer explained that the object of the bill was to enable the Treasury to reduce the allowances made on stamps.

The bill then went through committee.

The Turnpike Act Continuance Bill, and the Juvenile Offenders and Small Larcenies Bill, were both postponed.

The Poor-Law Union Charges Act Amendment Bill passed through committee.—The House adjourned, and resumed at six o'clock.

PETITION OF COLIN MACKENZIE

Lord Dudley Stuart said he rose to present a petition from one Mr. Colin Mackenzie, resident in Carnbee-town, which was a very peculiar character, and the like of which, perhaps, had never been presented to that House before. The petitioner stated that in 1846 he contracted a marriage which had turned out very unfortunate for him (a laugh), by which he became acquainted with the evils of that state. (Renewed laughter). He was led to the conclusion that the most fertile source of domestic unhappiness was a marriage settlement, which gave the wife great power over her husband—(Laughter)—and in consequence of the independence which it placed her in she defied him, against all the vows she made on the altar, and did all sorts of things which she ought not to do. (Loud laughter). The petitioner stated, that, in consequence of the practice of marriage settlements, it was necessary to employ a lawyer to draw them, who in that way obtained great influence over the parties, which was by no means desirable. The petitioner finally prayed, among other things, that the good old system of the ducking stool might be revived, as a punishment for all undutiful and runaway wives. ("Oh, oh," and cries of "Order.")

Mr. Mackinnon submitted, that such an absurd petition should not be received.

Lord D. Stuart said the language of the petitioner was respectful, and, he believed, perfectly regular. (Oh!)

Sir J. Y. Seller considered the petition was a ridiculous one, but he thought the best course would be to receive it, and to avoid giving an undue importance to it by discussing it.

The petition was then ordered to lie on the table.

FINANCIAL REFORM.

Mr. H. Drummond moved: "That, whereas a greater amount of taxation is levied upon the people than is required for the good and efficient government of the United Kingdom; and whereas large sums are expended in supporting needless places, extravagant salaries, and unnecessary works and establishments; and whereas the present taxation of the country depresses all classes, and especially the labouring classes, by diminishing the fund for the employment of productive labour, it is the opinion of this House that adequate means should be forthwith adopted to reduce the expenditure of the Government."

After some discussion, in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer, while expressing himself by no means hostile to the motion, defended the financial policy of the Government, the motion was agreed to.

IRELAND.

On the motion of Sir W. Somerville, the following bills were brought in and read a first time, viz.—A bill to make better provision for the administration of fiscal affairs of counties, counties of cities, and counties of towns, in Ireland; a bill for the prevention of accidents and dangers to passengers upon public roads and highways in Ireland, and for the punishment of offences relating thereto; and a bill for promoting the public health in Ireland

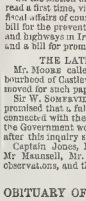
THE LATE FATAL ORANGE PROCESSIONS IN IRELAND

Mr. Moore called attention to the outrages lately committed in the neighbourhood of Castlewellan; and, having given a narrative of those occurrences, moved for such papers as the Government might have received concerning them.

Sir W. Somerville expressed his deep regret at the outrages referred to, and thanked that a full inquiry should be made into the whole of the circumstances connected with them. The right hon. gentleman declined to say what course the Government would adopt with respect to party processions in Ireland until after this inquiry should be terminated.

Captain Jones, Mr. Bright, Sir D. Norreys, Major Blackall, Mr. Fox Maule, Mr. Maunsell, Mr. Labouchere, Mr. Reynolds, and Mr. J. Nicholl made a few observations, and the motion was withdrawn.—Adjourned at one o'clock.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.



JOHN GREAVES, ESQ., OF IRLAM HALL, COUNTY OF LANCASTER.

This gentleman, a magistrate and Deputy-Lieutenant for the county of Lancaster, and Major of the Local Militia, possessed great wealth, and was at one time well known as a purchaser of paintings. His collection contained specimens of Wilkie, and some of the best English and Dutch masters. His father, the late John Greaves, Esq., of Irlam Hall, the descendant of an ancient Derbyshire family, realized his large fortune by commercial pursuits, and was a partner of the late Sir Robert Peel, Bart., in the banking-house of Peel, Greaves, and Co., of Manchester. Mr. Greaves was born 18th April, 1793, and succeeded his father 10th December, 1815. He has left no issue.

AMBROSE CRAWLEY, ESQ., F.L.G.C.S., OF HARDWICK LODGE, CHEPSTOW.

This lamented gentleman, who died on the 11th instant, at George-street, Portman-square, aged 55, was a descendant of the highly respectable English family of Crawley, from which spring the Crawleys of Stockwood Park, Bedfordshire, and the Crawley-Boeveys of Flaxley Abbey, in Gloucestershire. Mr. Ambrose Crawley's immediate family was much connected with the Church, his father having held a rectory in Sussex, and his brother being the present archdeacon Crawley. He was himself in the civil service of the East India Company, on the Madras establishment.

JAMES PATTISON, ESQ., M.P. FOR THE CITY OF LONDON.

Another vacancy in the representation of the City has been caused by the decease of James Pattison, Esq., which event took place on the 14th inst., at Molesey Grove, near Hampton Court. The honourable member was son of the late Nathaniel M. Pattison, Esq., of Congleton, in Cheshire, nephew of James Pattison, Esq., a director of the East India Company, and grand-nephew of General Pattison, who served sixty years in the British Army. The family of Pattison have been settled at Plumstead, in Kent, for nearly a century, and have for a similar period been engaged in commercial pursuits in the City of London. The respected gentleman whose death we record was himself an eminent merchant, and filled, at one time, the important office of Governor of the Bank of England. He was first elected for the City in 1835, and continued to represent that influential constituency at the period of his decease. At the general election of 1841 he was returned for Leicester, and in 1843 regained his seat, in succession to Alderman Sir Matthew Wood. He was a staunch Liberal, in favour of colonial Parliaments, vote by ballot, and church reform.

HORACE SMITH, ESQ.

Another bright ornament of literature has passed away. Mr. Horace Smith, the able novelist, the wit, and the poet, died at Tunbridge-Wells, on the 12th inst.

"He was man! full proof of manhood, truth, and honour;" of a correct taste and the most generous sympathies, a delightful writer both in verse and prose, a cheerful and wise companion, and a fast friend. No man had a wider range of admirable and genial qualities, and far beyond that private circle of which he was the great charm and ornament, his loss will be deeply felt. To those who had the advantage of his friendship, it is irreparable.

His health had given way during the last few months, and the end was not unexpected. He was in his 70th year, but had preserved to the last love for the enjoyments of youth, and took part in all honest mirth with the simplicity and gaiety of a child. The disorder of which he died was ossification of the heart.

The Ten Hours Act.—On Tuesday evening a meeting of the factory operatives and other inhabitants of Bolton was held in the Temperance Hall, Little Bolton, for the purpose of petitioning the Ten Hours Factory Act. Upwards of 1500 persons were present, including several respectable and influential gentlemen of the town. The Rev. C. Edwards, of the Wesleyan Association, was called to the chair. The following resolutions were agreed to:—1. "That the factory-workers and other inhabitants of Bolton, in public meeting assembled, make known to the Government and the British people their decided and entire approval of the recent spirit of the Ten Hours Act, and declare our firm conviction that the result of the measure, if uniformly adopted, would be to the moral, physical, and intellectual advantage of the women, young persons, and children, for whose especial improvement it was passed; and being convinced of its beneficial workings, are resolved to maintain its provisions in all their integrity; and also express our determination to accept no compromise, nor enter into any arrangements by which the period of working females and young persons in factories for more than ten hours per day; and that we will adopt every constitutional means in our power to secure the working of such hours between six in the morning and six in the evening." 2. "That this meeting, in the most solemn manner, and in the strongest terms, expresses its conviction that those millowners who are breaking the law, and instilling into the minds of the working people an impression that such practices, by the rich, are calculated to bring the Queen and laws of this realm into contempt, and create a spirit of insubordination, which, if left unchecked, will render property less secure, and we call upon them seriously to consider the results of such an example." And that this meeting now assembled, considering with alarm the effects which the conduct of certain magistrates must have upon the public mind, who openly sanction breaches of the law, in defiance of the opinions of the law magistrates, and the Queen's Attorney General and Solicitor General:—3. "That a memorial to her most gracious Majesty the Queen, founded on the preceding resolutions, be adopted, and that a deputation be appointed to wait upon the Duke of Richmond, Earl Grey, Lord Stanley, the Right Hon. E. Ellesmere, Lord Feversham, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Oxford, Exeter, St. David's, Ripon, and Winchester, to solicit each or any of them to carry the memorial in the form of the people to the foot of the throne."—4. "That, in order to carry the foregoing resolutions into effect, the factory operatives and others pledge themselves to enter into weekly subscriptions, and that they call upon their fellow-workpeople to render to this cause all the pecuniary assistance in their power."

ENTRY OF THE FRENCH INTO ROME.

In our Journal of last week we gave copious details of the capitulation of the city. The Univers gives the following additional particulars of the entry of the French army, in a letter dated the 4th:—

"It was about five o'clock that General Oudinot made his solemn entry into Rome. A squadron of the 1st Regiment of Horse Chasseurs headed the line of march, followed by a battalion of Zouaves, three companies of Grenens and the 68th Regiment of Infantry immediately preceded General Oudinot. I was present in the crowd close to the General in-Chief, and can, therefore, give you an exact account of his reception. His entry at the Portese Gate was a complete ovation. Cries of Viva gli Francesi! burst forth from all sides; handkerchiefs were waved from the windows, and every hat was raised. It was a unanimous burst of enthusiasm for deliverance, which continued all across the Trastevere. At the Porte Settimiana it was less strong, but there were, however, many at the Place Farnese the reception became more cool. Some hissing began to be heard in the Via Condotti; the post of the Civic Guard opposite the Borghese Palace did not turn out, but many of the men composing it saluted the General individually. On arriving at the Corso, the moment became more critical; the French were then in the very head-quarters of the Red party; there were cries of Nè repubblica nè il Papa, which, although very loud, were not uttered with that unanimity and ensemble and spontaneousness which marked the cries at the Portese Gate. At the Caffè Delle Belle Arte a certain tumultuous Italian flag, ornamented with an immense cravat, displeased one of the generals who accompanied General Oudinot; he spurred forward his horse, and gave orders to two or three Voltigeurs to remove this hideous ensign. I do not know whether or not they wished to lay hold of the flag, but they were so firmly attached that the whole was removed together. This little incident was immediately followed by the most profound silence, when on the Place Colonna some cries were heard. Immediately the officers who accompanied the General-in-Chief and the General himself advanced towards those who uttered them one of them fell to the ground. The soldiers who preceded the General, hearing the noise produced by the movement, thought that something more serious had occurred, and a whole battalion faced round and advanced at full quick time on the Place, which was completely cleared in the twinkling of an eye from the Place Colonna the march of the troops gave rise to no other incident. A flag with a bonnet rouge, which was on a balcony, was quickly removed. The General-in-Chief alighted at the French embassy, where the head-quarters are now established."

ENTRY OF THE FRENCH INTO ROME.—PLAZA DEL POPOLO.

GARIBALDI AND HIS NEGRO.

Our Artist writes from Rome:—"I was fortunate enough to see Garibaldi the day he left Rome, and had a good sight of him. I sketched him, and send you the result. I have been very particular to get it like him. He is a remarkably quiet-looking person, but wonderfully picturesque: he wore a white sort of cloak lined with red, and having a green velvet collar; it had plenty of bullet holes in it. There was no opening visible in the garment, so I imagine he puts it on like a shirt, over his head, like the poncho, or South American cloak. His trowsers were common grey, with a green stripe; and a black slouched hat and feather complete the costume.

"I send you, also, a portrait of Garibaldi's Negro (now dead). He was a fine fellow; his dress, a red loose coat and a showy silk handkerchief tied loosely over his shoulders. The poor fellow was shot in the last fight."

Garibaldi escaped on the night of the 3rd, at sunset. Finding that he was to be excluded from the amnesty, he announced in the morning his intention to withdraw, with all his own band, and as many others of the free corps as were inclined to join him. "Invitations," says the Times correspondent, "were accordingly sent by him to the other bands, and, in fact, in the course of the afternoon of the 2nd, he found himself at the head of 4000 infantry and 500 horse, with whom he was determined either to make a stand in the Abruzzi or cut his way, it is said, to Venice. At sunset, therefore, on that night this roving son of liberty and rapine set forth, by the Porta S. Giovanni, in the direction of Albano; and, as soon as his retreat was assured, all further resistance was relinquished, and at ten o'clock the same night all the gates alluded to were occupied by the French. These proceedings were followed up on the morning of the 3rd by a strong division entering by the Porta del Popolo, and occupying the celebrated hill of the Pincio, and the whole of the now historical height of the S. Pietro in Montorio was covered by troops, and the suburb of the Trastevere taken possession of. The Castle of St. Angelo and the city barracks still remained in the hands of the people."

THE THAMES AND MEDWAY CONSERVANCY.

THE CEREMONY AT THE BOUNDARY-STONE, COOKHAM WOOD.

CONSERVANCY OF THE RIVERS THAMES AND MEDWAY.

THE assertion of the Conservancy jurisdiction of the Lord Mayor over "the River of Thames, and Waters of Medway," or "the View," as it is technically termed, is a septennial custom attended with some interesting customs and celebrations, which, falling due this year, has just contributed to the convivial memorabilia of the present Mayoralty. The last view took place in the year 1842 when Sir John Pirie filled the civic chair.

This, by the way, is termed "the Eastern Boundary" of the jurisdiction; whilst the view from Kew to Staines is the Western. The last Western View, and the Visit to Oxford, took place in 1846, in the Mayoralty of Alderman Johnson; and was fully illustrated and described in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 224, August 15, 1846. In our introduction of the subject, we then explained in what the Conservancy consists; but it may be as well to say a few words on the subject in this place. The jurisdiction appears to have been immemorially exercised over both the fisheries and navigation of a large portion of the Thames by the Mayor and Corporation of London; and we find an order, dated 1405, issued from Sir John Woodcock, then Lord Mayor, enjoining the destruction of weirs and nets from Staines to the Medway, in consequence of the injury which they did to the fishery, and their obstruction to the navigation.

The portion of the river over which the jurisdiction of the River extended seems to have been always much the same. "The offices of Meter and Conservator are asserted from Staines to the mouth of the Thames, the commencement of the City's jurisdiction being marked by a stone with an apocryphal date, called London Stone, placed on the north bank of the river, a short distance above the present bridge of Staines; and its termination on the south shore, by the formerly navigable creek of Yantlet, separating the isle of Grain from the mainland of Kent; and on the north shore by the village of Leigh, in Essex, placed directly opposite and close to the lower extremity of Canvey Island." The right of conservancy is also asserted in the waters of the Medway, from the southern mouth of Yantlet Creek, upwards towards Rochester, as far as Cookham Wood, which is on the northern shore, opposite the marshy point below Chatham.

The View we are about to describe consisted of visits to the boundary-stones at Leigh and Cookham Wood, and which took place on the 12th, 13th, and 14th instant.

THURSDAY, JULY 12.

The company assembled on board the Meteor steamer, engaged for the occasion, moored off Brunswick Wharf, Blackwall. There were present the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and a large party.

Captain Rowland attended the view as principal Harbour Master.

The steamer left Blackwall at about half-past eleven o'clock; and, having received on board the Royal Marine band at Woolwich, the Meteor proceeded on her passage to Southend, the civic party being liberally welcomed with salutes and other respectful demonstrations.

At Greenhithe pier the Meteor received on board Mr. James Harmer, from whose delightful seat, Ingress Abbey, a salute was fired.

At about three o'clock the Meteor arrived at Southend pier, where the Lord Mayor, Lady Mayoress, and a large portion of the company landed. The Lord

DISTRIBUTION OF MONEY.

Mayor, attended by the Aldermen; Mr. Firth, the Town Clerk; Mr. Sewell, Clerk of the Chamber; and some of the civic authorities, proceeded in carriages towards Leigh, nearly opposite to which the boundary-stone is situated. Here, by direction of his Lordship, the City colours and state sword were placed upon the stone; and, after asserting his right as Conservator of the River Thames, on behalf of the City of London, by prescription and usages from time immemorial, the Lord Mayor directed the Water-Bailiff, as sub-conservator, to [illegible] visit to be inscribed on the boundary-stone. The Lord Mayor then drank, "God preserve the City of London," the inscription on the ancient stone: and, after distributing coin and wine to the spectators, the civic party returned to the boats.

Our Artist has depicted this ceremony. The stone itself was in the water, so that it had to be reached in boats. The scramble for the money was a rubustious affair.

During the absence of his Lordship, a large part of the company, who had remained on board the steamer, partook of a dinner, served up in excellent style by Mr. Ring. At the dinner Aldermen Sir John Key and Sir Chapman Marshall presided.

On the steamer leaving Southend pier, the Lord Mayor was saluted with loud cheers, and the Meteor proceeded across to Sheerness and up the Medway. Shortly after, his Lordship, and the rest of the party who had landed at South end, sat down to dinner, served in the usual style. The arrangements were admirably carried out, and a capital band of music supplied with the appropriate airs of the season, from the resources on board a steamer of not very large di-mensions.

The passage up the Medway was truly delightful; and on approaching Chatham the crew of one of her Majesty's ships manned the rigging, and lustily cheered the steamer. The dockyard launches were also out on duty, and the crews, poising their oars, hailed the arrival of his Lordship with cheers, which were as warmly responded to by the company on the steamer; the band playing "God save the Queen," "Rule Britannia," "Hearts of Oak," and "The British Grenadiers."

Dancing was introduced on board the steamer with much spirit.

About eight o'clock the Meteor reached Rochester, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress landed in his Lordship's launch. At the steps the Mayor and Corporation of the ancient city of Rochester, accompanied by the Recorder, James Espinasse, Esq., met the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, and offered them a hearty welcome. His Lordship was then conducted to the Crown Hotel, where a large party partook of tea, and accommodations were provided at other hotels for the company there. The Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress and family took up their abode, by invitation, at the hospitable mansion of his Lordship's friend, W. Lee, Esq., of Sate's House.

FRIDAY, JULY 13.

Shortly after ten o'clock, the Mayor and Corporation of Rochester proceeded to the Crown Hotel; and the Recorder having briefly stated the object of their visit, introduced severally to the Lord Mayor the members of the Corporation. His Lordship expressed the gratification he felt at receiving the Mayor and Corporation of Rochester; and, after a brief address, invited them to dine with him that evening, and then introduced the members of the Corporation of London.

At the conclusion of the visit, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress, accompanied by their guests, proceeded on board the steamer down the Medway, and shortly after anchored opposite Cockham Wood, near Upnor Castle, where the City boundary-stone is placed. The Lord Mayor and Aldermen landed, attended by the civic officers, and a procession was formed in the following order:—

Police Officer
Six Watermen in state liveries, with colours.
The Band.
The Lord Mayor's Bargemaster in state livery, bearing the City Colours.
Two Marshal Men in state livery.
The Engineer of the Thames Navigation in [illegible] of London Committee
The Sword-bearer.
The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor.
The Aldermen (in [illegible]
Recorder.
City Officers.
Six Watermen in state liveries, with colours.
Police Officer.

Having made the circuit of the stone three times, his Lordship directed the City colours and the state sword to be placed thereon, asserting a right to the jurisdiction, as Conservator of the River Thames and waters of Medway, by charter, prescription, and usage confirmed by, and so loyed by, the City of London from time immemorial; and directed the Water-Bailiff, as his sub-conservator, to have the date of his Lordship's visit duly inscribed on the stone. His Lordship then gave as a toast, the ancient inscription on the boundary-stone, "God preserve the City of London." The band played the National Anthem, amidst the shouts of a large number of spectators who had assembled to witness the ceremony, and who were delighted by a distribution of wine, and some coin being scattered amongst them. Our Artist has pictured this ceremony; showing, also, Upnor Castle, a stone fortress erected in the reign of Queen Elizabeth.

At Upnor the colours were placed upon the stone by Mr. J. Bishop, of St. Benet's Hill, Doctors' Commons. The quasi Upnor Mayor was not, however, presented, as in 1842, when "Nobby Will" handed an address to the Lord Mayor, congratulatory of his Lordship's better fortunes, and delicately reminding him of "certain dues, fines, &c., which from time immemorial Las distinguished the splendid visits of the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the City of London;" when a £5 Bank of England note was handed to the Upnor municipals.

Those members of the Corporation who had not previously visited this ancient boundary-stone having been duly inaugurated as Upnor freemen, the procession re-entered the steam-vessel, which then continued its progress down the Medway. On arriving off Sheerness, the company went on board her Majesty's ship Scourge, the guard-ship, where they were received with guns; and time for his Lordship to receive his guests at the Crown Hotel, facing the bridge.

Our Artist has portrayed the "immunity" scene of "bumping" at the stone, a custom peculiar to the bearing of bounds, such as is the object of the Conservancy visit

At six o'clock the company sat down to dinner; the Lord Mayor having on his right hand Lady Key, and on his left the Lady Mayoress. Covers were laid for 160; and the dinner was of the most splendid description, and the whole of the arrangements reflect the highest credit on Mr. Wilson, the host of the Crown, who was highly complimented on the style in which the dinner was served.

After dinner, the loyal toasts passed round; and on the withdrawal of the cloth, the customary loyal and complimentary toasts were given and responded to in appropriate speeches; after which the Lord Mayor vacated his seat, and most of the company then assembled in the Assembly-room, at the Town Hall, in which his Lordship gave a ball, and thus concluded the festivities of the day.

SATURDAY, JULY 14.

This morning, shortly after ten o'clock, the Lord and Lady Mayoress and their guests embarked on board the Meteor, and proceeded down the Medway to Sheerness. On nearing the Ocean, Captain Elliot paid a short visit to the Lord Mayor, and the steamer then proceeded to Greenhithe.

The Lord Mayor and his guests having been invited by Mr. Harmer to visit his grace Abbey on their return, the party disembarked at the pier under a salute from a small battery on Mr. Harmer's lawn, and proceeded at once to view his house and delightful grounds. After making some slight alterations in the line on board, accompanied by Mr. Harmer, who proceeded as far as Erith with the civic party. The Meteor then proceeded towards London, and reached Londonbridge between seven and eight o'clock, concluding a most delightful excursion of three days without the slightest accident, or a single hitch in the arrangements.

On board the Steamer.—The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress; Sir John and Lady Key and Miss Key; Alderman Wilson, Mrs. Wilson, and Miss Caroline Bellows; Sir Chapman Marshall and Lady; Alderman and Mrs. Sidney; Alderman and Mrs. Thompson; Alderman and Lady Carroll; Alderman Hooper and Mrs. Hooper; Alderman Farncomb; Alderman Humbert and Mrs. Humbert; Alderman and Mrs. Challis; Alderman Moon; Alderman Kerr; Alderman Sir Peter and Lady Laurie; Alderman Gaselee and Mrs. Gaselee; Mr. Sheriff Pocock and Mrs. Pocock; Mr. Sheriff Rose and Mrs. Rose; Mr. Gardiner and Miss Gardiner; Mr. F. Pocock, the City Solicitor; Boundary Lotter, the two Common Pleaders; Lord Mayor's Secretary Mr. Firth for the Town Clerk, and Mrs. Firth; Mr. Sewell, the Clerk of the Chamber; Chaplain of the Navigation Committee, and the members of the Sub-Committee; the Chairman of the Lonsdale of the Corporation; Sheriff elect Nicol; Mr. Dodd, M.P.; Mr. Maidstone; Mr. James Harmer.

On board the Meteor, on the run to the Company from the Meteor.—Lord Ramsay; Sir Edward Field, M.P.; Mr. Hodges, M.P.; Mr. Pett Ridge, M.P.; Mr. Wood, M.P.; Mr. Hawes, M.P.; Mr. Masterman and Greenwood; James Espinasse, Esq., Recorder of Rochester, the Rev. Dr. Irving, Canon Residentiary of Rochester; William Smith, Esq., Bank. Elliot, R.N.; Commander Cumming; Lieut. Macgregor, for Frederick Smith; Col. Key; Col. Powell; Col. Wardlaw; Col. O'Grower; Col. Sir Henry Meller Smith; Major Key; Capt. Wood; Messrs. Hoare, Barclay, & Co.; Medical Officer, Henry Jones, Blackheath; Peter Richards, Esq., C.B., superintendent of Chatham Dock-yard; Purser, Superintendent of Sheerness Dock-yard; Lieut. Hewlett, of the Alarm; Messrs. Price and Town Council of Rochester; Thomas Burr, Esq., Mr. Lock.

On the Steamer.—The above, and all the naval and military officers of the garrisons, together with the naval and military officers of Kent and Essex, a splendid display of beauty and fashion—in a [illegible]

In conclusion, we beg to add that the arrangements for the Excursion were, in every instance, admirably carried out, and afforded universal satisfaction.

MURAL PAINTINGS IN WINCHFIELD CHURCH, HANTS.—During some reparations recently made in this church, the workmen found, on the outside of plaster, the remains of painting which at one time appeared to have entirely covered the walls. The rector very liberally procured a respite for these works of art; and Mr. Dalgairns, of Winchester, made tracings and drawings, which were produced at a meeting of the British Archæological Association on a day evening week. Mr. Waller described the subject of the chief portion preserved to be that of "The Rich Man and Lazarus;" he stated that it possessed considerable interest in an artistic point of view, and also as illustrating one of the modes of conveying religious instruction in the Middle Ages. The rich man and his friends are exhibited at dinner, and are dressed in the costume of the 13th century, the period at which the paintings were executed. A seneschal at the gate is receiving orders from his master to drive the applicant away; further on an angel is depicted receiving the soul of the dying pauper. This makes the fifth instance of the preservation of these ancient paintings found in Hampshire by the Association; but it was stated on Friday evening, that the spirit of destruction at Northwood Church, in the Isle of Wight, was the cause for the conservative pencil of members of the Society who resided almost within call. Some frescoes, described as of a superior kind, were laid open a week or two ago, and, without any application having been made, as it appears, to the clergyman, a churchwarden, or some person invested with a brief authority, had them effectually destroyed. A most curious and well-executed representation of "The last Judgment," in Stonewell Church, was re-whitewashed about three years since, while a gentleman was actually engaged in making a copy for the Association; but the churchwardens have partly redeemed their character by preserving the legend of St. Cuthbert, which has been engraved by the Association.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 21, 1849.

THE news from the East looks ominous for the cause of Hungary. Kossuth and his followers are being beset upon all sides. Since the opening of the campaign, with the exception of some unimportant checks, victory has crowned the exertions of the Imperialists. First, Raab fell into their hands, opening up the way to Komorn, which is now completely blockaded. When it falls, as it apparently must, the road to the Hungarian capital will be open to the combined armies, on whose movements now depends the fate of Austria. According to rumour, indeed, Pesth-Buda is already in the hands of the Imperialists. But even were this so, it does not follow that the cause of Hungary is lost. The Hungarians have yet their marshes to retreat to. It will be remembered that the last campaign, which ended so brilliantly for them, commenced by a series of reverses, similar to those which have marked the outset of the present one. The Imperialists marched forward, victorious at every step, until they reached the swamps of the Theiss, where the tide of victory turned—sweeping them back again to the gates of Vienna, which the Hungarians would have mastered but for the Russian alliance. The present reverses may, after all, be but a well-planned retreat; and the present may yet end as did the last campaign. But, should it be otherwise, and the exertions of Austria to restore her dominion over Hungary be successful, will the Empire be consolidated? Far from it. Its hold of Hungary will be that of perpetual conquest. The strength of Austria will be henceforth but the strength of Russia in Austria.

THE attention of statesmen and the public is now being more than ever called to the necessity which exists for a thorough reform in our Colonial department. On Wednesday last, a great banquet took place at Greenwich, the object of which was to bring together as many as possible, of all shades of opinion, favourable to such a movement. The chair was appropriately occupied by Sir William Molesworth, who was supported on his right by Lord Monteagle, who had been for about six months Colonial Secretary; and on his left by Lord Lyttleton, who, for about the same period, had held the office of Under-Secretary. Amongst those present were about twenty members of Parliament, representing all schools of politics, and a number of gentlemen well known in the walks of literature, and considerable to the cause of Colonial Reform. The dinner hour was seven, and the proceedings did not terminate till twelve o'clock. The chairman made a most eloquent and effective speech, and was followed by Lord Monteagle, Lord Lyttleton, Mr. F. Baring, M.P.; Mr. Godby; Mr. F. Scott, M.P.; Mr. Aglionby, M.P.; Mr. H. Baillie, M.P.; Mr. Horsman, M.P., Mr. Monsell, M.P.; Mr. Adderley, M.P., &c. General politics were entirely laid aside; and the unanimous sentiment of the meeting was in favour of free and responsible government of the Colonies. Nothing could exceed the harmony and unanimity which prevailed. It is intended to construct the nucleus of an association out of the elements furnished by the banquet. The whole augurs well for the Colonies, and the meeting will make no slight impression on Downing-street. It is high time that something was done to reform a system of administration which not only affords every means of corruption for those inclined to be corrupt, but which must also break down in the hands of the most able and most disinterested of administrators.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

UNIVERSITY OF LONDON.—On Wednesday last a special meeting of the Senate was held, at which it was unanimously agreed that the new charter which her Majesty has been pleased to grant to this University should be accepted. By this the Senate will be enabled to confer degrees on persons who have graduated in any University in the kingdom, without being obliged to sign the Thirty-Nine Articles. Another point in the new charter is, that the Council may institute examinations for certificates of proficiency in any subject which they may think fit, connected with the sciences and arts, such as architecture, civil engineering, mechanics, botany, zoology, mineralogy, geology, geography (political and physical), navigation, and hydrography.—Some Fellowships in the University remain to be filled up; of these the Crown is patron

ORDINATIONS.—The Archbishop of York intends to hold his ordinations in the course of the ensuing following and spring and autumn of each year. His next ordination, therefore, will be on Sunday, Feb. 24, 1850, at Bishopthorpe.

SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING THE ENLARGEMENT, BUILDING, AND REPAIRING OF CHURCHES AND CHAPELS.—The last meeting for the season was held on Tuesday last, the 17th inst., the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chair. Twenty-three new applications have been made since the last meeting. The board ordered the payment of grants, amounting to nearly £4000 to eighteen parishes, from which certificates had been received of the completion of works undertaken with the aid of the society; these comprise the erection of ten new churches, the rebuilding of two, and the enlargement of six existing churches.

CONSECRATION.—On Thursday, the 12th inst., the new church lately erected at King Sterndale, near Buxton, was consecrated by the Lord Bishop of Madras. This edifice was erected chiefly at the expense of Miss Hawkins and the Pickford family. The Rev. Edward Pickford has been appointed incumbent.

PREFERMENTS.—Rev. N. Buston, to the vicarage of Twyford, Hants, £213; Rev. W. J. Copeland, to the rectory of Farnham, Essex, £318; Rev. T. Andrew, to the vicarage of Triplow, Cambridgeshire, Rev. E. Bickersteth, to be a Rural Dean, in the deanery of Burnham; Rev. J. Selkrik, to the chaplaincy of Hai l Gaol; Rev. H. J. Husted to the Rectory of Sproughton, Suffolk, £181; Rev. R. Churton, to the rectory of Wheatfill, Salop, £277; Rev. L. W. Sampson to the vicarage of Prescot, Lancashire, £1462.

PREFERMENT VACANT.—Perpetual Curacy of Withington, Manchester. Patrons: W. Egerton, Esq., and others.

TESTIMONIALS.—The Rev. W. Chawne, from the congregation of Huddersfield; Rev. J. Macaulay, from the Inhab tants of Rovey Tracy; Rev. J. W. Wakin, from the Inhabitants of Seatonha n.

The Rev. Dr. Bull, Canon of Christ Church, Oxford, has given an endowment of £80 per annum to a new chapel of ease in the parish of St. Mary Magdalene, Oxford. The gift is also understood to be partly as a memorial to Bishop Fell, who gave a bequest to the parish, which has now almost come to nothing.

HARROW.—On Thursday, the church of Harrow was re-opened by the Bishop of the diocese. Additions have been made to the building, new windows of beautiful design inserted, and many works of antiquity have been restored.

THE CROPS.—The uniform tenour of the accounts concerning the crops in all quarters is highly favourable. If the present representations be fully borne out, the crops of all sorts—potatoes, wheat, oats, and hay, throughout Great Britain and Ireland—will be of remarkable bulk and forwardness.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort have entertained their illustrious relative, the Duchess of Gloucester, during the past week, at Osborne. Beyond that, there has been little of interest in the proceedings of the Court, the Queen and the Prince continuing to enjoy almost uninterrupted retirement at their marine palace.

On Tuesday, her Majesty and her illustrious Consort honoured the Oriental and Peninsular Company's steam-ship Hindostan with a visit, that fine vessel having been brought down into Cowes Roads expressly for the convenience of the Queen. Her Majesty and the Prince were shown over the vessel by the chairman of the company, Sir John Pirie; and, on departing, they expressed themselves highly pleased with this magnificent vessel. On the same day, the Duchess of Gloucester took leave of her Majesty and the Prince, and returned to town.

On Wednesday the Queen held a Court and Privy Council, which was attended by his Royal Highness Prince Albert; the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord President; Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Home Department; Viscount Palmerston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; Earl Grey, Secretary of State for the Colonies; Sir Francis Baring, First Lord of the Admiralty; Lord Campbell, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster; the Marquis of Clanricarde, Postmaster-General; and the Earl Fortescue, Lord Steward. At the Council her Majesty appointed a new Sheriff for the county of Westmoreland, The Hon. William Bathurst was the Clerk of the Council in Waiting. At the Court M. Drouyn de Lhuys, the French Ambassador, had his first audience of the Queen, and presented his credentials to her Majesty. Her Majesty gave audience to the Marquis of Lansdowne. The French Ambassador, Viscount Palmerston, Earl Grey, Sir Francis Baring, Lord Campbell, the Marquis of Clanricarde, Earl Fortescue, and the Hon. William Bathurst, left Osborne at half-past three o'clock, embarked at Osborne Pier on the Fire Queen steam-vessel, re-crossed to Gosport, and took their departure by a special train on their return to town. The Marquis of Lansdowne and Sir G. Grey remained at Osborne on a visit.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has graciously signified his intention of visiting Portland on the 25th instant, for the purpose of laying the first stone of the Breakwater off that island.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent has been prevented by indisposition during the last few days from proceeding to Osborne on a visit to her Majesty.

His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, attended by Baron Knesebeck, returned to town on Wednesday afternoon, from Norwich. His Royal Highness went to Norwich to be present at the meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society; and during his stay in that city the illustrious Duke honoured the mayor, Mr. S. Bignold, with his company.

Her Royal Highness the Duchess of Gloucester intends to leave Gloucester House early in the ensuing week, for the White Lodge, Richmond Park.

His Royal Highness the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz arrived at Cambridge House, Piccadilly, at half-past eleven o'clock on Wednesday morning, from the Continent.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, honoured Miss Coutts with their company at dinner on Wednesday evening, at her mansion in Stratton-street. Their Royal Highnesses subsequently honoured with their presence Lady Rolle's concert.

The Duke and Duchess of Bedford have arrived at Woburn Abbey, from Devonshire

The Duchess Dowager of Bedford gave her third and concluding fête champêtre for the present season, at Bedford Lodge, on Thursday, the weather was unfavourable, notwithstanding which, more than 400 of the nobility were present.

The Earl and Countess of Essex gave a fête at Cashiobury Park, near Watford, on Saturday last, at which a very large circle of the leading members of the nobility assembled.

The Marquis of Lansdowne and Sir George Grey returned to town on Thursday. The former has left town to the Royal dinner party on Thursday evening.

The Countess of Charlemont has relieved the Countess of Desart as the Lady in Waiting to her Majesty.

MARRIAGE OF LOLA MONTES (COUNTESS DE LANDSFELDT).—This extraordinary lady, whose name is with late events in Bavaria will be fresh in the recollection of our readers, was married on Thursday to George Stafford Heald, Esq., of the 2nd Life Guards. The ceremony took place, first, at the French Catholic Chapel, in King-street, Portman-square, and afterwards at St. George's, Hanover-square. Mr. Heald is a very young man, not having long completed his majority. He is, we believe, related to Mr. Heald, M.P. for Stockport, and is possessed of a very large fortune.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE ROYAL NAVAL BENEVOLENT SOCIETY.—The quarterly court of this society was held at the Thatched House Tavern, on Monday. The president, the Hon. Lord Hotham, was in the chair. From the report of the secretary, Commander Dickson, it appeared that during the last quarter the amount of subscriptions was £100, and donations £77, which, with the balance in hand, gave the income at £1,000. The disbursements, including £364 in grants to applicants, amounted to £511 14s. 9d. The court having, upon read the grants, a vote of thanks was awarded by acclamation to the noble chairman, and the meeting separate PORTUGUESE BONDHOLDERS.—In consequence of the non-fulfilment of the engagements of the Portuguese Government with the British bondholders, a meeting was held at the London Tavern yesterday (Friday), Mr. R. Thornton in the chair, at which it was resolved that the chairman should be requested to address a respectful but energetic representation to his excellency Count Thomar, expressing the satisfaction felt by the bondholders at his re-appointment to the presidency of the Council of Ministers, their grateful recollection of the punctuality with which, when previously in office, the financial engagements of the Portuguese Government with its creditors were fulfilled, and praying his Excellency to adopt measures which should ensure the establishment of regular discharge of the obligations contracted, and the payments of the dividends on the foreign Debt without deduction, according to the terms stipulated and guaranteed by the bonds.

KING'S COLLEGE ATHENÆUM.—Before the close of the academical year, the members of this society met for the election of officers for the ensuing term. C. H. Wainwright, Esq., was elected president; B. W. Bucke, Esq., and W. Gordon, Esq., vice-presidents; E. Anderson, Esq., secretary, and W. Heywood, Esq., treasurer. After the election, the majority of the members adjourned to the Somerset Hotel, to celebrate their first anniversary. The usual loyal toasts, together with "The Health of the Rev. the Principal and Professors of King's College," were drunk with the greatest enthusiasm. The chair was ably filled by George Schrader, Esq., of Sidney College, Cambridge; and the vice-chair by F. Henry Gray, Esq., of Trinity College, Cambridge, and late tutor under the patronage of Dr. Major, head master of the school, the society has met with unprecedented success. We are requested to state that the operations selected for the session during the ensuing term are of a very interesting character, and likely to be advantageous to those who may have the privilege of attending the debates ST. KATHARINE DOCKS.—At the half-yearly general meeting of the St. Katharine Dock Company, held on Thursday, in the Dock House, Tower-hill, a dividend was declared of 2 per cent, for the half-year ending the 30th June last, upon the capital stock of the company, and upon the instalments paid on the additional stock subscribed for, free of income-tax, payable on and after the 2nd instant.

LONDON COFFEE AND EATING-HOUSE KEEPERS' ASSOCIATION.—The half-yearly general meeting of the friends and subscribers to the above association was held on Monday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern, to receive the report of the committee for the past year, and to elect officers for the ensuing year, and also to elect one additional pensioner upon the funds. The report stated the amount received in donations and subscriptions was £173 17s. 9d.; the profit on a steam-boat excursion to Herne Bay was £50 3s. 6d.; the profits at an entertainment at the Eagle Tavern amounted to £43 11s. 10d.; and the donations received at the annual dinner in April last, under the presidency of C. Lushington, M.P., was £80. £103 has been added to the sum before invested, and also the interest for the year, amounting to £ which makes, with the balance in hand, the property of the society, £ Mrs. Jane Robson was elected a pensioner, and the pension of one of the pensioners discontinued in consequence of his circumstances having much improved. The various officers for the ensuing year having been elected, the meeting separat

MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE.—The half-yearly meeting of this society was held on Wednesday, at the London Tavern; W. C. Harnett, Esq., in the chair. The report was read by Mr. Peter Hardy, the actuary, and stated that the progress of the society during the past half year had been very satisfactory. and they had no doubt that when it became generally known that all difference of opinion in the society had been settled, it would become much more apparent. The statement of the receipts and disbursements to the 30th of June last showed that the receipts amounted to £24,177 8s. 2d., of which £14,145 8s. 2d. had been received as premiums upon equity new assurances, and £3,503 14s. 10d. for premiums upon other assurances. On the other side the account was balanced, leaving £2,533 6s. 3d. to the credit of the society, by the ordinary disbursements and other charges, among which were £8505, the amount paid upon nine policies by death, £1585 additions thereto, and £535 for policies surrendered. After some discussion, the usual remuneration was voted to the directors, when Mr Andrew Green, Mr. Coles, Mr. Burchell, Mr. Clayton, and Mr. Godson were re

LONDON AND WESTMINSTER BANK.—At the half-yearly meeting of the proprietors of this bank, held on Wednesday, at the banking house in Lothbury, the report of the directors was received and adopted A dividend the rate of £6 per cent per annum was declared, and the general business of the company carried on in a most satisfactory condition. Some of the proprietors thought that they ought to be making more money; but the chairman (Mr. T. explained that this had not been a year of large profits, that they ally in employing their funds at more than two per cent. Also, that the reserve fund was not larger than was consistent with the security of the company. The profits for the last half-year amounted to £24,729 17s. 4d., and after payment of the dividend, there would remain £3729 17s. 4d. to be added to the surplus fund, which would then amount to £105,453 14s. 3d.

LONDON JOINT-STOCK BANK.—The half-yearly meeting of the shareholders in this bank was held at the banking-house, Princes-street, Bank, on Thursday; J. H. Lancaster in the chair; when a report was presented, which stated, that the net profits realised by the bank during the six months ending the 30th June last, amounted to £53,433 14s. 1d., and that the sum of £18,000 being appropriated to the half-yearly dividend at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, there remained a balance of £15,433 14s. 1d. undivided profit, to be disposed of at the end of the year. The report was adopted; the dividend declared; and thanks unanimously voted to the chairman, directors, and officers of the bank. The meeting then separated.

CLARE-MARKET RAGGED SCHOOL.—On Wednesday evening the annual public meeting in aid of the funds of this institution was held at the [illegible]-room of St. Clement Danes. Lord Ashley, M.P., presided. The second report of the committee stated that a girls' school had been opened in January last, the average attendance of which had been from 30 to 60. A lady's committee had been formed for the purpose of superintending the clothing of the girls, by whom a small fund has been already raised for the purchase of materials. The number of boys who have attended the school since its commencement is about 400, the average being 60 each evening during the past year. Twelve lads having passed the preliminary examination, were sent out to Port Philip at the expense of the Government. Before their departure they were personally addressed by the Rev. Mr. Ellis, the rector of the parish, and each of them presented with a Prayer-book. The report having alluded to the desirability of establishing an industrial establishment, called for pecuniary support. The receipts were stated to have been £129, and, deducting the expenses, a balance remained in hand of £24.

ELECTION OF SHERIFF.—In consequence of Samuel Morton Peto, Esq. (who had been elected as the colleague of Mr. Nicoll), declining to take upon himself the office of Sheriff, the livery of London were summoned to Guildhall, on Monday, in order to elect another gentleman in his room, and their choice fell upon Alderman William Lawrence, citizen and carpenter.

CITY ELECTION.—The death of Mr. Pattison having caused a vacancy in the representation of the City of London, a requisition by the Liberal electors has been addressed to the Lord Mayor (Sir J. Duke), requesting his Lordship to allow himself to be nominated for the vacancy; and on Wednesday, at a meeting of the Liberal electors of the City, held at the London Coffee-house, a deputation, consisting of Mr. J. And Smith, Mr. Dillon, and other influential members of the association, was appointed to wait upon the Lord Mayor, to ascertain whether he intended to become a candidate. The deputation soon returned with the assurance that his Lordship had written a letter to address to his friends at Boston, having accepted a requisition from the electors of London. They likewise reported that the Lord Mayor had explained his opinions upon the leading questions of the day, and expressed his anxious desire that the usual course pursued by the electors for the return of Baron Rothschild, for whom he had voted at the recent election as soon as the poll commenced. The meeting then passed a resolution declaratory of their intention to give his Lordship their support.

ASSOCIATION FOR THE RELIEF OF DESTITUTION IN THE METROPOLIS.—The annual report of this association, which has recently been published, states that since the formation of this society the sum of £30,000 had been distributed in charity and the relief of deserving persons, principally in districts of the following parishes:—Bethnal-green, St. George's in the East, Whitechapel, Shoreditch, Stepney, Shadwell, Clerkenwell, and St. Giles, and in Drury-lane, Field-lane, and Saffron-hill. In many parts of these places large masses of the very poorest classes are located, behind streets of a respectable and even wealthy vantage. In addition to these benefits, during the present year £1481 had been refunded; by the agency of which, during the last four years, the poor had been able to save a sum of nearly £10,000, the whole of which they had received back in seasons of distress, when they most required it. The increase of depositors this year gave ample promise that these funds would in time be productive of great benefit, by enabling the committee to increase the grants to the visiting societies. The financial statement gave the following result:—The income from donations amounted to £4483; upon the proceeds of sales of Exchequer Bills, £1414; and these, with other minor sources of income, made the total £7993 5s. 11d. The expenditure, including grants, the repayment of £1481 and the purchase of £1012 Exchequer Bills, fell short of the income by £542, which remained as a balance. The report concludes by stating that the society entered upon the sixth year of its existence with an increased expenditure and diminished funds, and calls upon its friends to make active exertions in its behalf.

LAMBETH PENSION SOCIETY FETE.—On Thursday and Friday a Fancy Sale was held in the grounds of the treasurer to the Lambeth Pension Society, William Rogers, Esq., Southern Lodge, St. Ann's-road, North Brixton. They were open from two to eight o'clock. The weather was rather cloudy and unsettled, but this did not appear to discourage the company, which was numerous. The exhibited articles were of various descriptions, but all deserving of praise; and we observed that competition at the various raffles was spirited. Two bands of her Majesty's Coldstream Guards and Royal Horse Guards (blue) were in attendance. The music, with the cheerful and generous feelings which it excited, went far to counteract the state of the atmosphere But for these the thunderstorm of Thursday afternoon would, doubtless, have dispersed the fantasies; they seemed, however, to increase until the close of the day. The society, indeed, deserves encouragement, being instituted for decayed housekeepers, to whom it grants weekly allowances, which we should wish to see at least doubled.

THE NEW MARKET AT BILLINGSGATE.—On Wednesday operations were commenced in making the proposed improved new market at Billingsgate The dock, which was generally occupied by the small fishing and oyster boats, is to be filled in on a level with the present market, which is to be extensive and improved. roofing will be adopted, and the whole area will be properly and conveniently arranged with stalls, &c., worthy of the principal fish-market of this great metropolis. It is said that the sum required in completing the improvements will amount to between £20,000 and £30,000.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—On Wednesday forenoon, shortly before ten o'clock, a destructive fire broke out in the premises of Mr. J. Sloan, carpenter, in King's Head Yard, Lincoln's-inn-fields. The flames were discovered by the first person living in the next house, who, on entering the building for the purpose of rendering assistance, became encircled with fire. To escape being burnt to death he was obliged to jump from the first floor into the street. The stock in trade being of such an easily ignitable character, but few minutes elapsed ere the fire had extended to the premises of Mr. Pascoe, a general dealer, No. 18, and also the roof and back fronts of three other houses in the same street. The fire was not extinguished until Mr. Stone's premises were totally destroyed, the stacking of Mr. Burford much damaged, and several houses in Little Wild-street severely burned.

THE LABOURING CLASSES AND THE CHOLERA.—The committee of the public baths and wash houses in George-street, Euston-square, have just issued 10,000 copies of a circular addressed to the labouring classes of the metropolis, relative to the best means of preventing the progress of cholera. The committee dwell at great length, and with much force, on the necessity of cleanliness, both as respects persons, habits and the condition of their lodgings. The address is calculated to be productive of much good. The poor will be induced to understand the obvious advantage of freely using lime-wash and chloride of lime in their dwellings, in the presence of so dreadful a disease as the cholera.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 14.—The present return exhibits a serious increase in the mortality of London. The deaths, which in the previous week were 1078, have now risen to 1349, and even above the average of 391. This unfavourable result is produced by cholera and diarrhœa. The deaths from cholera were 330—more than double the mortality of last preceding week; from the previous week, and 97 above the average of former years. The mortality from all other zymotic or epidemic diseases is 101, the average being 210; that from all sporadic diseases is 686, the average being 679. The progress of cholera in London as traced in the returns of the last six weeks, in which the deaths amounted to 22, 42, 46, 194, 195, and 330. The progress of diarrhœa and dysentery in the same periods is shown as follows:—25, 38, 19, 35, 84, and 100. During these six weeks cholera was fatal to 432 males and 384 females, of whom 287 were, only 101 in the west and northern districts.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The barometer has been high this week. It reached 30.292 in. on Wednesday, and the daily mean was above 30 in. throughout the week, with the exception of Sunday, when the mean of the week was 30.129 in. The temperature of the air was highest on Sunday, when it reached 84°.1 in the shade, and 109° in the sun, at Greenwich. The mean of the week was 66°.8, considerably higher than in previous weeks. It was throughout higher than the average of the same week in seven years, and the mean on Sunday exceeded the average by

MR. HUDSON AND THE YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK RAILWAY COMPANY.—A special meeting of the York, Newcastle, and Berwick Railway Company was held at York on Wednesday. After a long discussion, the meeting came at last to the unanimous conclusion to institute civil proceedings against Mr. Hudson for the restitution of their funds, which he is charged with having misapplied.

EASTERN COUNTIES AND NORFOLK RAILWAYS.—The House of Lords has called for a return of all monies advanced by the Eastern Counties Company, for the use of the Norfolk Company, in 1848 and 1849, or of any director, sub-contractor, or creditor of the Company, or of any mortgages or bonds issued by the Eastern Counties in respect of the Norfolk Company.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

FOREIGN POLICY OF THE COUNTRY.

Lord BROUGHAM moved the following resolutions (of which his Lordship had given notice) on the subject of the foreign policy of this country.

1. "That it is right and was the duty of the Government to require and obtain from foreign powers satisfactory explanations of those recent movements in the Italian States which tend to unsettle the existing distribution of territory, and to endanger the general peace"

2. "That it is inconsistent with the general interests and duty of this country to intermeddle in the concerns of foreign nations, as between their Governments and their subjects."

3. "That this House regrets to observe in the conduct of the Government, particularly as shown by the papers laid before Parliament, a want of friendly feeling towards allies to whom we are bound by treaty and by mutual acts of good-will."

The noble and learned Lord condemned the foreign policy of the present Government generally, but particularly with respect to Italy. In his opinion peace would never be established on the Continent until a general congress to consider the affairs of Europe had taken place.

The Earl of LANSDOWNE said he should eventually adopt substantially and in principle the recommendations of Captain Denham for limiting the number of passengers on board of steamers plying in the Irish Channel.

BILLS ABANDONED BY THE GOVERNMENT.

Sir G. GREY announced that it was not his intention to proceed this session with the Juvenile Offenders Bill

Mr. LABOUCHERE also announced that it was not his intention to proceed with the Railway Audit Bill.

ORANGE PROCESSIONS IN IRELAND.

On the order of the day for the House resolving itself into Committee of Ways and Means,

Lord JOCELYN entered into an explanation in defence of the Earl of Roden, in reference to the unfortunate occurrence at Castlewellan, intimating that his Lordship had no power to prevent these Orange processions, had used all his influence to induce the parties engaged in the one in question to act with forbearance, even if insulted.

Sir G. GREY said that the Government were fully convinced, he regretted to say, that it was necessary to propose to Parliament a bill to put down all party processions in Ireland. There could be no question that armed processions like that which was the subject in question were at common law illegal, for they endangered the public peace. The most searching investigation should take place into the whole transaction which had terminated so deplorably.

After some observations from Mr. HUME, the subject dropped.

FIXED DUTY ON CORN.

Mr. HERRIES called the attention of the House to the condition of the public revenue as stated by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and in connection therewith, to the urgency of deriving an addition to the national revenue from a fixed duty on the importation of Corn. He suggested the imposition of a 5s. fixed duty solely on fiscal grounds, and not as a matter of protection.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer was glad to find the right hon. gentleman abandon the principles of protection as untenable. The right hon. Baronet defended the free-trade policy of the Government, and was followed on the same side by Mr. CREWE.

Mr. DISRAELI represented the object of Mr. Herries to be to make the foreigners pay the taxes of England, instead of the home consumer or producer.

The conversation here dropped; and the House having gone into Committee of Ways and Means, the usual votes on account of the Consolidated Fund, Transfer of Aids, &c., were taken.

Adjourned at half-past two o'clock

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The Assembly has given leave to prosecute M. Kœnig, for taking part in the tumultuous proceedings of the 13th of June.

The Constitutional of the Roman Assembly, Prince de Canino, son of Lucien Bonaparte, was arrested at Orleans, on Wednesday, on his way to Paris.

A serious collision has occurred at Corsica, between the people and the Garde Mobile, when several were killed. The quarrel arose out of some vituperative expressions used by the Garde Mobile in application to the President of the Republic.

RATIFICATION OF THE DANISH ARMISTICE.

The armistice entered into by the Plenipotentiaries of Prussia and Denmark, with the view of arranging terms of peace, was duly ratified and exchanged by those powers at Berlin, on the 17th inst. As soon as the territory in Schleswig shall be marched out by the German and Danish Commanders-in-Chief for the occupation of the Prussian and the neutral troops, the blockade of the ports will be raised.—a source of great satisfaction to all who trade with the northern ports of the German Ocean.

HUNGARY.

A courier arrived at the Turkish Embassy in Paris on Thursday morning, with intelligence that Bem had had an engagement in Transylvania with the Russian General Luders, in which the latter was defeated.

IRELAND.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT.

Her Majesty does not propose to sojourn at Cork for any considerable time, and will not sleep out of the Royal yacht. Offers of several residences have been made for her Majesty's accommodation; the principal being those of W. Roche, M.P., and Colonel Hickman, of Lota Beg, near Cork; Fota Island, the beautiful seat of the former gentleman, was tendered to Sir Geo. Grey, but graciously declined on the Queen's part.

It is proposed that at the Cove of Cork, where her Majesty will be first received, the name of the place be changed to Queenstown, just as "Plymouth Dock" was changed to "Devonport." The inhabitants would also take the place to be called "Queenstown" in honour of the Queen's visit. It has no name now, and is universally known by the inconvenienced brevity, for the most part, by many correspondents above "the Cove." Most likely goods have arrived at Cove they are at Cork, whereas the two places are usually 14 miles apart

The Town Council of Dublin on Tuesday voted the sum of £500 from the Borough rate, £100 of which is to be expended in the decoration of the Round Room at the Mansion House, and £200 to be placed at the disposal of the Lord Mayor, in aid of such general and public demonstration as may be agreed upon and adopted by the citizen

ORANGE PROCESSION.—FATAL AFFRAY.—On the 12th inst., the anniversary of the battle of Aughrim, [illegible] Orangemen, from all parts of the counties of Antrim, Derry, Belfast, Cavan, Lurgan, Monaghan, and, at various other northern towns, all of which passed off without riot. In the county Down, however, a collision took place near Castlewellan between the Roman Catholics and Orangemen, when the latter were returning in the evening in procession from Tollymore Park, the seat of Lord Roden, where they had held their meeting, having been invited thither by his Lordship. According to the accounts in the northern papers, the commencement of the affair is as usual, attributed to the Roman Catholic party. However it began, fire-arms were used with fatal effect by both parties, the police and magistrates siding with the Orangemen, few of whom appear to have been wounded. The scene of the conflict, which lasted about an hour, was a narrow pass in the hills called Dolly's Brae. The Catholics were ultimately repulsed, leaving six killed, and upwards of 30 more or less severely wounded. About 50 persons were taken prisoners. After the "victory," the Orangemen, we find the publichouse of a man named Ward, and also the house of the Rev. [illegible] Kelly, parish priest. Eighteen other houses were also set on fire by the Orangemen in the neighbourhood, by the latter of whom the Rev. Mr. Kelly's house was burned. It is quite certain that several of that party were carried off as field dead, and many desperately wounded. The leader of the Orange party was Mr. J. P. Bunbury, a magistrate of the county. The conduct, indeed, of all the local authorities appears to have been partisan in the extreme. It was known the hill had been taken possession of by the Ribbonmen with the avowed intention of preventing the Orangemen marching over it; and, although the magistrates had a large force of military and police in the neighbourhood, no effort was made to [illegible] the meeting. It does not appear, indeed, that they interfered at all until the battle had begun, when the police commenced an indiscriminate attack on one party, the Ribbonmen, while the Orangemen retired to burn the houses of their opponents, the military, consisting of two troops of dragoons and a detachment of infantry, affording little or no protection to the unfortunate peasantry. The following is the verdict of the coroner's jury on the bodies of some of the persons killed:—"The dead eat. Hugh Kelly, died of a gunshot wound inflicted on him by some person or persons unknown of a party processionising on Thursday, the 12th inst. The deceased, Patrick King, John Sweeny, and Anne Traynor, died on Thursday, the 12th of July, by certain violent injuries inflicted on the aforesaid day by some persons unknown of a party procession." The affair has created great excitement in the neighbourhood, and it is said that a district master of one of the Orange Lodges is to be inducted at the forthcoming assizes, with a view of testing the legality or otherwise of party processions.

EXCURSION TO THE LAKES OF KILLARNEY.

MACGILLICUDDY'S REEKS, AND THE UPPER LAKE OF KILLARNEY.

(From our own Correspondent.)

THE excursion season has commenced. The Continent is all but closed against the tourist, who neither wishes to participate in, nor witness civil commotions. Scotland, Wales, and the most beautiful districts of England, whatever may be their attractions, do not offer those of novelty to the great majority of men who at this period of the year rush from smoky London and the cares of business to feast their eyes upon the beauty, and their lungs upon the fresh air, of the fields, the lakes, and the mountains. For such men let me recommend a trip to Ireland, and to the lovely Lakes of Killarney. I am tolerably familiar with all the lake and mountain districts of Great Britain, and can affirm that neither in England, Wales, nor Scotland, is there any scenery more truly beautiful and magnificent, or more varied in its character, than that which surrounds Killarney. The journey has been rendered comparatively moderate in cost, and convenient as regards time, by the arrangements of the London and North-Western Railway Company. The directors issue excursion tickets for the journey to Killarney and back, giving the tourist fourteen days for the trip; and make all necessary arrangements with the Irish Southern and Western Railway Company for passing him on to his destination. Provided with one of these tickets I started from London by the mail train at five o'clock on Friday afternoon; and at five o'clock on Saturday morning, steamed into the beautiful Bay of Dublin. At six I landed at Kingstown, and within twenty minutes afterwards was walking in the streets of the Irish metropolis.

From Dublin to Killarney is a distance of 186 miles, of which 144 are performed by rail, to a place called Mallow, and the remaining 42 by coach. The first train from Dublin leaves at ten in the morning, and, postponing my projected exploration of the capital until my return, I started forthwith for the Lakes. From a railway train the traveller can in general get only partial and unsatisfactory glimpses of the country on either side of him; but such views as I obtained impressed me strongly with the beauty of the scenery and the fertility of the soil. The course of the railway is through the counties of Dublin, Kildare, Queen's County, the "nether tip" of King's County, Tipperary, Limerick, and Cork. I caught a sight in passing of one of the celebrated "Round Towers" of Ireland—that of Kildare; and remembered Thurles to be the place at which the self-deluded Smith O'Brien was given up to justice. On arriving at Mallow, at half-past five o'clock, we found coaches and jaunting-cars in readiness to convey the passengers either to Cork or to Killarney. There happened to be but three travellers for Killarney; and a jaunting-car being deemed sufficient for our accommodation, we saw our luggage stowed in safety, and set forth. I cannot say much in favour of the comfort of an Irish car; and the six hours that I passed upon this one were far from affording me any reason to change my opinion of them. It was now, however, that I began to see the nakedness of the land, and the misery of the people. In the train I had noticed the wide extent of the bogs or moorlands, all reclaimable by the expenditure of capital and labour—the capital not to be had, and labour not to be employed, although there is in Ireland a superabundance of people to whom steady employment would be the chief earthly blessing. But from the car I could see somewhat better the quality of the land, cultivated or uncultivated, through which we passed, and make a somewhat more intimate acquaintance with the unfortunate people whom O'Connell, with a flattery that now seems to have been a bitter mockery, designated as the finest peasantry in the world. At intervals far from rare the signs and evidences of eviction and extermination stared me in the face. He that runs in this land may read its characters, large, distinct, and painful, of its misery. Houses, cottages, huts, and wigwams (for the dwellings of the peasantry are of all styles, though the wigwam or mud-hovel predominates) lay in ruins by the road-side, dismantled, unroofed, and overthrown, the very pictures of desolation.

I did not count them as I passed, but I should think that from Mallow to Mill-street, a distance of twenty-one miles, I saw at least between thirty and forty of these law-made ruins on either side of the highway—to say nothing of the hovels that may have been destroyed in the bye-places, far removed from the public thoroughfare. The desolation was not, however, confined to the hovels of the poorest peasantry, or to the land untilled by the small cottera. I was much struck with the ruinous appearance of a large and over-substantial farm-house, equal in architectural appearance to the most comfortable farm-houses of England. Its windows were broken—its walls were tumbling—its outbuildings were in ruins; a large piece of ground in front of it was covered with a profuse and luxuriant crop of rag-weeds and rushes; and on every side was land relapsing into its original state of bog and wilderness. On inquiring of the driver, I ascertained that the last tenant had fled from the country without paying his rent, and that the farm had never since found a bidder. He was a man well to do in the world, and had scraped up a considerable sum of money in addition to the sums of which he had defrauded his landlord, and had fled with the intention of settling in America. But he never reached the land of promise. He took his passage in the ill-fated Ocean Monarch, and was one of the number that perished in the dreadful calamity that befel that vessel. His dishonesty was not a rare case; but the great majority of defaulters in Ireland are men who cannot pay. The poverty of the people is flagrant.

The sight that presented itself to me at Mill-street I shall never forget. Rags! I never saw rags—I never knew what rags were, until I saw the garb of the swarming, wretched, multitudinous beggars of this place. I imagined that I had seen squalor, that I knew the face of wretchedness, that I had looked upon misery and destitution, and knew their lineaments; but I can declare most solemnly, that all the previous squalor, filth, wretchedness, and poverty, that I had ever beheld—even in the lowest lanes of London, the filthiest wynds of Glasgow, or the most hideous closes of the old town of Edinburgh—were cleanliness, gentility, and comfort, compared with what I saw in Mill-street. The car drove through the principal street of this town, and stopped to change horses before the door of a little inn; and immediately we were surrounded by a beseeching and besieging army of beggary—men, women, and children rushed pell-mell upon us, to solicit halfpence. A large body of men kept aloof. They were lounging at door-posts, with their hands in their pockets, smoking their dudheens; or sitting on the pavements in idle vacuity—the whole of them, old or young, wearing the old-fashioned swallow-tailed coat, reaching almost to their heels; and the drab knee-breeches, patched with all the colours of Joseph's coat. But those that more immediately surrounded the car were of a lower grade than these, and their scanty habiliments were innocent of any such proofs of thrift and industry as a decent patch must be considered, however incongruous may be its colour. Their "looped and windowed raggedness" hung flapping about their heels; and the men, especially, looked the most forlorn, dispirited, famishing creatures I ever saw: their bare brown bosoms were almost as unprovided with flesh as their bodies were with clothes; their legs and feet were naked, sunburnt, and dirty; and their whole appearance and expression that of the most abject and hopeless misery. I could not avoid being struck with the remarkable contrast between the grown-up people and the children. There was no difference as regarded the rags or the dirt; though while the men were but shadows of men, and mean and squalid in the extreme, the young children to the age of ten or eleven were remarkably handsome, fresh-featured, healthy, and intelligent. Beyond that age, the signs of care and grief were upon them; and the young lads looked as care-worn and dispirited as their seniors. We remained but about ten minutes in this place, and were glad to purchase a relief from, though not a cessation of, importunity while we remained, by a plentiful distribution of our loose copper and small change; and by giving the children an occasional scramble for a penny. When we started with fresh horses, a whole troop of mendicants started with us, and followed us with clamorous importunity until they could no longer keep up with the vehicle, when they dropped off gradually, and left us to pursue our journey in peace.

It was half-past eleven at night when the car reached the town of Killarney, and drew up at the Kenmare Arms Inn. Notwithstanding the lateness of the hour, a scene very similar to that at Mill-street presented itself—a vast population of mendicancy having, in accordance with their usual habit, awaited the arrival of the last public conveyance.

LOSS CASTLE, LOWER LAKE OF KILLARNEY

EXCURSION TO THE LAKES OF KILLARNEY.

The traveller who wishes to see the Lakes, and be as near to them as possible, should not stay at the Kenmare Arms. It is a well-conducted and reasonable inn, but the same proprietors have another on a superior scale, called the "Victoria," to which I should recommend him to go—not for the sake of avoiding the town, but for the sake of the convenience of being near the Lakes, and within full view of the magnificent mountain scenery. The Victoria is beyond a mile from the town, on the border of the Lough Lane, or Lower Lake; and its obliging proprietors spare no exertions to render the stay of their visitors agreeable.

For boating or car-riding the situation is equally convenient, and, as a starting-place for all the celebrated spots, whether of islands or mountains, must be considered as far superior to any station in the interior of the town. On looking out of my bed-room window, on the morning after my arrival, I saw at a glance that the beauty of the Killarney Lakes and Mountains had not been exaggerated; and, on descending to the lawn, in front of the inn, the scene in its full magnificence burst upon my sight. The lake shone like molten gold in the light of the morning sun; its numerous green and romantic islands studded its breast with beauty; and the mountains reared their majestic crests across the waters, and hemmed them in with sublimity. Among the most conspicuous was Mangerton — the most round and lumpish of them all —celebrated for a lake about half way to its summit, to which has been given the name of the Devil's Punch-Bowl, and the ascent to which is strongly recommended to all travellers. The Turk or Torc Mountain; the Purple Mountain, with its separate hills of Tomies and Glena; and the jagged, highly picturesque, and splendid range known as MacGillicuddy's Reeks, bounded the view, and impressed me with a deep sense of their grandeur and beauty. I will not say that the lake scenery of England and Scotland is inferior to Killarney; but I can affirm that Loch Lomond, Loch Katrine, and Windermere—beautiful as they are—do not possess the various attractions of these comparatively small, but most lovely lakes. There is but one lake that I have visited which seems to me to be more beautiful in some features, and more sublime in others, than the Lakes of Killarney, and that is Loch Awe, at the foot of the mighty Ben Cruachan—the queen of all lakes for beauty—the monarch of all mountains for sublimity. The Lakes of Killarney are considerably smaller than Loch Awe; and even MacGillicuddy's Reeks, in all their vastness, are pigmies to Ben Cruachan: but though on a smaller scale, both lakes and mountains are only second to those wonders of Argyllshire in the effect they produce upon the mind of the cultivated and enthusiastic lover of nature.

One great source of the beauty of the Lakes of Killarney is the number of islands upon them. From the windows of the inn may be seen at one view the promontory or Island of Ross, and the ruins of Ross Castle, the seat of the renowned O'Donohue—the "myth" of these parts, with whose name and fame almost every inch of ground is connected in some way or other, by history or by tradition, by legend or by song. In addition to this, covered with magnificent foliage, are Lamb Island, Heron Island, O'Donohue's Prison, Cherry Island, Rabbit Island, Innisfallen Island, and a score of others that become visible one after the other in rowing through the three lakes.

At the time I write, I have not been able to visit a tithe of the beautiful or remarkable spots which every traveller must visit before he can say that he knows Killarney; but I send a few notes, which will convey to your readers sufficient information of the scenery upon which the pencil of your Artist has been employed, and reserve for another letter my own account of what I have seen in this land of beauty.

MUCKOSS ABBEY.

THE LAKES OF KILLARNEY are three in number—the Upper Lake, the Torc (or Middle) Lake, and the Lower Lake: these, with their islands and other attractive objects, we shall briefly describe; and, afterwards, such matters of interest and importance as are to be met with in their immediate neighbourhood.

The tourist, on approaching the Lakes, is at once struck by the peculiarity and the variety of the foliage of the woods that clothe the hills by which they are surrounded. The effect produced is novel and beautiful, and is caused chiefly by the abundant mixture of the shrub Arbutus unedo with the forest trees. The arbutus grows in rich profusion in nearly all parts of Ireland; but nowhere is it found of so large a size, or in such rich luxuriance, as at Killarney. In Denis Island there is one, the stem of which is seven feet in circumference; and its height is in proportion, being equal to that of an ash tree of the same girth, which stands near it. On Rough Island, opposite St. Ivan's Cascade, is another fine specimen of arbutus, the circumference of which is nine feet and a half. It strikes its roots apparently into the very rocks, thus filling up spaces that would otherwise be barren spots in the scenery. Its most remarkable peculiarity is, that the flower (not unlike the lily-of-the-valley) and the fruit—ripe and unripe—are found at the same time, together, on the same tree. The berry has an insipid, though not an unpleasant taste: it is nearly round, and resembles in colour the wood strawberry; whence its common name—the strawberry tree. It appears to the greatest advantage in October, when it is covered with a profusion of flowers in drooping clusters, and scarlet berries of the last year; and when its gay green is strongly contrasted with the brown and yellow tints which autumn has given to its neighbours.

Another remarkable botanical production is to be met with in the immediate vicinity of Killarney. The Kristie Fern (Trichomanes speciosum) is peculiar to Ireland, and has not hitherto been known either in England, Scotland, or Wales. It was first discovered by Mr. Newman, and described in his "History of British Ferns." Specimens of it are found at the Torc Waterfall, Glaudine, near Youghal, and at Mount Eagle, near Dingle.

KILLARNEY, in the county of Kerry, is a market and post town, celebrated for its mountains and the Lakes in its vicinity. The town is situated in the barony of Magunihy, and has a clean, cheerful appearance. The Cork coach meets the Dublin train at Mallow, at one o'clock; and passengers arrive by it at Killarney at seven in the evening. In New-street is the Kenmare Arms, and there are other respectable inns in the town.

ROSS CASTLE is built on a point of land which advances into the Lower Lake; and in the rainy season is insulated by the waters collecting from the marsh. In summer, however, this peninsula (which the term Ross denotes) is connected with the shore by dry land, as the Castle is by a bridge and causeway. It is named Ross Island, and is the largest on the Lakes. The Castle is now in ruins; but a few years ago it had a military governor and a detachment of soldiers. It was strongly garrisoned during the civil war; and was besieged, in 1652, by Ludlow, who succeeded Ireton in the command of the Parliament's forces in this kingdom. Having defeated Lord Muskerry, in the county of Cork (in which action M'Gillicuddy, an Irish colonel, was slain), Lord Broghill, the gallant son of the Earl of Cork, joined General Ludlow, and pursued the remnants of the Irish army to Ross Castle. Having conveyed his long boats from "Castle-Maine" with much difficulty, and launched them on the lake, Ludlow intimidated the garrison to surrender. The island is covered with a young plantation, and the grounds are laid out with great taste and beauty.

In ROSS BAY is situated the boat-house. At the moment of embarkation the bugle is sometimes sounded, and an echo is heard as if proceeding from the castle, and more remotely from the slopes of Mangerton. This echo is the finest from the shores of the Lakes, and is particularly beautiful if heard in the evening.

O'DONOHUE'S PRISON is a steep rock, nearly thirty feet high, so called from a chieftain of gigantic stature, who is supposed to have consigned his enemies to this barren spot. His celebrated white charger has also a local record in another rock, resembling a horse, close to the Muckoss shore, named O'Donohue's Horse.

To the north of O'Donohue's Prison are HERON and LAMB ISLANDS; and further to the west is Rabbits, or Brown Island.

MOUSE ISLAND, so called from its diminutive size, is a rock situated in the channel between Ross and Innisfallen.

INNISFALLEN is situated to the west of Ross Island and is as its name imports a beautiful or healthy island. It has but two landing-places, one of which has a mole where tourists disembark. This beautiful spot consists of eighteen acres of delightful woodland, knoll, and lawn. The timber of Innisfallen consists of gigantic oak and ash trees, whilst the arbutus and the holly form the underwood. Among the curiosities pointed out to visitors are—a holly, fourteen feet in circumference; a hawthorn growing through a tombstone near the Abbey; a crab-tree, with an apertnre, through which the guide recommends ladies to pass; and the Bed of Honour, a projecting rock, shaded by an old yew, and so called from having been visited by the Duke of Rutland, when he was governor of Ireland. The Abbey of Innisfallen was founded in the sixth century, by St. Finian, but the ruins now visible are evidently of much later date. In 1180 the island was ravaged, the abbey plundered, and the priests slain by Maoldnin O'Donaghoe. The "Annals of Innisfallen" are among the earliest and most authentic of the ancient Irish histories. The original work, written, and for several centuries preserved, in the Abbey of Innisfallen, is now in the Bodleian Library; and another is preserved at Trinity College, Dublin. These MSS. comprise a history of the world from the creation to A.D. 432, from which period to 1320 they refer solely to Ireland. At the south-east corner of the island is an ancient chapel, with a Saxon doorway; it is called the oratory. The pasturage on this land is celebrated for fattening cattle.

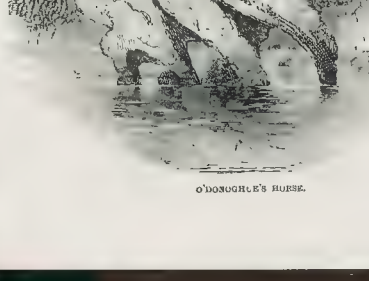
THE UPPER LAKE consists of about 720 acres, and is completely surrounded by mountains, which give it a sublime and picturesque aspect. Its extreme length is about 1¾ miles, but its breadth varies greatly. The principal islands on its surface are Ronan's Island, where parties occasionally dine; Duck Island; MacCarthy's Island; Arbutus Island, Rossburkis, or Oak Island, from the shores of which there is a splendid prospect; Knight of Kerry's Island; Eagle Island; and Stag Island. A fine view of the whole Lake may be had from the Cramiglann, which rises from the brink of the Lake in majestic grandeur.

MUCKOSS ABBEY adjoins the pretty village of Cleghreen, and is in the demesne of Henry A. Herbert, Esq., M.P., which includes the whole of the peninsula. The site was chosen with the usual judgment and taste of "the monks of old," who invariably select on the pleasantest of all places. The original name was Irelangh; and it appears that, long prior to the erection of this now ruined structure, a church existed in the same spot, which was consumed by fire in 1192. The Abbey was built for Franciscan Monks, according to Archdall, in 1440; but the "Annals of the Four Masters" give its date a century earlier: both, however, ascribe its foundation to one of the MacCarthys, Princes of Desmond. The building consists of two principal parts—the Convent and the Church. The Church is about 100 feet in length, and 24 in breadth. The steeple, between the nave and the chancel, rests on four high and slender pointed arches. The principal entrance is by a handsome pointed doorway, luxuriantly overgrown with ivy, through which is seen the great eastern window. The intermediate space, as indeed every part of the ruined edifice, is filled with tombs, the greater number distinguished only by a slight elevation from the mould around them, but some bearing inscriptions to direct the stranger where especial honour should be paid. A large modern tomb in the centre of the choir covers the vault wherein, in ancient times, were interred the MacCarthys Mor, and, more recently, the O'Donoghues Mor of the Glens, whose descendants were buried here as late as the year 1833. Close to this tomb, but on a level with the earth, is a slab which formerly covered the vault, and still in a state of comparative preservation. The upper rooms are unroofed, and the coarse grass grows abundantly among them. The great fire-place of the refectory is curious and interesting; affording evidence that the good monks were not forgetful of the duty they owed themselves, or of the bond they entered into to act upon the advice of St. Paul, and be given to hospitality. This recess is pointed out as the bed of John Drake, a pilgrim, who, about a century ago, took up his abode in the Abbey for several years. As will be supposed, his singular choice of residence has given rise to abundant stories, and the mention of his name to any of the guides or boatmen will at once produce a volume of the marvellous. The cloisters, which consist of twenty-two arches, ten of them semicircular, and twelve pointed, is the best preserved portion of the Abbey. In the centre grows a magnificent yew-tree, which covers as a roof the whole area; its circumference is thirteen feet, and its height in proportion. It is more than probable that this tree is coeval with the Abbey, and was planted by the hands of the monks who built the sacred edifice centuries ago. The yew, it is known, lives to a prodigious age.

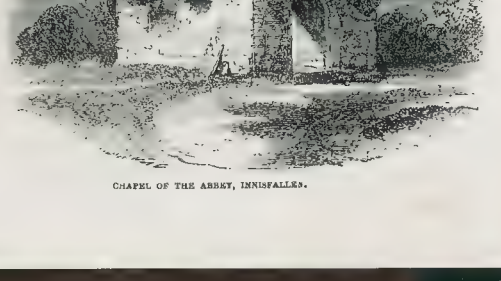
His Royal Highness Prince Albert has been pleased to appoint James Robinson, Esq., his Surgeon-Dentist in ordinary.

THE ARTIST'S COMPENDIUM.—Mr. Dickenson, of New Bond-street, has invented and manufactured what he calls "The Sketcher's Vade Mecum," being a portable contrivance for carrying "every requisite for sketching from nature." It certainly lies in small compass, and is of little weight, though of great convenience. There is a colour-box, which serves also as a water-bottle; a drawing-board, forming a box besides; and a stool of bamboo, "the strongest and lightest yet produced." These go into a case together, and weigh with it only 8½ lb. The contrivance is as simple as it appears ingenious.

The Monterey mentioned last week, at page 20, is not the one of California; but a town situated in the interior, in Mexico, and was the headquarters of the American General (now President) Taylor, who fought a battle near it, at Saltillo. The Monterey of California is on the Pacific.



O'DONOGHUE'S HORSE.



CHAPEL OF THE ABBEY, INNISFALLEN.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

A bed of oysters 40 miles long, and 8 or 10 wide, has recently been discovered in the Channel about 30 miles S.S.W. of Shoreham, near Brighton. The oysters are large, delicate, and delicious. A fleet of smacks are constantly dredging on this bed, and many of the vessels bring their cargoes into Shoreham harbour, largely benefiting the town.

A beautiful monument is about to be erected in the chancel of Howick Church, in memory of the late Charles Earl Grey. It has been executed by Mr. Behnes, after the designs of Mr. Francis Sloane. This fine work, which is a noble specimen of monumental architecture is a highly enriched example of the decorated Gothic. The mortuary inscription is short and simple, merely setting forth that the monument is "to the memory of Charles, second Earl Grey, K.G., born March 13, 1764; died July 17, 1845."

Mr. F. O'Connor has declared his intention, soon after the conference, which is to be held at Nottingham on the 6th of August, to retire from public life; and Mr. John O'Connor intends to try his success at the Irish bar, commencing with next term.

A return, moved for by Colonel Dunne, M.P., shows that 969,558 tons of coals, cinders, and culm were imported into Ireland in the year 1847, against 1,271,433 tons in the year 346.

The musical public of Paris was thrown into consternation on Sunday morning by an official announcement that the Grand Opera (the Théâtre de la Nation) was closed for the season. The cause assigned was the necessity of repairs; but the real cause is supposed to be a deficiency of ways and means, notwithstanding the alleged success of the Prophète.

In consequence of the re-appearance of the cholera amongst the convicts in Millbank Prison, the Government have issued orders for the removal of 500 to a more healthy locality.

The recent hanging of John Kelleher cost the Town Council of Perth £117 17s. 6d.

His Royal Highness Prince Albert has been pleased to appoint James Robinson, Esq., of Gower-street, his surgeon-dentist in ordinary.

On Saturday morning, as one of the contract barges, named the Gipsy, belonging to Mr. Sparrow, of Caldwell, and employed carrying stone to the Plymouth Breakwater, was going through the Sound, a sudden gust of wind took her, when she filled and sank. William Ellery, the master, and Nathaniel Harper and Jonathan Jones, seamen, were drowned.

A communication has been received by the Belfast Harbour Commissioners, requiring them to have eight or ten pilots off the harbour on the 10th of August, and until the arrival of her Majesty.

At the bottom of a wood belonging to W. Turton, Esq., of Knowlton, in Flintshire, is a rill of water, which empties itself into the river Dee, and when a person strides across it, he is in the kingdom of England and the principality of Wales, in the provinces of Canterbury and York, the dioceses of Chester, Lichfield, and Coventry, in the counties of Flint and Salop, and in two townships.

Accounts have been received from the Hudson's Bay territory of the 4th October last, dated Fort Simpson, which mentioned that no signs had been met with to indicate the fate of Sir John Franklin.

By the recent Mexican advices, it appears that a survey has just been completed of the Tehuantepec route for a railroad across the isthmus, by Mr. Ernaldo Obonsier, a Belgian engineer, for Senor Don Jose Garay, who has obtained the sole right from the Government of Mexico. The report is very favourable, and the road is said to be attended with no difficulties or obstructions from the head of navigation on the Guatzecoalcos river.

An attempt was made by pirates to board the schooner Endora, from Bangor, Maine (United States), bound to California, on the 4th of April, off the coast of Brazil, but she was defended by her passengers and crew: one boat filled with pirates was sunk, and the rest sheered off.

The whole of the stock (1,000,000 dollars) for a railroad on the Isthmus of Panama, from a navigable point of the Chagres River to the Pacific Ocean, has been taken in New York. The work will probably be commenced within a few weeks.

Satisfactory evidence that the copper-mines near Lake Superior, United States, have been worked in ancient times, has been recently afforded by the discovery of hammers made of stone, wedges, and several mining implements in the mines, having been left for unknown centuries by some forgotten race of men. Sheets of pure copper have also been found.

In the University of London, the number of candidates for the matriculation this year was unusually large, amounting to 166.

The Blackburn Grammar-School must be rather a snug thing. "The present master, the Rev. J. Bennett," says the Preston Chronicle, "has no scholars, except his own two sons! No assistant, though he receives the same stipend as his predecessor, who had to pay three."

Mrs. Smith O'Brien and her children returned to Limerick from Dublin, on Wednesday week. She has gone for the present to the house of her father, Mr. Gabbett, of Limerick.

On Sunday forenoon, about 11 o'clock, in Gulston-street, Whitechapel, the furniture and effects of nearly a dozen families were totally destroyed, and the lives of an equal number of persons greatly endangered, by the fall of several houses. Some of the occupants were more or less injured, but none fatally.

Prize money is announced to be paid to the commander, officers, and company of her Majesty's ship Conway, towing the prizes Spartan and Sarah, for money, granted for pirates killed, or taken on board of, and escaped from, certain Chinese piratical vessels, seized and destroyed on the 11th, 13th, and 17th of March, on the 16th and 17th of May, and 12th of June, and on the 25th of August, 1847; and the lists will be re-called for three months.

At a late hour on Sunday night, a fire, which was not extinguished until Monday morning, broke out upon the premises in the occupation of Mr. F. O. Martin, a timber merchant and builder, in the Great Eastern Railway Companies Railway station. The premises were leveled with the ground, and the contents nearly destroyed, before the flames could be subdued.

The Vienna papers report the chastisement of two ladies of rank, who spat at the Emperor's feet in a contemptuous and unbecoming manner. They were arrested, tried, and whipped.

Six persons have been found guilty, at Vienna of being concerned in the assassination of Count Lamberg on the 5th of October last. They have been sentenced to imprisonment for terms varying from 20 to 6 years.

The young Emperor of Austria is said to have become extremely popular: he goes amongst his men, and smokes cigars with his general, unlike his imperial predecessor. At a review, recently, he turned round to a young lieutenant and asked him for a cigar; the abashed subaltern took out his case and said, "I much regret that I have only some imperial cigars to offer to your Majesty." In Austria too imperials are made of the most execrable tobacco.

The whole kingdom of Poland is declared by the Czar to be in a state of siege, and the frontier is hermetically sealed. This measure has not, however, been adopted on account of internal troubles.

An ordinance of great importance to the mercantile world has just been determined by the Sanitary Council at Constantinople. Baturn, the exfrontier Turkish harbour opposite Russia, is to be thrown open as a free port, and persons and merchandise coming from the interior of Lesser Asia will have to undergo quarantine previous to their arrival in a quarantine station just erected for that purpose. By this arrangement every impediment is removed to the communication between Baturn, Trebizond, and Constantinople.

The Dover landing pier is proceeding rapidly; the foundation is now 400 feet out, which is half the distance, and above 15,000 tons of stone are deposited, so that it is thought it will be available for landing passengers by early end of 1850. The contractors have commenced a patent slip-way for repairing lugs in the pont, or upper part of Dover Harbour.

Lieut.-Gen. Lord Seaton, G.C.B., the late Lord High Commissioner of the Ionian Islands, has arrived in town, having held his appointment from February, 1843, until the present year.

This year is the thousandth anniversary of the birth of King Alfred the Great, at Wantage, in Berkshire, and it is said that a committee of English and American gentlemen is about to meet to organise "a grand national jubilee" at Wantage, in honour of the Anglo-Saxon hero.

The new hospital erected at the Liverpool-road, Islington, by the Great Northern Railway Company, to supply the advantages and benefits so long solicited upon the public at the London Fever Hospital, King's-cross (which last establishment is now required by the railway company as part of the site of their metropolitan terminus), was on Thursday opened for the inspection of the public, preparatory to the admission of patients in the course of the ensuing week. The cost of the building, with furniture, &c., amounts to about £20,000.

Wonderful activity has existed for some time past in removing the houses lying between Queen-street, St. Thomas the Apostle, Cloak-lane, and Bow-lane, preparatory to the formation of a broad and continuous thoroughfare, extending from Earl-street, Blackfriars, to Queen-street. The formation of this line of street will materially relieve Cheapside, Ludgate hill, and St. Paul's churchyard, of a great deal of their present inconvenient amount of traffic.

The Sémaphore de Marseilles announces the arrival of General Cabrera in that town. It is not, however, stated whether he has been set at liberty.

The London and North-Western Railway Company have determined on reducing the rates for the carriage of goods between Liverpool and Manchester to the same level with those charged by river and canal.

A large piece of honeycomb was lately found by a tradesman in Ayr in the centre of a log of Honduras mahogany, when the tree was sawn through. The wax, with the cells, was hard, and resembled in colour and appearance a mummy. The remains of bees were enwrapt in the wax.

The importations of fruits from Holland, France, and Belgium are at the present time of a very extensive character. One vessel from Rotterdam has just brought the immense quantity of 3500 baskets of currants, some other fruits, and some arrivals of apricots and peaches have taken place, during the present season. An arrival of nearly 1000 baskets of fruit has also taken place from Dunkirk.

There was an earthquake at Ragusa on the 30th ult., which lasted from three to four minutes. No damage to life or property is mentioned.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The current week has been a busy one for the devotees of the turf, but has not been productive of any extent of the slightest importance. We may say as much in anticipation of the week to come, although the fixtures embrace Harewoods, Barnet, Westbury and Bratton, Bridgenorth, Barnstaple, Jersey, Rochdale, Oddham, Marlborough, Guildford, and Newport—enough to keep the game alive, if not to excite the higher and speculative classes. Barnet, on Wednesday and Thursday, and Guildford on Friday, are the only meetings likely to attract the lions of Cockaigne.

Father Thames will have enough on his shoulders in the beginning of the week, the Christchurch and St. John's (Lambeth), St. George's, Hanoversquare, Barkside, and Fulham Regattas, and Chandler's four-oared race, being all fixed for Monday; and the Bermondsey Regatta for Friday. The Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta takes place on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, head-quarters at Ryde. Cricket rig on Monday, at Lord's, between the gentlemen of England and the players (the crack match of the season), the Surrey and Clapton Clubs at Kennington Oval on Thursday, and various interesting matches in the provinces.

TATTERSALL'S.

THE ROYAL MERSEY YACHT CLUB.

The second grand sailing match of the season took place on Monday, by vessels belonging to the club, exceeding 20 tons, for a piece of plate, value 50 guineas. The following is a list of the vessels that started:—The Queen, 47 tons, Thomas Forbes, Esq.; Victoria, 67 tons, Captain Cowper; Gem, 47 tons, Captain Cowper; Dart, 55 tons, W. C. and S. P. Hope, Esqrs.; Vision, 55 tons, Thomas Birchall, Esq.

The fleet arrived in the following order, in time, opposite the Gem yacht, belonging to Mr. Maginn, which was the flag-vessel of the day, moored off New Brighton Pier:—

The Dart lost on her return, by grounding near the Rock Light, but still became the winner by 14 minutes 24 seconds.

The prize—consisting of a very massive and elegant silver salver, beautifully and classically chased—was presented to the winner in complimentary terms by the commodore, which were suitably responded to by Mr. William Carey Hope.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

On Saturday, Madame Sontag repeated her favourite character of Rosina in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia, with triumphant success. On Tuesday, "La Gazza Ladra," was repeated, with Mdlle. Alboni as Ninetta. On both evenings the new grand ballet of "Les Plaisirs de l'Hiver" was given with increasing popularity.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Grisi's performance of Norma, on Saturday night, was one of her finest histrionic and vocal displays. Mario sang and looked a perfect Pollio, and received several ovations during the opera. Salvi's Pollio is admitted to be the best representation of that ungrateful tenor part which has been yet seen: he sang beautifully in the last act, and was much applauded. Tagliafico's Oroveso, in the absence of Marini, from indisposition, was impressively sung; and Mdlle. Corbari's Adalgisa was charmingly sustained. The first act of "Il Barbiere" followed, with Mdlle. Angri, Salvi, Tagliafico, Polonini, and Tamburini.

On Tuesday was the eleventh representation of "Les Huguenots," and the house was filled with Royalty, rank, and fashion. The singing of Mario in the sweet air of the duo produced immense excitement; and it was encored with such prolonged enthusiasm that he was compelled eventually to return, to repeat the passage in which his ringing high notes are heard so thrillingly, although a great portion of the finale, after the Queen's entrance, had been gone through.

On Thursday, for the grand extra night, "Don Pasquale" and "Donna del Lago" was revived, for the first time this season, with the second and third acts of "Masaniello," supported by Salvi and Massol. There were some changes in the cast of "La Donna del Lago" from last season. Mdlle. Angri appeared for the first time as Malcolm, and made a favourable impression by her expression in the slow movement in the two airs, and by her agility in the cabalettas. Mr. Sims Reeves, as Rodrigo Dhu, sang and acted with energy; but the "Challe" scene, which he sang as his aria d'entrata, was not best adapted for his powers, and, by changes in the florid divisions, lost its brilliancy. Grisi and Mario were in beautiful voice, and were rapturously encored in the duo, "Cielo! in qual estasi." Mario's singing of the interpolated air in the second act, "Come dal ciel precipita," was quite marvellous: as a specimen of the most refined style, and of the most wondrous executive facility, it is unrivalled. It exacted a double encore—such was the furore. The opera went off with great spirit; and the finale of the first act, with the Chorus of Bards, supported by Salvi, Reeves, Mei, Soldi, Lavia, Marini, Tagliafico, Polonini, Massol, Romani, and Tamburini, was very fine.

NEW STRAND.

The performance of Colman's comedy of "Ways and Means," on Monday, recalls the drama of a period not long passed, yet not likely to be long remembered. Without the poetry of the old comedy, the elegance of the Congreve and Sheridan school, or the fastidious taste of the present day, it appealed, if not to the wit, "to the less cultivated classes, and is not likely to be imitated hereafter, to have no objection, however, occasionally, to such recollections being brought back. Mr. Farren, as Sir David Dunder, was in his element; and in Tyrtop, Mr. Compton was decidedly humorous. Random requires a more experienced actor than Mr. H. Farren, but was, nevertheless, performed with spirit.

HAYMARKET.

This being the last week of the season, the management has resorted to the usual expedient of a change of performances every evening. In this way we have had successively the "Wife's Secret," "Money," "The Housekeeper," "The School for Scandal," and the "Merchant of Venice," Saturday being reserved for the final repetition of the new and successful play of "Strathmore." On Monday next Mr. Webster will take his benefit, on which occasion Mrs. Keah will perform Rosalind in "As you like it."

Mrs. Yates's benefit at the LYCEUM took place last night (Friday). The performance consisted of the "School for Scandal," and a concert.

That veteran dramatist, Mr. Kenney, will have a benefit on Wednesday next, at DRURY-LANE. Madme. Vestris and other eminent performers have volunteered their services.

MUSIC.

CONCERTS.

Under the especial patronage of her most gracious Majesty, of Prince Albert, the Queen Dowager, the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Duchess of Gloucester, and the Grand Duchess and Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Sir H. R. Bishop gave a morning concert, with full orchestra, conducted by Costa, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Wednesday. Considering the late period of the season, it was well and fashionably attended. Sir Henry Bishop, at all times, has been little before the public; and this is to be regretted, as he is one of the greatest composers this country has produced. He commenced his career, in 1805, by writing ballet-music at the King's Theatre, and from the Italian Opera-house he went to Drury-Lane Theatre, where, on the 23d of February, 1809, he brought out an opera entitled the "Circassian Bride." On the succeeding night, the theatre was destroyed by fire. He composed the "Maid of Milldale," at the King's Theatre, in June, 1816; a musical romance for the Haymarket, the "Vintagers," in the same year; and his celebrated opera, the "Maniac," for the Lyceum, in 1816. In the autumn of 1811, he produced his opera, the "Knight of Snowdown," for Covent-Garden Theatre, having been engaged to compose and direct the music of that establishment for three years. He held that post up to the arrival of Weber on this country; and when the German composer brought out "Oberon" at Covent-Garden, Sir H. R. Bishop produced "Aladdin" at Drury-Lane. He has written upwards of eighty operatic pieces, amongst which may be quoted the "Virgin of the Sun," the "Miller and his Men," the "Forest of Bondy," "Clari," "Guy Mannering," "Native Land," "Comala," "Charl," "Cortez," "Native Land," the "Law of Java," the "Doom Kiss," the music to Shakspeare's comedies, the "Antiquary," "Maid Marian," &c., as having enjoyed immense popularity, and containing music that will immortalise his name. Sir H. R. Bishop has been many seasons in the direction of the Philharmonic Society, and conductor of the Ancient Concerts. He has distinguished himself also as a writer for the sacred service. His performance on Wednesday (although it contained many of his well-known compositions, ought to have been exclusively an appeal to the general musical public, instead of being connected to please fashionable amateurs. There is, however, a portion of society whom he should not have another connection with in the winter, in such a locality as Exeter Hall, the scheme entirely made up from his own works, and such performers as will insure the patronage of the classes, amongst whom his melodies and glees are so familiar. On this occasion he was supported by the following artistes from Her Majesty's Theatre and the Royal Italian Opera—Madlle. Marini, Mdme. Lemaire, Powell, and Tamburini; Mdlle. Parodi, Adoni, Mdme. Grisi, Miss Catherine Hayes, and Mdlle. de Meric. M. Jules Stockhausen, a son of the famed cantatrice of that name, made his début on this occasion, proving himself to be a barytone, with a fine voice, of great compass, and a well-known style. He was encored in the ballad he sang. The English singers who rallied round the composer were Miss Birch, Miss Rainforth, Miss Lucombe, Miss Elkes Birch, Miss Dolby, Misses A. and M. Williams, Miss Bassano, Miss A. Nunn, Messrs. Lockey, Hobbs, Miller, A. Novello, Machin, Stretton, Barnby, and Phillips, and Master Soman. Mr. J. F. Burrowes, jun., a son of the composer, made his début as a pianist. The pieces composed by Sir H. R. Bishop were—the glee "Clari," "Sleep, gentle lady," the tenor air from "Guy Mannering," "Be mine, dear maid;" the mess for the "Fallen Angel," "Is this the region?" the canzonet, "In the silence of the night," the ballad, "My own native land;" the glee from the "Miller and his Men," "Stay, pruthee stay;" the quintet, "Blow, gentle gales," from the "Slave;" the air, "Tell me, my heart," from "Henri Quatre;" the song, "Come, where the lilies rise," and he was called on from the "Comedy of Errors;" the song, "Sons of freedom," from the "Slave;" the duo, "My pretty page," from "Henri Quatre;" and the round, "Hark! 'tis the Indian drum," from "Cortez." What a host of agreeable remembrances must have conjured up in the mind of the amateur of the pure English school of composition by the above enumeration; and, looking at the present style of writing, we ask, "What has been gained by the additional information observable in the modern school of operatic works, now so insatiably imbibed by our English writers, and by the increased screaming in the last Verdi innovations of modern Italy?" The graceful melodies of Bishop will live so long as English minstrelsy, headed by Purcell, shall not be forgotten in this country.

M. de Kontski, the violinist, gave a matinée musicale, on Monday, at Mdme. Dulcken's residence in Harley-street. He played one of Beethoven's sonatas with Mdme. Dulcken with considerable taste; but his tone is poor, owing to his cultivation of dexterous feats by the use of thin strings. He performed one of Schubert's melodies, and his caprice "La Cascade," besides a fantasia on themes from "Lucia," and introduced his Marseillaise concerto in the key of "Jaime," and his pizzicato effects in a caprice-étude. M. de Kontski is unquestionably a very extraordinary executant. Mdlle. de Meric, one of the most beautiful contraltos now on the stage, Miss Wallace, who shines in a concert-room, Signori Gardoni, Tagliafico, and Tamburini, were the vocalists.

Madame de Lozano, an accomplished vocalist, particularly in the airs of her native country, Spain, gave her annual concert on Monday, at the Hanover-Rooms, assisted by Madame Anna Bishop, Mdlle. Graumann, Miss Wallace, Miss Andrews, Madame Lemaire, Herr Schmidt, Mr. Molloy, &c. Benedict, Wallace, and Piatti were the conductors.

Miss Wallace, the sister of Vincent Wallace, the composer, has given a matinée musicale at the Beethoven Rooms, assisted by the Misses A. and M. Williams, Bassano, Messent, Lucombe, Messrs. Reeves, Lockey, Herr Schönhoff, and Herr Pyrsam; and Mdlle. Stipek, Madame Goffrie, and Mr. Wallace, as pianists. Mr. de Kontski, as violinist; and Mr. Jarrett, horn, as instrumentalists; and Lavenu and Signor Orsini, conductors. Miss Wallace is heard to the greatest advantage as a concert-room singer.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—The Théâtre de la Nation, the Grand National Opera in Paris, has been closed from the 15th of July up to the 1st of September, with the authority of the Minister of the Interior. The directors, MM. Duponchel and Roqueplan, being compelled to withdraw the "Prophète," Madame Meyerbeer leaving for London, and M. Roger for Germany, the répertoire did not draw sufficient receipts to meet the outlay, resolved therefore to close until they are in a position to re-open with that work, which, in twenty-five performances, produced 183,868fr. 95c., being an average of 7356fr. 80c. per night, a very large amount considering the state of political affairs, and the influence of the cholera in keeping people out of the theatres. On many nights previous to these causes the "Prophète" realised upwards of 10,000fr. each performance.—Roger is to sing the "Juive" and the "Huguenots" in German, at Frankfort; the "Lucia" in Italian, and the "Dame Blanche" in French.——Dreyschock, the pianist, has left London for Prague.—M. Jullien's third Concert Night Concert took place on Friday, at the Surrey Zoological Gardens: the great item in the programme was the National Anthem, with an obbligato of an 18-pounder cannon at each bar.——The Duke of Cambridge honoured Sir G. Smart by his presence, to hear an amateur concert, last Monday, led by the Earl of Falmouth, and directed by Mr. Eaton; the principals, chorus, and band, including seven members of Sir G. Clerk's family, mustering forty of the élite of Richmond.——As a sign of the English taste with regard to music, we may mention that the selection of choice and novel morceaux which we annex is most gratifying. The effect of the ensemble was highly creditable to the artistes and executants. The scheme was thus:—Overture and selection from Spohr's "Jessonda;" cavatina from Ricci's "Corrado d'Altemura," "Cara su sei;" cantigue and Egyptian chorus, from Rossini's "Moise;" chorus of nobles, cavatina of the Page, chorus of ladies, and "Conjuration," from Meyerbeer's "Huguenots," besides gleanings from the composer's "Robert le Diable" and "Prophète;" and the concert terminated with selections from Rossini's "Siege of Corinth."——The brothers Schreiber, the guitarists, gave their annual morning concert at the Hanover Rooms, supported by M. Camus, flautist; M. Silberberg, violinist; Madame de Lozano, Madame Lemaire, MM. Brez and Malwatsch.

ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY OF ENGLAND.

The eleventh annual exhibition of cattle, agricultural implements, &c. has been held by the Society this week at Norwich, which, for some days preceding, resounded with notes of preparation for the busy bustling scene.

At the Show-yard a great number of booths were erected, and considerable preparations made for the amusement of the agricultural mind.

Some of the booths were fitted up in most grotesque style, and others with considerable taste and comfort. They were adapted to various popular amusements. Alger's Crown and Anchor booth, famous at Greenwich Fair, stood conspicuously amongst its humbler rustic neighbours.

The principal feature of the annual meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society is the matchless exhibition of farming machinery which it collects together. The implements exhibited last year at York had exceeded in number and variety those brought out on any former occasion, but the show this year there were 500 more than there were at York. In conveying the implements to Norwich, 270 trucks of the Eastern Counties Railway were employed, each carrying about five tons; and in taking them from the station to the show-ground, 16 waggons, several carts, and 40 horses were constantly engaged for five days.

Amongst the company present during the week were—His Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge; Earl of Chichester, President; Marquis of Downshire; Duke of Manchester; Marquis of Douro; Earl of Liverpool; Earl of Oxford; Earl Cadogan; Viscount Hill; Lord Hamilton; the Hon. R. H. Clive, M.P.; Lord Stanley, M.P.; Sir Philip Egerton, Bart., M.P.; Sir Thomas Acland, Bart., M.P.; Sir Charles Lemon, Bart., M.P.; Sir Thomas Fremantle, M.P.; Sir T. D. Acland, M.P.; Sir C. Wood, M.P.; Sir Robert Peel, Bart., M.P.; Sir Edward Kerrison, Bart., M.P.; Sir Edward Buxton, Bart., M.P.; Sir Fitzroy Kelly, M.P.; Sir Jacob Wilson Bart., M.P.; Sir Walter Rockliffe, Bart., M.P.; Sir Thomas Mostyn Q. Mostyn, Bart., M.P.; Sir Culling Eardley, Bart., M.P.; Sir Charles Knightley, Bart., M.P.; Sir Edward North Buxton, Bart., M.P.; the Bishop of Norwich, Mayor of Norwich, Dean of Norwich, Canon of Norwich, Sheriff of Norwich, Lady Mayoress of Norwich, Professor Johnston; Professor Sedgwick; Professor Simonds; &c.

Thursday, the 12th inst., was the last day of receiving implements from that day to the opening of the show the yards of implements were continuously not only in heavy and light land, but in the yard, and wherever else the merits of the respective implements could be best tested. All implements the working of which could be exhibited during the days on which the yard was open to the public—such as steam-engines, mills, chaff-cutters, &c.—were kept at work by their respective proprietors.

The following is brief summary of each day's proceedings:

On Tuesday, stock was received in the Show-yard from eight in the morning till four in the afternoon.

On Wednesday, the Implement-yard was thrown open to the public from eight in the morning till six in the evening, at an admission fee of 2s. 6d.

The judges inspected the stock and awarded the prizes.

In the course of the day, at twelve o'clock, the Rev. Edwin Sidney, M.A., delivered a lecture in the County Court, "On the Parasitic Fungi of the British Farm;" and at four o'clock in the afternoon, Professor Simonds, of the Royal Veterinary College, delivered a lecture in the same place, "On the Anatomy, Physiology, and Diseases of the Organs of Respiration of Domesticated Animals, with particular reference to Pleuro-Pneumonia in the Ox."

At six o'clock, the council dinner, in St. Andrew's Hall, took place, at which was read the judges' award of prizes, with the exception of the award of prizes for horses, which was not announced until the following day.

On Thursday, the Cattle and Implement yards were thrown open to the public, from eight in the morning till six in the afternoon. Admission, two shillings and sixpence; and from two o'clock till six in the evening, at one shilling.

In the afternoon the great dinner of the Society took place in St. Andrew's Hall, at four o'clock.

On Friday (yesterday), the general meeting of the members was held in the Guildhall, at which stock in the morning.

The Cattle and Implement Show-yards were situate on the Old Heath-field, about one mile south-west of Norwich, on the Ipswich turnpike-road.

Next week we shall enter more fully into descriptive details, which will be accompanied with illustrations.

THE STEAM-SHIP "GREAT BRITAIN".—The directors of the concern to which this leviathan steam-ship originally belonged are again offering her for sale by tender. The former transfer for £20,000 appears therefore to have gone off. The Great Britain now lies perfectly dismantled in the docks of Liverpool.

The English screw steam-frigate, the Arrogant, Captain Fitzroy, came to anchor in Algiers roads on the 8th inst., and exchanged salutes. This frigate has been cruising in the Mediterranean, to try the joint system of the screw propeller added to her sailing powers.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Considerable buoyancy marked the opening of the English Market on Monday, Consols quoting 93⅞ to ⅞. Sellers of Money Stock, however, appearing, prices receded about ¼ per cent., afterwards closing at 93⅝ ⅞. Money Stock again being plentiful on Tuesday, the business transacted was of a limited character, and the parties for the fall being enabled to deliver, prices receded to 93; again advancing, before the close, to 93⅛ ⅜. On Wednesday, some extensive realisings upon the late advance, and the delivery of Stock consequent upon the opening of Consols, again caused a reaction, prices receding to 93 for Money, and 93⅛ for Account, having been done at 93⅜ to 93 for Money. This latter price remained unaltered during Thursday, and at the close of business was firmly maintained, principally in consequence of the continued difficulty of employing money being further increased by the large amount of the last instalment on the payment of the various dividends due at the period. Exchequer Bills are in demand, and at the heavy stocks have been dealt in by the public during the week. Prices at the close of the week were—for Money, Reduced Annuities, 92¾; Three-and-a-Half per Cent. Reduced Annuities, 93⅜; New Three-and-a-Quarter per Cent. Annuities, 93⅜; Long Annuities, to expire Jan., 1860, 8 15-16; Ditto, Thirty Years, Jan. 5, 18 9-16; India Stock, 254; Annuities, 1903, 84 pm.; Ditto, Half, 85 Stock, 192; Consols for Account, 93⅛; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 48 pm.; £500, June, 48 pm.; Small, June, 48 pm.

There was a slight reaction in Mexican stock on Monday, in consequence of the unfavourable news of the state of that country, received via New York. The stock was done at 28 and 27⅞, between which prices it ranged. Russian maintains the previous week's advance. Spanish Three per Cents have slightly improved. The business done in railway shares has continued very limited, closing with some degree of heaviness at the following prices:—Brazilian Bonds, 84⅛; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cents., 44; Chilian Bonds, 6 per Cent., 94½; Danish Bonds, 1825, 3 per Cent., 68⅛; Ditto, Bonds, 3½; Granada Deferred, 3 per Cent., 16¼; Mexican, Ex Coupons, Account, 26¾; Peruvian Bonds, 4 per Cent. Active, 51; Portuguese, Converted, 5 per Cent., 28¾; Ditto, 4 per Cent., 30¾; Russian Bonds, 107; Spanish 5 per Cent., 1840, 18½; Ditto, Account, 18⅜; Ditto, 3 per Cent., Account, 34½; French Rentes, 5 per Cent., Exchange, 25f. 40c.; Dutch 2½ per Cent., 12 Guild., 9⅛; Ditto, 4 per Cent. Certificates, 90¼.

Shares have been in demand during the week, and prices consequently firmer. Eastern Counties Stock have advanced nearly £1 per share, in consequence of the choice of a direction, and much is anticipated from the selection made. Purchases at the present low price, for the purpose of equalising investments made at much higher rates, are of daily occurrence. The market at the close of the week was comparatively well maintained, when the reaction in Consols is considered. Final quotations are—For Aberdeen, 19½; Ditto, Five Per Cents., 5; Bedford, 10½; Caledonian, 25¾; Ditto, Scrip, Half Paid, 12 per Cent., 12; Eastern Counties, 9; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 6; Ditto, Scrip, Six per Cent., 1⅝; E. Bourgne and Amiens, 6½; Orleans and Bordeaux, 3; Tours and Nantes, 3; Amboise Bank, 25; British North American, 40 xd; London Joint Stock, 16; Australian Mines, 4.

YESTERDAY MORNING.—There was no movement in Consols yesterday; the business done during the day being 92⅞ to 93⅛ ⅜ money, and 93 to ⅛ for account. Foreign were heavy, and Railway shares without any change of importance.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—A slight increase has taken place in the arrivals of English wheat for the market this week. To-day the show of samples several of which were the produce of Essex was moderately good. Very few buyers were in attendance, and the demand for all kinds of wheat of home growth was extremely inactive, and, where sales took place, prices were the turn lower than on Monday, without effecting a clearance. About 4 quarters of foreign wheat have come to hand, but several large cargoes are shortly expected from the Baltic Sea. Selected parcels were nearly, if not almost, stationary prices, but all other kinds were somewhat easier to purchase. Owing to the large arrival of foreign the barley trade was heavy, at a decline in prices of 1s per quarter, and no progress can be made in sales at the moment of depression. Malt—No supply of which was sent. Oats, of which 17,000 quarters, 4,000 of English oats were on sale, were in good request, but low in large—6 quarters. The oat trade ruled heavy, and prices receded 6s per quarter. Beans, quick, in fair sort. Peas—Scarce and full, at barely Monday's currency.

ARRIVALS.—English. Wheat, 2160; barley, 50; malt, 2010; oats, 880; flour, 2110. Foreign, 600. Foreign: 4720; barley, 4,950; oats, 24,060; flour, —— quarters.

English.—Wheat, Kent and Essex, red, 48s to 48s, white, 44s to 50s; Norfolk and Suffolk, red, 42s to 47s; ditto, white, 42s to 48s; rye, 32s to 35s, grinding barley, 22s to 25s, distilling ditto, 25s to 27s; malting ditto, 36s to 38s. Norfolk and Lincoln malts, 46s to 50s; brown ditto, 35s to 36s; Kingston and Ware, 38s to 40s; Chevalier, 52s to 56s. Yorkshire and Lincolnshire oats, 16s to 18s; potato ditto, 17s to 19s; Scotch and Cork, black, 17s to 18s; ditto, white, 19s to 19s; tick beans, new, 28s to 30s; ditto, old, —s to —s; grey peas 30s to 32s; maple, 34s to 36s; white, 32s to 35s; boilers, 35s to 38s, per quarter.

Foreign.—Wheat, Dantzic and Konigsberg, 48s to —s; white, —s to —s; barley, —s to —s; beans, —s to —s; peas, —s to —s per quarter. Flour, American, 22s to 23s per barrel; Baltic, —s to —s per barrel.

The Seed Market.—Samples of new rape, tares, and canary seed, in good condition, have been on offer in our market. New rapeseed has sold at £32 per last. In old seeds, no little is doing, the prices are almost nominal.

LINSEED, English, sowing, 34s to 35s; Baltic, crushing, 30s to 40s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 38s to 40s; linseed cake, 6l to 8l per quarter; coriander, 16s to 22s per cwt.; brown mustard seed, 6s to 10s; white do. 5s 6d to 10s 6d; tares, 5s 6d to 6s 6d per bushel. English rapeseed, new, £22 to £25 per last of ten quarters; cleared cakes, £6 15s to £7 5s. Hempseed, ditto, foreign, £5 2s to £6 5s per 1000; rapeseed cakes, £4 10s to £5 0s per ton; canary, 110s to 120s per quarter. English clover-seed, red, —s to —s; trefoil, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, up to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 5½d per 4lb loaf.

Imperial Weekly Average.—Wheat, 42s 5d; barley, 23s 9d; oats, 18s 9d; rye, 26s 11d; beans, 32s 9d; peas, 30s 9d.

The Six Weeks' Average.—Wheat, 43s 5d; barley, 26s 1d; oats, 18s 2d; rye, 26s 8d; beans, 31s 5d; peas, 30s 9d.

Duties on Foreign Corn.—Wheat, 1s 0d; barley, 1s 0d; oats, 1s 0d; rye, 1s 0d; beans, 1s 0d; peas, 1s 0d.

Smithfield.—Friday.—Wheat, 48s to 52s; barley, 26s to 28s; oats, 18s to 20s; rye, 28s to 30s; beans, 30s to 32s; peas, 30s to 32s.

Potatoes.—Middlesex and Essex, per ton, £3 to £4 10s; Scotch, £3 to £4 10s; Kent and Cork ditto, £3 to £4 10s; Jersey, £5 to £6 10s; Guernsey, £5 to £6 10s.

Provisions.—The demand for foreign butter is far from active, at the late declines in the quotations. Irish and Carlow are in moderate request, and prices are pretty well supported. Fine Friesland, 72s to 74s; fine Holland, 66s to 70s; fine Kiel, 70s to 74s per cwt. A moderate business is passing in Irish butter, at late currencies. Limerick, Clonmel, and Cork, Friesland, firsts, 67s to 70s; Cork, 66s to 68s; limerick, 64s to 66s, and Waterford, 61s to 63s per cwt. English butter dull, and rather over. Devon, 76s to 80s; fine Sussex, 76s to 78s; fine Dorset, 68s to 72s per cwt; fresh, 8s to 10s per dozen lbs. The best Irish parcels of bacon are steady, at from 70s to 72s per cwt. All other kinds of provisions support last week's prices.

Hay and Straw.—Meadow hay, £3 5s to £3 15s; clover ditto, £3 5s to £3 0s; and straw, £1 8s to £1 12s per load.

Spirits.—The demand for rum is in a very restricted state. In prices, however, we have no change to notice. Brandy and corn spirits are quite at a stay.

Tallow.—Although only a limited business is doing in this market, prices have advanced 1s to 2s per cwt. P.Y.C. on the spot, is quoted at 39s 3d to 39s 6d, and for forward delivery, 40s to 40s per cwt. Town, tallow, 37s to 37s 3d per cwt, nett.

Oils.—The market is tolerably firm, at full last week's prices.

Coals (Friday).—Buddle's West Hartley, 16s 6d; Hollywell Main, 14s 6d; Eden Main, 14s 3d; Hedley, 14s; Gibson, 14s 3d; Hutton, 13s; Stewart's, 12s; and Sadler, 10s 3d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—From nearly the whole of the plantations in Sussex and Kent our accounts serve to stating that a poor prospect is held out to the planters this year. Although the fine weather of the present week may have very beneficial effects, the general growth of hops is pretty generally antiquated. Our market is, therefore, firm for all good and fine hops, although somewhat easier, but in actual business doing is rather restricted. In Mid and East Kent a few transactions have taken place. The duty is stated from £50,000 to £70,000.

Wool.—Since Monday, 23 bags and 24 bls.; Wednesday, 24 bls.; Thursday, 24 bls.; and East Kent ditto, 24 bls to 27 bls.

Smithfield (Friday).—The supply of beasts on sale in to-day's market was very small, and of but middling quality. Although the number of buyers in attendance was not large, the best trade ruled firm, and, in some few instances, the prices of the best Scots were the turn higher. Mutton was quite tolerably well cleared off, at last Monday's currency. Calves and pigs

MARRIAGE OF LORD FOLEY WITH LADY MARY FITZALAN HOWARD, IN THE CHAPEL ROYAL, ST. JAMES'S.—(SEE PAGE 43.)

The regiment only returned from Canada and the West Indies about a twelvemonth ago.

Upon the ground were drawn up the Welsh school of boys and girls. The whole proceedings passed off with great éclat. There were banners and inscriptions; the houses in the principal streets were dressed with branches and flags; and everywhere the Prince was greeted with loud cheers.

The scene has been obligingly sketched, for our own Engraver, by Mr. Charles Tweedfield Bracewell, of Winchester.

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. MACKINNON.

MR. WILLIAM ALEXANDER MACKINNON, the honourable member for Lymington, if not one of the most brilliant speakers, is certainly one of the most useful and humane gentlemen that has ever had a seat in the Legislature. His efforts have been chiefly directed towards the physical improvement and general sanitary condition of the people, and he has justly earned the gratitude of all friends of humanity for his successful advocacy of the bill for the suppression of cruelty to animals, and more particularly for the zeal and ability with which he has, despite of active opposition in some quarters, and great apathy in others, promoted that most desirable measure, the Health of Towns Bill.

He entered Parliament in 1830, as member for Dunwich. In the following year he was returned for Lymington, for which place he has sat in the House ever since, with the exception of the years 1833 and 1834, when he was not in Parliament.

In 1831, he opposed the plan for taking the census of 1821 as the basis of the representation under the Reform Bill; and, on dividing the House, had the largest majority that voted against the bill. In the next Parliament, Ministers took the census of 1831 as their guide.

Besides the measures above mentioned, Mr. Mackinnon introduced, in 1832, a measure for repealing the usury laws, which was adopted in so far as applied to bills of exchange at short dates. In 1835, his bill for an alteration in the law of Patents and Registration of Designs was introduced; and two sessions after, it was carried. He drew the attention of Parliament in 1836 to the consolidation of turnpike trusts, and the measure was carried as far as regards those around London, the immense debt of those throughout the country precluding farther interference. In the years 1837, 1838, and 1839, we find him advocating the establishment of a rural police, and the propriety of acknowledging the French occupation of Algiers; he also spoke on the Metropolitan Police, and various matters affecting material and administrative improvements throughout the country. On the subject of harbours of refuge, he showed how much useless revenue was drawn for Ramsgate, Dover, and other ports, which might be advantageously applied to the formation of the proposed harbours. On Prison Disciplines, West India affairs, &c., he delivered many speeches characterised by clearly expressed statements and temperate appeals to the good sense and justice of Parliament. The abolition of the nuisance, and of the detriment to health, caused by the dense smoke from factories, &c., has also occupied his zealous attention, and no doubt his praise worthy exertions in this respect will be crowned with his customary success.

That monster nuisance of the metropolis, Smithfield Market, is at present the subject on which this great sanitary reformer is engaged. The Select Committee of the House to which the subject was referred this session, and of which he was Chairman, have just issued their report, and the conclusion at which they have arrived is embodied in the following resolution, viz.:—"That it is the opinion of this committee that the continuance of a market for the sale of live stock in Smithfield is proved by experience to be attended with very serious inconveniences and objections, and that it ought to be removed." They also state, with reference to a subject on which much difference of opinion existed, that only one great metropolitan cattle market can exist; and they add, "in the selection of its site, regard should be had to the position of the railway termini, the place of the disembarkation for Scotch, Irish, and foreign cattle; the bridges, especially Blackfriars; and to the density of the population in the neighbourhood of such site." They also recommend the Government to take into their "early and serious consideration" the construction of abattoirs, the establishment of an inspection of slaughter-houses, public as well as private; of an organisation of a system of vigilant superintendence of the markets both of dead and live stock, "to prevent the sale of meat unfit for human food;" of a shifting of the market-day from Monday to Tuesday; and of erecting lairs with a suitable supply of food and water for the cattle that are brought to market.

MR. W. A. MACKINNON, M.P. FOR LYMINGTON.

This most able report, which fully breathes the spirit of sanitary improvement that Mr. Mackinnon has for years past been labouring to infuse into the minds both of legislators and the dwellers in crowded cities, turned the subject of discussion in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, when the hon. gentleman, as chairman of the committee, in a speech replete with enlarged views of the question, which he sustained by an extensive array of startling facts, directed the especial attention of the Legislature to the matter. He showed, among other things, that, according to the evidence of Professor Owen and other medical men, the violence and ill usage suffered by the cattle in Smithfield caused the meat to become so innutritious and noxious to health, that the great spread of cancer among the humbler classes in the metropolis was principally to be attributed to the use of that deteriorated food. The hon. gentleman concluded with a motion that an humble address be presented to her Majesty, praying that she should give directions that the report of the Smithfield Market Committee should be taken into early and serious consideration. The motion, however, only called forth from Mr. C. Lewis, on the part of the Government, an assurance that they would take the report into consideration, and examine how far they were prepared to assent to the conclusions of the committee; and, if they could assent, they would give their assistance towards carrying them into effect. Lord J. Russell adding, that, though the Government would take the report into consideration, he could not undertake to say that they would find some plan which would remove those evils—which, though under the name of Smithfield at present, might still exist under some other name.

The motion was withdrawn for a more auspicious occasion.

Mr. Mackinnon is author of an excellent work on "Public Opinion," "Thoughts on the Currency," and "The History of Civilisation."

The hon. member is chief of the clan Kinnon, which traces its descent from the Royal line of Scottish Kings. He was born in 1789, and married, in 1812, Emma Mary, daughter and heiress of Joseph Palmer, Esq., of Palmerston House, in the county of Mayo, and Rush House, county of Dublin. At the death of Mr. B. Palmer (a lunatic, and brother of the late Mr. Palmer), the property of the Palmer family will go to Mr. Mackinnon, in right of his wife (deceased).

The hon. gentleman is a member of the Royal Antiquarian, the Asiatic, the Geological, and the Astronomical Societies. He was educated at Winchester and Cambridge, and kept terms at Lincoln's Inn, but has not been called to the bar.

In politics Mr. Mackinnon is a Conservative. He is, however, a free-trader and

OPENING OF THE NEW CHANNEL, BELFAST HARBOUR.—THE PROCESSION STARTING.

BELFAST HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS.

OPENING OF THE VICTORIA CHANNEL.

For twelve years past, extensive improvements have been in progress in the Harbour of Belfast, from the plans of Messrs. Walker and Burges, furnished exactly nineteen years since, on Tuesday, the 10th instant, the day very appropriately selected for the opening of the portion already completed, and designated the Victoria Channel.

The first section of this important work was completed and opened for navigation in January, 1841, and cost about £43,000; the contract for the remaining portion was taken at £41,000. The improvements consisted in forming, in the first place, a new channel, commencing near the town, and terminating at the first bend of the river, near Thompson's Tower. Secondly, in purchasing all the private quays and docks, and filling up the old slip docks. In the third place, in completing the new channel, from Thompson's Tower to near the entrance to Garmoyle. Within the last ten years, all the large purchases necessary for giving effect to these works have been made at an outlay of about £164,500; and improvements have, within the same period, cost upwards of £216,509, a very large amount of which has been expended directly in wages of labour.

The new cut just opened makes the channel—formerly one of the most circuitous and intricate in the world—one continued line with a very gentle bend into the deep water at Garmoyle from the quays of Belfast.

One o'clock was the hour appointed for the ceremony of opening the New Channel; and the Harbour Commissioners had invited representatives of the various public bodies in town, the General commanding the district, the officers of the garrison, and a large number of the merchants, ship-owners, and professional gentlemen of the town, to join them on this interesting occasion. The Prince of Wales steamer had been placed at the disposal of the Commissioners; and, shortly after the hour named, she proceeded, with her company, from the quay at the end of High-street, amid the cheers of the spectators. She was followed by the Whitehaven and Eyrie's Queen (auxiliary screw-steamer), the latter towing the Foam and Gannet yachts, all gaily dressed with flags, and having their decks crowded with people. The Ranger, tug-steamer, was similarly decked and freighted; and the numerous vessels in the harbour had their colours displayed. As the Prince of Wales proceeded, she was saluted by discharges of guns. When she had reached about half-way down the New Channel, she was stopped; and Mr. Pirrie, after a short address to the gentlemen around him, baptised the New Channel by the name of the "Victoria Channel," sprinkling it, at the same time, with the contents of a bottle of champagne. The steamer, with her escorts, then passed on as far as the Gobbins, amid renewed salutes of artillery.

About five o'clock, the party returned, and landed on Dargan's or Queen's Island, where a sumptuous banquet was provided for 200 guests, in a large tent, beautifully decorated with evergreens and flowering shrubs. Mr. Whitla, Chairman of the Harbour Commissioners, presided; and Mr. Pirrie and Mr. S. Thomson were croupiers. After dinner, the usual loyal toasts were given. Then followed "The Army and Navy;" General Bainbrigge replying on behalf of the army. "The Marquis of Donegal, the Lord of the soil," was very briefly responded to by Mr. Dickson; and Mr. R. Grimshaw spoke to "The Representatives of the Borough in Parliament." When the health of "The Guests" was given, the Hon. Mr. Handcock replied. General Bainbrigge next proposed the health of the Chairman, which was drunk with loud cheers; and Mr. Whitla replied, entering into some statements connected with the object of the present meeting.

The health of Mr. Walker, the engineer, was received with loud cheers; and having thanked the company, he stated that formerly Belfast Harbour was entered by a circuitous channel, and only ships drawing twelve feet could enter, and that not without difficulty; lately, they had one drawing twenty-one feet at the quay. He had no doubt that the people of Belfast would proceed to complete the work they had so well commenced. There was no harbour in Great Britain which presented the same advantages. His plan included the construction of docks; and he held, that they would not have finished their work until they had made docks where their ships could float equally at low as at high tide; for, however soft the mud of the harbour might be, no ship could ground on it without sustaining some injury. When they should have docks, no harbour in Great Britain would equal theirs. They had every encouragement to proceed. They had behind them a population almost equal to that of all Scotland; and he had observed, that where harbours were improved trade followed. Mr. Walker's address was warmly applauded throughout.

The health of Mr. Dargan was proposed, and was drunk with loud cheers. He acknowledged the compliment; and said that his acquaintances with the people of Belfast had made a strong impression upon him, and that to be a Belfast man would ever give any person a claim upon him.

A number of other toasts were given and replied to by Mr. Pirrie, Mr. M'Neile, Mr. Saffery, Mr. Bristow, Mr. Goddard, Mr. Hoffmeister, Mr. J. Mulholland, &c. During the evening, the proceedings were enlivened with songs and glees and the band of the 13th. Rockets were sent up, and other fireworks played. The river was crowded with boats, and the quays with people. A more animated or exciting scene has seldom been witnessed. Nothing that the Commissioners could do was wanting; and their guests entertained but one opinion of their attention and courtesy.

The gratifications of the day appear to have been largely shared in by the other parties who joined in celebrating an event of so much importance, as connected with the trade of Belfast.

Our Illustration was sketched by Mr. Burgess, of Belfast, from the Custom House, at the moment of the procession starting. The extended lines of quays on both sides of the river are seen, and, in the distance, the ancient fortress of Carrickfergus and Black Head, the basaltic point that forms the northern entrance to the Bay.

Nature had done much for this harbour, which is one of the most secure and capacious in Europe. Art has now nearly completed the conveniences that a constantly increasing commerce demands. At the present period it is a useful lesson to the Empire in general, and to Ireland in particular, to consider what has been here done by an energetic community, although unaided by the State. The inhabitants of Belfast—the population does not reach 90,000—have, within ten years, raised amongst themselves, and expended on their harbour, £381,000; and so judicious has been the outlay, that the Commissioners have not required to increase, by the smallest amount, their very low scale of taxation. As a very large amount of the expenditure has been in the wages of labour, they have, by expediting their improvements, afforded, in the midst of the general distress, employment to a large number of the working classes.

MAP OF HUNGARY.

THE WAR IN HUNGARY.

A GLANCE at the accompanying Map shows Hungary and Transylvania, defended upon two sides and part of the third by the Carpathian Mountains, which extend from the Jablunka Pass, in the extreme north-west, as far as Orshova, on the Turkish frontier. Three passes lead through this wall into Hungary, of which only two (the Jablunka and Duckla) are readily practicable. Five or six openings yield entrance into Transylvania; but of these the Pojana-stampi, and the defiles opposite Cronstadt and Hermannstadt, are the most important. The remainder of this side is covered by the Turkish provinces along the Danube. The western aspect of Hungary, comparatively open to an Austrian or Russian inroad, was naturally only defended by the confluents of the Danube, by the Waag running southward, by the Raab and other streams running northward into it, and by the hills behind them. On this account, the main Hungarian army, under Görgey, numbering 90,000 men, is stationed here. His right wing, it will be observed, extends along the Waag; his centre, through the Schütt Island, and resting on the impregnable fortress of Komorn; his left wing (originally in advance of Gran, and on the river of that name), now in front of the Bakonyer Wald, or hill-forest covering Pesth and Buda. Opposite Komorn, at Acs or Old and New Szolly, is a bridge-head, which, after the withdrawal by Görgey of his left wing, the united Austrian and Russian forces, to the number of 70,000 men, made a desperate attempt to carry. Driven back with great slaughter on that occasion, a second attack seems to have been equally unfortunate, the Hungarians marching out of their lines to assail them.

Originally it was thought that the Hungarians would everywhere defend the mountain passes, and maintain the line of the Raab. On the contrary, the passes everywhere retired without fighting; concentrating their 200,000 men, it may be observed, within those richer territories more densely peopled by the warlike Magyar race, and which in the Men are within dotted lines. Henry Paskiewitch, with 60,000 troops (and 50,000 more advancing from Cracow), has been allowed to penetrate as far as Debreczin on one side, and on the other, it is reported, as far as Erlau, without having encountered any resistance, except at Tokay, from an insignificant Hungarian body. Reports are current at Vienna of his defeat at Erlau. At all events, as Dembinski's army, now commanded by the enterprising Vyeckel, is probably covering the magazines of Grosswardein, a battle is imminent.

In Transylvania, two Russian columns have been allowed to penetrate: but Bem, who holds the main positions, is at Hermannstadt with an army of 36,000 men, evidently meditating some great blow. The Ban Jellachich, who the other day advanced to O'Beeze, where he was defeated, and obliged to retire behind the Danube canal, has since been followed up by the Hungarians, attacked, defeated, and, it is reported, driven over to the Turkish frontier.

At this juncture, the important fortress of Arad, with a garrison of 2000, has just surrendered to the Hungarians.

HUNGARIAN HUSSARS.

A PARTY of Hungarian Hussars have been for several days located at Folkestone under peculiar circumstances.

It appears that several of the Hungarian troops in Radetzsky's army found opportunities of deserting to the Sardinians, and of taking part, under their colours, in the battles of Mortara and Novara, against the enemies of their country. When, by the terms of the armistice between Austria and Sardinia, all Lombards and Hungarians were to be delivered up, about 200 of the latter contrived to quit the Sardinian territory. Some found their way into Switzerland, and others to Grenoble in France.

A party of them were passed by the French authorities through the interior of France, to Boulogne, whence they were shipped to Folkestone. They are furnished with attestations of their exemplary conduct by the authorities of the several French towns and villages through which they passed; and their case has already excited considerable sympathy in this country.

Our Artist has portrayed a group of these fine soldiers. Of the four principal figures in the foreground, that on the left is Varsity, a sergeant; next is Balogh, a lieutenant; next, Toth, quarter-master; and fourthly, Kazesi, corporal. They belonged to the 35th Regiment of Hussars, 300 of whom escaped, of whom 55 came to England.

Barlogh, the Lieutenant, is a remarkably handsome and intelligent man, twenty-eight years of age. His comrades say, had it not been for him, they should have been starved. While in France, an insult was offered to Barlogh, who forthwith threw down his sword, declaring that he would not command them any longer; they, however, entreated him to do so, and he came them to Folkestone. They exercise daily at half-past five A.M.: they are receiving but 9d. per day; still they are very grateful, and aver that they have never received so much hospitality as in England.

Among the figures in the background are those of a schoolmaster and farrier; and, above the group, is the Hungarian standard, which the party have preserved throughout their perils.

Mr. E. L. Betts is the newly-appointed chairman of the EASTERN COUNTIES COMPANY.

In the winding up of the TRING, READING, and BASINGSTOKE, it was stated that a deposit of £5 per share was originally made. A sum of 20s. has been returned; but there is £61 12 in hand still; also £6300 not yet realised; and debts of £2000 and £5000. There are about 6371 shares which will participate in the surplus.

The great line of the MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, and LINCOLNSHIRE, extending from Great Grimsby, on the eastern coast, to Manchester, and thence to Liverpool, on the western side, was opened all the way (110½ miles) on the 17th. The directors celebrated the event by a dinner at New Holland.

The second report of the YORK, NEWCASTLE, and BERWICK discloses irregularities without parallel. It states that Mr. Hudson being authorised by the Company to subscribe for 3000 shares of the Sunderland Dock, took 3345 additional shares, the calls of which he paid from the funds of the Company. The creation of 42,000 shares having been authorised, on account of the Newcastle and Berwick line, the number was secretly increased to 56,000; Mr. Hudson taking 5956½ shares, and realising profits on the same of £143,704. Of the York and Newcastle Extension shares Mr. Hudson took 890, improperly obtaining a premium of £4000; though no calls were paid on 200 of these shares, the parties to whom Mr Hudson sold them have received the usual dividends. Mr. Hudson also bought 10,000 tons of iron, at £5 10s. per ton, and within three weeks sold them to his own company at £12 per ton, realising about £38,500. He also received £31,000 for land, the cheques for which he has never handed over to the parties in whose favour they were drawn: he has refunded lately £20,000, with interest. Finally, he drew out £40,000, under the head of "Works," which he kept for his own use till about ten weeks ago.

A provision in the bill now before the House of Commons, facilitating the dissolution or abandonment of railways, stipulates that where the abandonment of any road or bridge made by a company is contemplated, the company shall invest a sum of money, the interest of which shall be sufficient to keep the said road or bridge in good repair.

In the winding up of the DIRECT EXETER, an amount of £32,305 was declared to have been originally raised, £9686 was disposed of by the finance committee, £13,948 by engineering expenses, and £9385 by parliamentary costs. The Master in Chancery said he should inquire, first, who paid the deposit, signed the deed, and sold their shares; second, who paid deposit without signing the deed; and third, those who only took letters of allotment. The allottees hope to obtain the refunding of some of the expended deposit.

THE MANCHESTER SOUTH JUNCTION and ALTRINCHAM was opened on the 20th.

SMITHFIELD MARKET.

THE Report from the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the Removal of Smithfield Market, has at length been printed; and the minutes of evidence present a most formidable array in advocacy of the proposed reform. The subject was discussed in the House of Commons on Tuesday night, and will be found noticed in our Parliamentary report; whilst, in another column, we have engraved the portrait of Mr. Mackinnon, the Chairman of the Committee. The subject is of such paramount importance and interest, that, in addition to the above record and Illustration, one of our ablest Artists has portrayed the evils of the system sought to be remedied, in a series of scenes sketched in Smithfield Market, yet presenting but a tithe of the cruelty and nuisance which have been for ages perpetrated in one of the most crowded localities of the metropolis.

The scene has been never better described than in the following passage from one of Mr. Dickens's most popular works:—

"It was market morning. The ground was covered nearly ankle-deep with filth and mire; and a thick steam perpetually rising from the reeking bodies of the cattle, and mingling with the fog, which seemed to rest upon the chimney-tops, hung heavily above. All the pens in the centre of the large area, and as many temporary ones as could be crowded into the vacant space, were filled with sheep; and tied up to posts by the gutter side were long lines of beast and oxen three or four deep. Countrymen, butchers, drovers, hawkers, boys, thieves, idlers, and vagabonds of every low grade, were mingled together in a dense mass: the whistling of drovers, the barking of dogs, the bellowing and plunging of beasts, the bleating of sheep, and grunting and squeaking of pigs; the cries of hawkers, the shouts, oaths, and quarrelling on all sides, the ringing of bells, and the roar of voices that issued from every public-house; the crowding, pushing, driving, beating, whooping, and yelling; the hideous and discordant din that resounded from every corner of the market; and the unwashed, unshaven, squalid, and dirty figures constantly running to and fro, and bursting in and out of the throng, rendered it a stunning and bewildering scene which quite confused the senses."

The Report recommends the removal of the Market; and in the minutes of evidence the recommendations and suggestions for the establishment of abattoirs in the neighbourhood of the cattle-market to be provided as a substitute for that at Smithfield, are examined at great length.

Our readers may remember that in a former Number of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, February 10th, No. 307, page 88, we gave a notice of a paper, a "Description of the Abattoirs of Paris," which was read at the Institution of Civil Engineers, by Mr. Grantham. The accompanying view and plan, by the same gentleman, represents one of them, "Du Roule," which, although one of the smallest of the five, gives a correct general representation of the others. It is one mile and three-quarters from the centre of the city, and on the north-west: it contains five acres and three-quarters within the walls; has thirty-two slaughterhouses, and the same number of stalls; the area of the slaughter-houses is 1936 square yards. In 1846, 6898 cattle and 36,841 sheep were slaughtered there. As there is no separate account of the income and expenditure kept of each abattoir, we will state that the original cost of the whole was £680,000. The income in 1846 was £48,811 18s., and expenditure £6161 12s., leaving a profit of £42,650 6s., or about 6¼ per cent upon the cost.

There is reason to conclude that the same principle may be carried out not only in London, but in every large town in the kingdom, as an important branch of a complete sanitary system.

203. (Mr. C. Lewis): What kind of cruelty is practised upon the animals?—I see cruelty practised; I have seen them take whatever is to hand, what I call a kind of pickaxe, and then I have seen them hit the poor beasts over the heads and lay their heads open an inch and a half.

204. What was the object of striking them in that way?—I do not know; it is downright cruelty.

205. What was the object of striking them in that manner?—Poor things; I cannot tell you what it is.

206. (Mr. Christopher): Is that in the operation of slaughtering them, or meant to keep them quiet in the market?—To keep them quiet in the market.

207. (Mr. C. Lewis): Just describe the sort of pickaxe they use in the market.—It is a kind of thing about a yard long, with either lead or iron at the end.

208. Now, do all the drovers carry a pickaxe of this sort?—No, not all of them.

209. (Chairman): What is the use of it; to keep the beasts quiet?—Yes.

210. (Mr. Stafford): Do you mean to say that there is a blade at the end of it like the end of an axe?—I cannot say what is at the end of it, but there must be something sharp.

211. Is it like an axe-stick?—Yes.

212. But you did not see anything sharp on it?—There is something like a kind of iron or lead.

213. But you called it a kind of axe?—It must have been something sharp, or it would not have cut their heads open.

214. But was there an edge to it?—I cannot say.

215. (Chairman): Does it cut open the head of the beast?—Yes.

216. Through the bone? Yes; I have seen the head laid open.

217. It breaks through the bone?—Yes.

218. (Mr. C. Lewis): Were you ever present at any country fair?—Yes.

219. Have you observed any difference between the manner in which the animals are treated in a country fair and at Smithfield?—A great deal, indeed; they are not treated with that cruelty in the country.

220. (Mr. Stafford): Are they treated with cruelty in going to the market?—Sometimes. If they happen to go a mile on one side they beat them very much; they carry sticks with them with spikes at the end of them.

221. Do they carry sticks as well as axes?—No; those who carry sticks with spikes do not carry those other things.

222. (Chairman): Are we to understand you that those who carry sticks are the drovers?—Yes.

223. And the others are the men who have to keep them quiet in the market?—The men in the market carry sticks with spikes at the end; and I have seen them prick the poor beasts so as to fetch blood.

224. (Mr. Stafford) Which are you speaking of; the men with the hatchets.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN.—July 17: Special Meeting: Euston Station: Mr. G. C. Glyn, M.P., in the chair.—The proprietors discussed the provisions of the Audit of Railway Accounts Bill, and generally expressed their dissatisfaction at any interference with the management of a joint-stock concern. The answers to the circulars issued by the board declaratory of the provisions of the measure, and asking the opinion of the shareholders thereon, showed that 56 individuals, representing £133,000 stock, assented to, while 3363, representing £7,056,000 stock, dissented from the bill. The directors were accordingly instructed to oppose the progress of the bill.

The shareholders who were opposed to the assumption of the BIRMINGHAM and OXFORD JUNCTION by the Great Western Company, presented Mr G. J. Mosley (who took the chief part in the opposition) with a caudle alcum and two tea-canisters, at a cost of between £700 and £800, at a festive dinner on the 18th, at Greenwich.

On the 13th the directors of the HUDDERSFIELD and MANCHESTER gave a trip to above 1000 of the shareholders of the company from Leeds, Huddersfield, and Dewsbury to Manchester. A lunch was specially provided, and the directors themselves afterwards dined in Huddersfield.

Eight railway bills, last week, received the Royal Assent, authorising capital to be raised by loan for shares, £745,666. They are: The York and North Midland (deviations, &c.), the York, Newcastle, and Berwick (Harmore and Allerton new branches), Ely and Huntingdon (extension of time), Newcastle and Carlisle (alterations and branch from Alston branch), East Lothian Central (dissolution), Stockton and Darlington (consolidation of acts), Shrewsbury and Chester (branches to the river Dee, agreement for joint station at Shrewsbury, and power to subscribe towards the Shrewsbury and Hereford), Lancashire and Yorkshire (extension of Aston and Clifford branches),

Gentlemen,—I have derived the greatest benefit from your Revalenta Food. It is only due to yourselves and to the public to state, that you are at liberty to make any use of this commendation that you may think proper. STUART DE DECIES

4, Park Walk, Little Chelsea, London, Oct. 2, 1848.
Twenty-seven years of nervous debility, which I had suffered great pain and no remedies, and for which I in vain consulted the advice of many, has been effectually removed by your excellent "Revalenta Arabica Food." It has cost me little more than a guinea.

ISAAC DU BARRY, Chemist, [illegible]

Alpha-street, Perth, May 2, 1848.
Some time has now elapsed since the lady resident in this city has been afflicted with a severe cough, which for 14 years I can assert of long standing, accompanied with much expectoration of a very disagreeable nature, and which, in spite of every medical skill and assistance I could procure for her, daily increased. Food, tea, and sleep from day to day diminished, and I am happy to say that it has produced a most beneficial change in her system, &c.

SMITHFIELD MARKET.—SHEEP.—THE DROVER'S GOAD.

there are two parties, one with spikes and another with a sort of pickaxe?—Yes they carry different implements.

SHEEP.

In the second Engraving we have an illustration of the close packing of sheep, and the difficulty of getting at the animals in Smithfield Market. Mr. J. B. Simmonds, Professor at the Veterinary College, and Lecturer upon the Diseases of Cattle, states, in his evidence before the committee, that he has frequently witnessed the above. In the year 1847 he was particularly interested in the question of small-pox in sheep, which often took him to Smithfield Market; and he experienced the greatest difficulty, from the close packing of the sheep, in making the necessary inspection to satisfy himself as to whether they were or were not diseased. Mr. Simmonds then instances his detection of small-pox in some sheep sent in by a particular vessel from Hamburgh; by which, also, he satisfied himself that the disease was an imported one, and that infected sheep thus imported were sent into Smithfield Market, and distributed thence throughout the country. We quote two important questions and replies:—

"2442. Is it your opinion that if there had been more space in Smithfield Market, so as to enable the purchasers to examine the sheep more closely, they would not have bought those sheep, and that the infection would not have been spread throughout the country?—I can understand that many infected animals would escape the observation of the purchaser, but certainly a larger place would much facilitate the discovery of disease in general, and thus tend to prevent the extension of contagious diseases.

2462. Have any facts come before you which lead you to believe that any diseased animals are sold in Smithfield Market?—I have very frequently visited the knackers' yards and the sausage-makers' places in the neighbourhood of Smithfield, in Cow-cross, for instance, and there I have seen the carcases of diseased animals, which had been purchased in Smithfield, hung up to be used for their purposes.

CRUELTY.

The cruelties practised towards calves have long been notorious.

With respect to the cases of general cruelty in the market, we find the following note in the evidence of Mr. John Russell Norris:

"On Monday, 24 April, some cattle were being tied up by the entrance into Cloth Fair; the drovers were beating them violently, and with the most horrid imprecations. One of the beasts ran in between two others; the moment he found himself in that position he seemed to think himself safe from the persecutions of the drovers, and sank down on the ground completely exhausted. One of the drovers—who was on the pavement side of the rails, and who was tying them up—wanted to put the slip-knot over the head of this beast, which he did; but, as the beast was lying down, he could not pull him sufficiently close to make him range with the others. The two drovers immediately began beating him, but it was of no avail. The drover who was at his head cried out, 'Twist his tail, Jack,' which he did till the beast could not endure the agony; he started up on his hind legs, but was evidently so worn out that he attempted to remain with his fore legs folded under him, whilst his hind quarters were in a standing position. The drover in front then poked him in the face with his goad, till he got up. He was then driven up close, and tied so near to the rail that it was impossible for him to lie down. This was a very full market, and I have no doubt that they prevented him from lying down, because he would have occupied more space than he required to stand on."

"On Monday, April 23, there was a full market; and the papers next day stated that the number of beasts was 4300. At the entrance into Bartholomew-close, there were so many tied up in a small space that they could not stand in a row, but one had his head over or under the next, as was most convenient. At the end of the rails the beasts had turned completely round the post, and were standing on the pavement. There was just room to pass between one of the beasts and the wall; this was a decided kicker, and kicked at every one who went by. On Monday, April 30, I saw a ring-drove formed; there were about 20 beasts, and three drovers were employed at it; the beating and goading was most unmerciful, and I calculated that each beast received at least ten heavy serious blows, such as would damage the meat. Walking along the rails I saw a bullock with little gashes and holes, such as would be made with a goad, in the tender part of the nostrils, and the blood on the ground showed how violently they had suffered in this way."

The Minutes abound with evidence of this class; and the Report is, altogether, strongly confirmatory of the intolerable nuisance of holding a cattle-market for the supply of a metropolitan population of two millions in the very heart of the city they inhabit. "It needs," says an able contemporary, "no examination of witnesses, no parliamentary committee, no huge blue books, no discussions of municipal or parliamentary bodies, to convince any reasonable man of so very obvious a truth. Goad droves of cattle through the crowded streets of a large town, and the results must be terror, confusion, and accident to the passers by, and suffering to the animals themselves; crowd the wretched creatures on a ridiculously insufficient space when they have been driven into the market, and keep them standing there in torture for a long period of time, and the meat must needs be deteriorated in quality, and become less fitted to serve for wholesome nutriment; pollute one locality in the centre of a vast city with animal excrement and effluvia; set the kennels a-running with gore, garbage, and filth; establish a system of knackers' yards, tainted sausage-makers, slaughter-houses, tripe-dressers, cats'-meat-boilers, catgut-spinners, bone-houses, and other noxious trades in the very heart of London, and you necessarily give encouragement to typhus fever, diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera. Our quarrel is not only with Smithfield Market, but with Smithfield Market and all its attendant nuisances. We now invite all who, living at a distance from the actual pollution and annoyance, may have entertained a doubt as to the justice and reason of our constant remonstrances against their longer continuance, to peruse for themselves the report of the Parliamentary committee which has just appeared."

No. 382.—Vol. XV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1849. [Sixpence.

A DAY IN AN IRISH TOWN.

Instead of the political article with which our paper usually commences, we this week present the following description of a day in the town of Killarney, from the pen of our Correspondent at the Lakes. The town is one that has few attractions for the traveller, and the guide-books give little or no account of it; but it will be seen that an observant tourist may see something of the social condition of the Irish people by walking through it with his eyes open.

Victoria Hotel, Lakes of Killarney,
July 21st, 1849.

Before entering upon any further description of the manifold beauties of the Lakes and Mountains of Killarney, I shall devote a few words to the town, and to the condition of the people. On entering Killarney, two very large and handsome buildings arise conspicuously before the sight of the traveller—as if to prove, in very different modes, the poverty of the country. The first is the Killarney Union Workhouse, covering, with its gardens and out-buildings, an area of eight acres; the second is an unfinished Roman Catholic Cathedral, of imposing architecture, built from the design of Mr. Welby Pugin. The Union House, though so large, is insufficient for the accommodation of the numerous paupers that clamour for admission. It contains, at present, upwards of thirteen hundred individuals; and five of the largest and best houses in the town of Killarney have been hired by the guardians for the accommodation of the children and of the sick paupers, whom it is not possible to receive in the parent establishment. The Cathedral has already cost the sum, I was informed, of £12,000—the greater part of which was contributed before the fatal years of the potato blight. The design, externally, seems to be completed, with the exception of the spire. For this purpose and the internal fittings, an additional sum of £2000 or £3000 is needed—a sum which, in the present circumstances of the country, is not likely to be obtained. In the meantime the unfinished edifice stands a melancholy monument of pride and poverty. Its lofty walls are bare and blank; its oriel windows are blocked up with planks of wood; and a swamp, a foot deep in water, lies between it and the public road.

Killarney is situated about a mile and a half from the Lower Lake—no glimpse of the beauties of which is obtainable from it. The town consists of two principal streets and several alleys branching off from them. It contains several very good shops, and has a clean and tidy appearance. The streets are wide and the houses well built; but the signs of decay are visible upon the place. The streets absolutely swarm with ragged and miserable-looking people. At the wayside were squatted scores of women of all ages—some knitting or mending rags, and many gazing idly and vacantly about them—their chins upon their laps,

And cuddling with close arms their firm-set knees.

The men in equal numbers, but far more ragged and melancholy in appearance, leaned at door-posts in groups, engaged in conversation, or in smoking the national "dudheen." Their garb was almost the same in every instance. The long-tailed coat of antique fashion, patched and repatched again and again; the indescribable hat, with its slouching and battered rim; the patched corduroy knee-breeches of a yellowish colour, loosened at the sides; the black stockings ungartered and unfastened, and allowing half of the swarthy and dirty leg to be visible; and the clouted heavy shoe, or brogue. The principal variety in the costume was that, in many instances, the owner was too poor to sport brogue or stocking; and that here and there a decent shopkeeper might be seen in the ordinary dress of an English tradesman.

Though there were a considerable number of beggars about, they were neither so multitudinous, so ragged, nor so importunate as those of Mill-street. A few pigs prowled about the streets apparently on the best of terms with the passengers. Although it was not market-day, there was a kind of market for the sale of peat and other articles, and it seemed as if there were more bustle than usual opposite the ancient market-house, now the Temperance-hall. A fiddler, hoping to gain some advantage by the crowd, was fiddling with "might and main" in the midst of a group of fifty or sixty individuals, who, I should think, from the squalor of their appearance, did not possess a single sixpence among them. They seemed, nevertheless, to take great pleasure in the music, and gave the fiddler the reward of their blessings and their satisfaction, if not of their halfpence.

Several large and substantial houses were closed and uninhabited; and two considerable houses were in ruins—I was informed that they had fallen down from sheer decrepitude and old age, and that the proprietors had neither inducement nor means to rebuild them. At the very entrance of the town, and within a stone's throw of the Union Workhouse, a whole street of cabins or huts has been lately demolished. The wretched occupants were unable to pay rent or rates, and refused to go out unless evicted by this summary process. They now swarm in the lanes and alleys of the town, along with hundreds of the peasantry who have been evicted from their holdings in the neighbourhood, for the same reason and in the same fashion. On one side of the road the demolition has been complete, and not a vestige remains of the cabins of the people. On the other side, the demolition has been but partial, and the roofless walls remain to show the number and the extent of the wretched, but doubtless well-beloved homes, that are homes no more for these poverty-stricken Irishmen. I do not state the fact as a commentary upon the foregoing statement, but I make it in its due place. It is that the road to a new and splendid pauper lunatic asylum, now in course of erection, leads directly past these dismantled dwellings. This edifice, when completed, will be of the imposing size and appearance of the two large public buildings that I have already mentioned, and to many minds will possibly afford a third proof of the poverty and misery of this long-suffering and, I verily believe, well-disposed and harmless people.

The three principal proprietors in Killarney and its neighbourhood are the Earl of Kenmare, H. A. Herbert, Esq., M.P., and Lady Headley, all of whom are well spoken of. The Earl of Kenmare has the largest estates, and is considered a good landlord and a humane man. Mr. Herbert is equally a favourite with the people.

There is but little business in Killarney except during the summer season, when tourists flock from all parts of Ireland to visit its splendid scenery. The time, I hope, is coming when they will flock from England also. There is a manufacture of fancy articles made of the superabundant and beautiful arbutus wood of the neighbourhood. There is also a manufacture of fancy articles of the hoofs and horns of the red deer of Carrantual, and of the oak roots that are dug out of the peat bogs. Loo-tables, walking-sticks, work-boxes, card-cases, chess-boards, and other similar articles, with brooches, shawl-pins, and all the gimcrackery of the toilet or the work-table, are the chief objects produced; and the pretty and well-behaved girls of Killarney drive a considerable trade in the summer by offering them for sale at the doors of the Victoria Hotel, and in various parts of the town. In addition to these and the ordinary trades of a town, I could hear of no one who gave employment to the people except one gentleman, who has a large flour-mill and pays regular wages to about sixty people.

The shopkeepers, and all the inhabitants of Killarney who manage to keep their heads above the deep waters of pauperism, complain loudly of the heavy burden of the poor-rates. One intelligent man with whom I conversed, and who pays a sum that is a sore drag upon his energies, confessed, nevertheless, his belief that the poor-law would ultimately prove the salvation of Ireland. His regret was that it had not been introduced half a century ago, when it might have prevented that awful growth of destitution which is now dragging the proprietorial classes into the same gulf as that which is swallowing up the peasantry.

I had much curiosity to visit the Union Poor-house; but, as a preliminary, I resolved to visit the cabin of a poor man, not yet reduced to the extremity of entering the Union. I had not far to go to find a mud cabin. The scene that presented itself was exactly what I expected. The Irish peasant lives in a wigwam, and shares it with a pig. A pestilential dung-heap festers at his door. The smoke of his peat fire escapes by the low door, or by the narrow unglazed aperture that serves for a window. His children swarm half naked about him. The atmosphere he breathes is thick with the fumes and foul exhalations; and his eyes while in doors are accustomed to a kind of semi-darkness, so much so that when emerging from one of these hovels into the open air and the full sunshine, the peasant is obliged to screen his eyes with his hands until they become accustomed to the unusual glare that surrounds but is not allowed to penetrate his wigwam. Yet, so dear a thing is home, that even to such a human stye as this the peasant is devotedly attached; and so obstinate a thing is habit, that filth, darkness, and discomfort become a part of his nature. These are generally the cabins from which the inmates are evicted. Their miserable inhabitants, if they do not die by the road-side—a not infrequent case—swarm into the already over-crowded towns and villages, or take refuge in the Union.

The workhouse of the Killarney Union is one of the finest palaces of pauperism I ever saw. As far as I could learn, it is the largest building in the county of Kerry. It is a model of cleanliness and good order, and, compared with the previous abodes of its 1300 inhabitants, it must be pronounced a Paradise. The rooms are large, cheerful, light, and well-ventilated. The floors of the dormitories are scoured as white as table-cloths; and the dainties of epicures might eat his dinner off them, and feel no qualms of stomach. The excellent bread supplied to the paupers is a mixture of Indian corn; and the vegetable soup, though innocent of meat or grease of any kind, is savoury and nutritious. I could not avoid feeling, however, that, although the internal arrangements were in every respect admirable, and although the inmates were far more comfortable than they could have been in their own mud-cabins, it was not a wise or humane policy to keep up an establishment so enormous without endeavouring to make it productive. Why should 1300 people, of whom a thousand at least are strong and capable of work, not maintain themselves, without expense to the public? Why, in fine, should they not raise a surplus? The very manure of such an establishment might fertilise a couple of hundred acres of waste land—a commodity by no means scarce in the county of Kerry. There are only two acres of land or less attached to the Killarney Union. They have been made into a very prolific kitchen-garden. I never saw a finer crop of turnips anywhere than on a portion of this ground to which the liquid manure of the establishment had been applied. The landlords of Ireland complain bitterly of the burden of the Poor-law. There can be no doubt that it is a burden, and a very heavy one; and that many of them are unable to pay it; but if the Legislature could devise any means whereby the poor-rates might be paid in waste acres of moor or bog land, at present producing nothing either to individuals or to the country, the burden might gradually be lessened, and these swarms of unproductive paupers might be transformed into armies of industry, raising from the willing soil more than sufficient for their own subsistence. Many landlords, unable to obtain payment of their rents, cannot raise money to pay their own poor-rates; but surely it would be a smaller burden upon them, if, in default of money, they might be allowed to pay in bog, that has produced nothing since the Flood, except valueless heather?

We call these places workhouses, but we do not take the proper means to make them so in reality; and we sneer or shrug our shoulders at the phrase "Organisation of Labour," which French Communists and theorists have brought into disrepute, although organisation of labour is the one thing needed. "The land and the people," "the people and the land," these must be brought together for mutual improvement, or there will be no end to the misery of Ireland or to the shame of our Legislature. All our statesmen confess and deplore individually the enormous evils that exist—but, in their corporate capacity as a Legislature, they declare their incompetency to prevent or remedy them. I have not yet visited what are called the "distressed districts," for Kerry is considered to be a favoured county, far above the average; but "bad indeed is the best," and fearful must be the worst if there be any places in Ireland much more distressed than Kerry.

CHARING-CROSS HOSPITAL.—The annual meeting of the subscribers and friends of this charity was held on Tuesday, at the hospital, the Rev. D. Worthington in the chair. Mr. John Robertson, the honorary secretary, read the report for the last year, of which the following is an abstract:—"The committee, in presenting their twenty-eighth annual report, feel great satisfaction in having it in their power to state that the prosperity of the hospital continues steadily to advance, and that its great public utility has become generally admitted. The beneficial influence of the charity has been greatly increased during the past year, in the course of which 15,500 indigent sick persons were examined on the books for relief, at a cost of £2606 11s. 7½d. of these, 1153 were in-patients, and 14,347 were out patients (many of whom were visited at their own homes), and the greater part were restored to the blessings of health and to their occupations for the support of their families. These, with the cases reported in former annual statements, make a total of 149 288 sick and needy individuals who have partaken of the advantages of the institution, from its commencement in 1818, to the 31st December, 1848. It may be interesting to the friends of humanity to learn, that, exclusive of 1578 patients received by recommendatory letters from governors and subscribers, during the last year, as many as 13,903 were freely admitted without any recommendation whatever. The medical school of the hospital is attended by students from various parts of England and from the colonies, who come for professional instruction; the proportion of fees paid by them to the service of the hospital last year amounted to £156 10s. 7d. The total receipts of the General Support Fund of the Hospital, up to Dec. 31, 1848, from donations, subscriptions, interest on stock, &c., amounted to £3104 11s. 6½d. The receipts of the Building Fund to the same date were £1091 15s. 9½d. The balance for general purposes remaining in hand is £597 13s. 4½d. The committee are engaged in a treaty with the Commissioners of the Woods and Forests for the purchase of the fee simple of the site of the hospital, by which the institution will be relieved from the payment of the heavy annual rent to which they are at present subjected."

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The National Assembly was chiefly engaged during the week in discussing the proposed new law on the press, which is of a rather stringent character. By its provisions, offences against the person of the President are put on a par with offences against the Assembly, and punishable alike; newspaper articles addressed to the army, with a view to exciting discontent, are made a middle-means; publication of false reports or news, the source never known, must have licenses; members of the Legislature are prohibited from becoming gerants (responsible managers) of newspapers; public subscriptions for payment of fines are interdicted; power of summary arrest of writers in certain cases is given; and also power of suspending journals in case of repetition of the same offence condemned by law

The forms of proceeding against journals are also reduced by it to the shortest possible method.

The President of the Republic visited the Castle of Ham, the scene of his former captivity, on Sunday, accompanied by the Ministers of War, Public Works, his orderly officers, and several representatives. He was received with great enthusiasm. The Kabyle Chief Bou Maza was set at liberty, and informed by the President that he might reside in Paris. At the banquet which was given to the President on the occasion, he made a speech, in which he spoke of his having become the legitimate head of this great nation, and declared that he could not glorify himself on a captivity which had for its cause an attack against a regular Government. He added that when he saw the evils brought upon the country by revolution, he could hardly comprehend how he could have been so audacious as to take upon himself the responsibility of a change of Government.

The President of the Republic is about to take up his residence for some time at the Castle of Vincennes, for the purpose of witnessing the practice and experiments to be made by the artillery in the Polygon. The apartments of the Duke of Montpensier have been arranged for the reception of the Prince.

The Prince of Canino left Havre on last Saturday morning, for Southampton. The gendarme in charge of him did not quit him till the steamer was under way. The Prince expressed surprise and deep displeasure at the manner in which he had been treated.

M. Guizot arrived at Havre last week, accompanied by his son and his two daughters, and proceeded to his estate of Val-Richer.

SPAIN.

Madrid letters of the 19th state that the Tariff Reform Bill is published in the Gazette of that day, having received the Royal Assent at La Granja on the 17th.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT.—The present aspect of affairs threatens a renewal of hostilities with Austria. From Turin we learn that on the 19th inst. M. de Bruck, the Austrian Envoy, charged with the negotiations, sent to the Sardinian Government an ultimatum, signed by M. de Schwartzenberg, President of the Cabinet at Vienna, announcing that if, within the space of four days, the last conditions of the treaty of peace with Vienna were not accepted, the negotiations would be considered as broken off, and the Austrian Envoy would be recalled.

VENICE.—Venice still holds out. The Austrian bombardment, according to accounts dated the 20th inst., was suspended for some days, and the siege has been again turned into a blockade. The lagoon fever was so fatal to the troops, that General Radetzky saw no other alternative.

On the 4th inst., the anniversary of the revolution, the banner of Saint Marc with the Lion was exhibited, together with the portraits of Bem, Kossuth, Manin, Garibaldi, and Mazzini. This exhibition produced an immense effect. Nothing, it is said, can exceed the enthusiasm of the people when the Hymn of Victory is chaunted in full chorus at the National Theatre; and it is mentioned, in proof of the zeal which animates the population, that when a married man is prevented from illness from mounting guard, his wife takes his place.

SWITZERLAND

The Federal Council of Switzerland have resolved to banish the chiefs of the Badish and Bavarian insurrection from the federal territories.

PRUSSIA.

Accounts from Berlin, of the 21st instant, state that the returns of the elections had been made up, and that the majority were decidedly Conservative.

The Government had under consideration a plan for the final re-organization of the Duchy of Posen, by which the German part of that province will be incorporated with the provinces of Prussia, Brandenburg, and Silesia.

GERMAN STATES

The last stronghold of the Baden and Bavarian insurgents (the fortress of Rastadt) surrendered on the 23rd inst. to the Prince of Prussia, who entered the town on the same day at the head of his troops.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The National Assembly, on the 19th instant, adopted the following resolution, in accordance with an understanding with the Government:—

The National Assembly decrees as follows:—

1. The preliminaries of peace and the armistice concluded at Berlin, on the 10th instant, between the Prussian Government and Denmark, upon the basis indicated, are not binding upon the Duchies.

2. It is impossible that these treaties can obtain the consent of Germany, while she possesses the least feeling of honour or respect for the laws.

3. The Assembly considers it as an imperious duty to resist by every means the imposition of these treaties, which would compromise in the highest degree the rights of the country.

The present resolutions shall be communicated to the Government.

In the same sitting the Assembly resolved to present their most ardent thanks to the Government of Brunswick for the energy with which it has defended the interests of the Duchies.

The Assembly has addressed a circular note to all the German Governments, in which the three following promises are given as the acknowledged bases of the public law of the Duchies of Schleswig-Holstein:—

1. That the Duchies are independent States.
2. That the male line alone of the House of Oldenburg is entitled to hereditary succession to the Duchies; and
3. That the Duchies are closely united to each other as federal States.

UNITED STATES.

By the mail steam-ship Hibernia we have intelligence this week from New York to the 11th instant.

A most crowded demonstration had taken place on the evening previous to the anniversary of American independence (the 4th of July) in the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, to welcome the esteemed temperance advocate.

Notwithstanding the determination come to by the Common Council of New York to provide everything suitable for Father Mathew whilst in their city, and to look upon him as their guest, several of the leading citizens have sent personal invitations to him. The suite of rooms, attendance, &c., given to the new gentleman are such as become the authorities of the first city in the New World; and the class of invitations he has received from other places go to show that he will be received, not merely as the guest of a city, but as the invited of a nation. It is not expected he will leave America without visiting several of the chief cities, which will necessarily prolong his stay in the States, after which he will visit the British provinces.

Of the invitations sent to Father Mathew we notice some from Boston, New Orleans, Washington, and others from Canada. The enthusiasm of the reverend gentleman's reception appears to be almost extravagant, particularly amongst his countrymen.

The advices from all parts regarding cholera state that it is on the increase. The disease was making terrible havoc amongst the Delaware and Shawnee Indians, and in almost every village along the banks of the Upper Mississippi. People were flying from all directions. The citizens of New York and the other leading towns were fast leaving for the spas, cataracts, and mountain retreats. In Cincinnati the deaths in the week ending 7th July had reached 1.00, of whom 365 were from cholera. In St. Louis it is still worse, the deaths being about 700 in the week, which is about one sixth per cent of the population. In New York the cases are about 150 daily, of which on the average a third prove fatal.

Several additional messages had been read, to express sympathy with the German, Hungarian, and Italian "patriots." And among the resolutions in the expression of sentiments in favour of freedom were the Irish population.

Several Poles and Germans had left the United States for Hungary, Baden, and other parts of Europe, to take part in the ensuing struggles.

The floods in the Mississippi were not so frequent nor so large as they have been, and hopes are entertained that the stoppage of the revenue at St. Louis may be permanent.

The influx of emigrants at Boston and the other eastern ports, from Ireland and the Continent of Europe, was said to be much larger than usual

Richard O'Gorman, one of the Irish refugees, had arrived in New York from Havre.

With respect to the projected expedition to aid the navigators of the Northern Seas (Sir John Franklin and his party), uncontradicted reports were afloat that with a view to forbid the United States Government, much as it had such an attempt at heart, from obeying the general wish. After careful examination into the means at the disposal of the naval service, it had been determined that it was impossible to equip within the necessary time any such expedition as could, with the slightest prudence, be advanced in the Northern Seas. The private adventure is said to be organising, and steam-ships are preparing in some parts of the United States from which to be the sole efforts of assistance rendered by the United States

There is nothing new from California. The report of great disorder at San Francisco, with the flight of General Smith, is universally regarded as a mere fabrication.

CANADA

As far as has yet been ascertained, the cholera has not made much way in the British colonial possessions The death of Wilson, the Scottish vocalist, at Montreal, of an attack which lasted only three hours, is mentioned. In politics, matters look gloomy. The Tories now boldly advocate separation from Britain, and annexation to the United States. The Montreal Herald, the chief organ of that interest, has taken that ground in most decided terms in an article in that paper of the 5th inst., entitled "How annexation would conciliate the views of Canadian Free-traders with those of Canadian Protectionists."

In Canada West, the Irish Orangemen were organising as if for a conflict to be decided by force of arms. They were to meet in large numbers on the 12th instant, to celebrate the anniversary of the battle of Augrim The place of meeting was to be at Port Hope or at Cobourg and the men were to be there under arms. The Government had on that quarter no means of resisting them. The Lieutenant-Governor had sent to bring were loose distributed to them in 1837, to put down the rebellion then existing, and may now serve to carry on another revolt, which will be less easily subdued.

THE RIVER PLATE.

We have advices from Buenos Ayres to May 3. There was at that time a better probability of the settlement of the difficulty between France and England than has existed at any time since its commencement. The decree of Rosas prohibiting every kind of communication with the British and French ships of war has been suspended, and the long-delayed exequatur of the British Consul has been made out.

WEST INDIES.

The usual monthly mails have arrived this week, by the steam ship Thames from Jamaica, under date June 23, we learn that the House of Assembly was to meet on the 26th ult. A very stormy session was anticipated, particularly relative to the Retrenchment Bill, which many think will not in all probability be carried, and on which there is no doubt the House will be dissolved The island was perfectly quiet and healthy. The sugar crops looked exceedingly fine, particularly on the north side of the island. In the interior parts as they had at parts somewhat suffered from long drought, but lately very salutary rains had fallen. The news from England announcing the slight rise in sugar, had operated in favour of advanced rates, and given an impetus to business

With respect to coffee, the planters had declined even parting the berry, urging that present market prices are totally unremunerative.

At Guadaloupe a serious disturbance had taken place, about the 26th ult., between the natives and authorities, relative to some municipal changes. It was, however, quickly suppressed, but not without the loss of some dozen lives.

At St. Vincent, Martinique, and Guadaloupe there was a vast deal of sickness prevalent.

The Tobago papers contain nothing of interest. At Grenada the Assembly had imposed a tax of ten per cent. on all incomes paid out of the Treasury. The quarantine was reduced from twenty to ten days.

At Trinidad a retiring pension of £833 6s. 8d. had been voted to Judge Scott-land, but Mr. Scott had given notice of a bill to deprive him of the sole future, all officers of such pensions. At Demerara, the New Franchise Bill, framed under the model of the English Reform Bill, had, after a strong opposition, been carried by the casting vote of Governor Barkly. The reduction of the Civil List continued to be a subject of much discussion. The weather had been exceedingly wet, occasioning much damage to the crops. The exports of produce exhibit a large falling off when compared with last year.

From Barbadoes there is no news of interest, but the retrenchment agitation is as great as ever. Fears are entertained that the African small-pox, now ravaging the islands of St. Vincent and Martinique, will attack Barbadoes.

THE BERMUDAS.

Advices from the Bermuda Islands mention a sad affair which had occurred at Ireland Island, on board the Medway convict-ship.

The four or five hundred convicts on board the Medway were assembled on the morning of the 3rd of July on the upper deck (the fore part of the ship), to witness the punishment of one of their number, James Cronin, for mutinous conduct. The overseer, F. B. Black, Esq., and his officers, with the convict guards, had been armed, and their pouches being loaded with ball cartridge (the usual practice), were drawn up on the quarter-deck—they numbered twenty in all. The medical officer was also present. The quarter-deck is divided from the fore deck by a railing about five feet high.

The man to be flogged had a brother on board the ship, older than himself, who had permission from the overseer to absent himself from witnessing the punishment, but this kindly offer on the part of Mr. Black was refused, and he appeared with the other prisoners.

When the proper officers were in the act of securing the man to the gratings or ladder, the brother rushed forward, and, leaping on the barrier and waving his hat, called to him by name. He (the elder Cronin) then addressed some words to the convicts, which was answered by a wild cheer, and a rush of some 250 to the barrier, upon which they clustered like bees, preparatory to a descent upon the quarter-deck. The men were desperately excited. The overseer waved his hand, and called to the men to "fall back," which order was quite disregarded. Mr. Black (perceiving what must be the object of the prisoners, viz. the rescue of Cronin, and the probable butchery of himself and his small party) gave order to the guards to fire, which was immediately followed by a volley from the front rank. This did not have any immediate effect, the desperate men entertaining the idea that only blank cartridges were fired. The rear rank of the guards, which had been kept in reserve, then moved to the front, and, under order from Mr. Black, fired. Two of the mutinous convicts fell dead, and twelve were wounded; this instantly quelled the mutiny, the men hurriedly retreating to hiding-places about the forward part of the ship.

The punishment was then administered to the younger Cronin.

An inquest was subsequently held on the bodies of the two men killed, before Mr Chas. C. Keane, coroner, when, after a lengthy investigation, the jury unanimously returned a verdict of "Justifiable Homicide." The names of the men killed were James Cronin and John Tobin.

Another of the wounded men died on the afternoon of the day the occurrence happened.

The leader, Cronin, was wounded in two places. Two others are maimed for life—one having had his leg amputated, and the other having received a ball in the spine

The affair caused much sensation in Bermuda.

INDIA.

Advices anticipatory of the ordinary mail from India have been received during the week. The intelligence thus conveyed is of little interest or importance. Sir Charles Napier arrived in Calcutta on the 6th of May, and immediately assumed charge of his high office. He was to meet Lord Gough in camp, he announced his having taken command "in consequence of Lord Gough's period of service having ended;" and it is said that he wrote to Lord Gough, informing him that having orders to take the command in chief, he made no change in India, he had accordingly done so. He left Calcutta on the 22nd for Simlah and Lahore.

The final determination of the Court of Directors to foster the introduction of railroads in India, and the prospects held out by their resolution, have created a universal feeling of satisfaction throughout the country.

In the Punjaub all is at present quiet.

There is no positive information as to the movements of the Ranee Chunda. She is still in the Nepaul territory. It is said that jewels of the aggregate value of ten lacs of rupees (£100,000) belonging to her have been confiscated by Government.

The draft of a new act (modelled on the County Courts Act) for the Recovery of Small Debts, in Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay, has recently appeared in the Gazette in each of those presidencies. It provides for the establishment of a court, presided over by one, two, or three persons (one of whom must be a barrister, and which is to have jurisdiction over all suits where the debt or damage done does not exceed 500 rupees. The power of declaring it applicable is made to rest with the Government of the Presidency.

The Commander-in-Chief (Lord Gough) entertained the Earl and Countess of Dalhousie at a grand ball on the 1st of May at Simlah, on which occasion the two 24th guns taken up there by the Governor-General were made over to his Lordship with the usual ceremonies, &c. They were placed under a handsome Sikh tent, taken at Goojerat, and were conveyed next day by Lieutenant Bruce, and some 14 horse-artillerymen of Captain Hardy's troop, in state to the residence of the Governor-General.

CHINA

The latest date from China is down to the 26th of May. The Chinese excitement had passed away, and trade was again returning to its accustomed channels.

A report prevailed that Sen had determined to put down the opium trade.

Her Majesty's steam sloop Inflexible had been employed against the pirates, and had captured two junks after a brush with them.

MR. MACKINNON, M.P.—We are requested to mention, in reference to what appeared in the Times last week, relative to the sum to which this hon. member is entitled in right of his wife, that the late Rear-Admiral (Sir Thomas) Palmer left the whole of his estates to his sister, Mrs. Budworth Palmer, for life only; and entailed them upon Sir W. H. Palmer, Bart., of Castle Lakin, county Mayo, and his male descendants, the present relative, but a distant branch of the ancient house of Palmer but the present Bart., Sir Roger, being the third in the entail, he became tenant in tail, and is now in full possession of all the estates of the late Roger Palmer, Esq. The whole of the property which descended on the life of Mrs. Budworth Palmer's son (not brother), and who is an idiot, is only the personal property of the late Mrs. B. Palmer, and which is left in trust for the benefit of her son during his life, and at his decease to be divided between her grandchildren, the sons and daughters of W. A. Mackinnon, Esq., M.P.; but the hon. member has no interest whatever in the Palmer estates

FATAL SHIPWRECK.—TWENTY-SEVEN LIVES LOST.—By the arrival of the Harra Watson from the Isle of Pines, in the South Seas, intelligence is brought communicating the total loss of the ship Scotmander on a reef of rocks off New Caledonia, with the melancholy sacrifice of all hands, except three. The Scotmander, a vessel of 300 tons burthen, was engaged in the South Sea service, and at the time of the unexpected calamity was bearing for the Isle of Pines station for water and provisions, being then short from their lengthened cruise and boating. It occurred on the night of the 18th of February. In the early part of the day a heavy gale came on from the eastward, the ship lying in lat. 23 38 south, long. 167 40 east; the Isle of Pines bearing N.N.E., distant about fifty-seven miles. At ten o'clock at night, the south reef of New Caledonia was observed on the port quarter and within ten minutes afterwards she struck on it with tremendous force. Every effort before had been taken to keep her off, but the ship almost instantly became a total wreck, and filled all quarters. All hands were upon deck at the time. The moment or so after she struck, a terrific sea, which rose in height to the maintop, broke upon her, instantly sweeping off the decks, overboard, all the crew, except the mate, who was clinging to the rigging and forward. Of the twenty-eight washed overboard, only one succeeded in regaining the vessel, who was saved; the remainder, every soul of them, perished at one fell swoop. The master, Mr. Mackay, had been confined to his cabin for some days from painful illness, and, although the cabin was nearly full of water, he could not, on account of extreme weakness, reach the deck. A heavy sea struck the vessel soon after she struck all chances over, leaving the vessel on her beam ends, where she would have soon been dashed to pieces, but for the unfortunate master, who, making himself heard to the surviving seamen, they with the utmost expedition cut away the masts and rigging. This so far lightened the ship, that she immediately righted, and the next sea carried her high and dry on the reef. The next day, the gale having moderated, as much fresh water and provisions as could be got out of the wreck was stowed away in one of the whale-boats, with which the master and the three surviving men put to sea, and made for the Isle of Pines station, but it was a tedious passage, on account of the continued gales. When they quitted the reef, the vessel was almost broken in two—in fact, a complete site wreck. The names of the survivors are Thomas Underwood, Joseph Gabrie., and a South Sea Islander. The ship was insured.

INDEPENDENCE OF HUNGARY.

A public meeting was held on Monday at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, for the purpose of expressing sympathy with "the noble, maligned, and betrayed people of Hungary."

The great room was so crowded that numbers were unable to get admission, and throughout the proceedings were characterised by the greatest enthusiasm.

The chair was taken, at one o'clock, by Alderman Salomons.

Amongst the noblemen and gentlemen on the platform were—Richard Cobden, Esq., M.P., Walter G. B. Gunton, Esq., Sir Joshua Walmsley, M.P., Lord Nugent, M.P., Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., R. Bernal Osborne, Esq., M.P., F. Mowatt, Esq., M.P., Sir E. De Lacy Evans, M.P., G. W. Alexander, Esq., of the City, R. Monckton Milnes, Esq., M.P., &c.

The Chairman opened the proceedings by explaining that the present meeting was not called for the purpose of upsetting thrones, of maintaining inflammable and violent political doctrines, and of exciting people against their rulers; but, on the contrary, to speak for an independent nation, that had been attempted to be put down by muscle and illegality on the part of another nation connected with it, and on the part of a foreign invader. (Loud cheers.) He would not have taken the responsibility of appearing as chairman that day, were the question merely a matter between the subjects of a Government and its legitimate rulers even under oppression. He would have had his own opinion on the subject, and have taken part in the meeting, but he would not have taken the chair. He would not have had the honour which he had that day, for he deemed it a high honour to take the lead in favour of Hungarian Independence. But it became the freemen in a free state to sympathise with freemen (cheers), and, by a peaceful demonstration such as that, to give a spur to public opinion. (Cheers.)

Mr. G. W. Alexander (of the Society of Friends) proposed the first resolution, viz.—"That this meeting, without compromising individual opinions on the subject of war, regard with sincere admiration, respect, and sympathy, the noble determination of the Hungarian nation to maintain intact their just rights, and the constitutional independence they have inherited from their fathers, against the tyrannical encroachments of Austrian despotism."

Mr. Cobden, M.P., in seconding the resolution, said:—"Gentlemen, I appear here to-day anxious to add my mite of sympathy to that which you are prepared to express for the oppressed Hungarians; and I think it right that I should explain exactly what my sympathy is, and what my objects are in coming here. (Hear, hear.) Gentlemen, if I have one principle more than another firmly fixed in my mind, and one which I think it is not only necessary for the interest of this country, but for all countries, to recognise, it is this, that separate and independent countries should be allowed to regulate their own affairs in the way which to them may seem best, without the interference of any foreign power whatever. (Loud cheers.) I make no exception to this rule. I include in it the right of the Romans. (Cheers.) I include within the benefits of this principle the poorest, the humblest, and most degraded community; for it is no answer to my principle to tell me that certain countries are not in a state to govern themselves properly. I say, the fact that a country is not able to govern itself properly is no reason why you should go and attempt to govern it better, according to your own notions. (Cheers.) I come now to the case before us. The question is that of Hungarian independence. (Cheers.) If this had been a question simply between Hungary and Austria, I should not have appeared here to-day, nor would it have been necessary, gentlemen, for any of us to appear here to-day. (Cheers.) So long as the Hungarians were left to settle their affairs with the Government of Vienna, they were perfectly competent to do it without the interference of the citizens of London (Cheers.) Twice, I believe, they have driven the Austrian armies from their territories, and, to all intents and purposes, they stand in the position of an independent nation. (Loud cheers.) So far, then, have they, by their own power, been able to establish their own independence against Austria But, gentlemen, my object in coming here to-day is to protest against an armed intervention, as unjust, as iniquitous, and as infamous as any that was ever perpetrated by any nation. (Cheers.) I come here to protest against the Russian hordes pouring upon the plains of Hungary, and I do so upon the principle I laid down at the beginning. I would protest against an English standing army being sent to Hungary to fight the battle on the other side I would protest against the English Government sending Englishmen to shed their blood upon the banks of the Theiss and Danube. I come here to protest against foreigners being there at all. (Cheers.)

We may be asked, how can you bring moral force to bear on these armed despots? I will tell you. We can stop the supplies. (Cheers.) Why, Russia cannot carry on two campaigns beyond her own frontiers, without coming to some Empire for a loan. (Hear, hear.) She never has done so; she has never moved an army of 30,000 men without being either subsidised by England or borrowing money at Amsterdam. I have had many opportunities of ascertaining and knowing the state of Russia, having recently paid a visit there, when I spent a little fortnight in its scenes, and I tell you Russia cannot carry on two campaigns in Hungary without coming to borrow money in western Europe, or robbing the Bank of St. Petersburg. In 1828 Russia was at war with Turkey, and after one campaign she was obliged to apply to Hope and Co., at Amsterdam, for 40,000,000 florins. (Hear, hear.) In 1831, when the Poles rose in insurrection against Russia, she could not carry on that war of three months without contracting a loan; and I am a member a paper of the day speaking of that particular loan, as called in London "The Polish Murdering Loan" (Cheers.) Now, I want to know, as a member of the peace party, if we cannot do something to prevent Russia or Austria from raising a loan in western Europe again. (Cheers.)

Russia enjoys the credit of being wealthy, solely on account of the deceit of her diplomatists. They tell us that the Emperor has very rich gold mines in Siberia, from which he can draw any amount of the precious metal. I have been in Russia, and know the value of these mines. The Russian Government does not work them itself, but receives a percentage on the working of them by others; and the working is not more profitable than other avocations, and they yield to the Government only £700,000 or £800,000 a year. Russia gets ten times as much in the shape of excise on the ardent spirits consumed by its wretched serfed, and enslaved population. (Hear, hear.) After the gold mine delusion is exploded, they tell you the Emperor of Russia has a great amount of specie in the vaults of the fortress of St. Petersburgh Yes, there is a reserve of specie, precisely like that of the Bank of England; it is a reserve of fourteen millions, to meet a circulation of paper money of some forty or fifty millions. (Cheers and laughter.)

* * * * *

Those are my moral means (cheers)—the means which I invite the peace party, not only in England, but throughout Europe, where they are gathering in force, to uphold (Cheers.) By these means I invite them to put down the system of war loans. (Hear, hear.) Will any one in the city of London dare to be a party to a loan to Russia (No, no), either directly and openly, or by agency or co-partnership with any house in Amsterdam or Paris? Will any citizen dare, before the eyes of his own country, to lend his money for carrying the throats of an innocent people? (Cheers.) Such a project has been talked of, but let it assume a shape, and I promise you that we, the peace party, will have such a meeting as has not yet been held in London, to denounce the blood-stained project, to point the finger of scorn at the houses or individuals who would lend Russia money for such a purpose, and to fix the indelible stamp of infamy on such a person. (Loud cheers.) That is my moral force. (Hear.) As for Austria, I suppose no one would ever think of lending her money. (Laughter.) Why, she has been twice bankrupt in the last thirty or forty years, and her paper money is again at a discount of fifteen or sixteen per cent The peace party will, I trust, with cold blood, raise a crusade against the system of war loans—that attempts to carry on an unholy war" (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Osborne, M.P., and other speakers who followed, while admitting in a great degree the correctness of Mr. Cobden's statements respecting the Russian finances, impressed on the meeting the idea that that Power was by no means to be despised, and that it was much to be feared her resources were quite sufficient to crush Hungary.

The following resolutions were also agreed to:—

2. "That this meeting view with detestation and horror the war now raging in Hungary, and the barbarous modes in which it is prosecuted by the Austrian authorities and generals, and consider their conduct to merit the indignant reprobation of all civilised nations."

3. "That this meeting views the military intervention of Russia in the affairs of Hungary as wholly unjustifiable in reason and in fact, inasmuch as, besides re-opening and prolonging a sanguinary contest which had been already virtually decided, it is a gross violation of the law of nations—the indefeasible right of Hungary—and perilous to the peace, the freedom, and the general welfare of Europe."

4. "That the immediate recognition of the Government de facto of the kingdom of Hungary by this country is no less demanded by considerations of justice and policy, and the commercial interests of the two states, than with the view of putting a stop to the effusion of human blood, and of terminating the fearful atrocities which mark the progress of the Austro-Russian armies."

A petition to both Houses of Parliament founded on those resolutions was also unanimously passed, and the proceedings terminated.

IRELAND.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT.

In Dublin preparations are being made busily to afford a suitable reception to her Majesty. The arrangements agreed on will of course, depend in a great degree upon the weather. If all should proceed favourably, it is expected her Majesty will arrive in Kingstown Harbour on Monday, and proceed by the Arklow route. It is calculated that her Majesty will not be able to reach the residence of the Viceroy before five o'clock in the afternoon. That night there will be a dinner-party at the Viceregal Lodge in honour of her Majesty's arrival, and the city will be splendidly illuminated. Next day, Tuesday, her Majesty will again cross into the city for the purpose of receiving addresses at the Castle. That night there will be a dinner-party and ball at the Viceregal Lodge. On Wednesday, a grand review in the Phœnix Park. On Thursday forenoon her Majesty will hold a Levee, and on Friday a Drawingroom, at the Castle. On Wednesday and Thursday evenings the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon will give dinner-parties at the Viceregal Lodge to her Majesty and our royal guests. On Saturday her Majesty will visit the Duke and Duchess of Leinster, at Carton, where she will lunch, and on her return to town bid farewell to the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon, and proceed on her voyage to England.

On Monday a meeting of the county Dublin was held, at which the High Sheriff (Mr. Ennis) presided. Addresses were adopted for presentation to the Queen and Prince Albert BELFAST.—A letter has been received by the Secretary to the Flax Improvement Society of Ireland from the Marquis of Downshire, announcing that Sir George Grey had commissioned him to say that both her Majesty and Prince Albert will be happy to witness the proposed exhibition of flax manufactures at Belfast about the 10th of August.

CORK.—The arrangements for the Royal visit are thus described by the Cork Constitution:—"The Royal yacht Victoria and Albert will be preceded by a fast steamer, to make arrangements, and her Majesty will be accompanied by a squadron of steam-ships. When her Majesty arrives in Cove she will go on board the Fairy, and come up to the King's Pier at Blackrock, where she will land, and drive into the city. Having passed through the principal streets, she will proceed to the Custom-house, at the northern quay of which the Fairy will await her arrival. She will then receive the addresses of the citizens and return to Cove. The preparations making throughout the city are on a very extensive scale. It is proposed to erect a handsome pavilion on Penrose's quay to accommodate one thousand ladies, and a pavilion at the southern extreme of the Grand Parade. Several of the public establishments and hotels purpose erecting triumphal arches across the streets, and extensive orders have been given at the gas company's office for fittings for illuminations. It is intended to have batteries placed along the river, to salute her Majesty as she passes up and down. The Royal squadron will be at Blackrock Castle. Preparations on an extensive scale are being made in Cove to illuminate the town, and light up the adjacent hills and islands. A pyrotechnist has been engaged to conduct the fireworks. Instructions have been received by the admiral of the port and the general of the district to make all arrangements necessary to give éclat to the event, and protection against accident to the crowds that will assemble along the route.

We understand that Sir George Grey is the Secretary of State expected to accompany her Majesty on her visit to Ireland. The Royal party will embark at Osborne on the 1st of August, and, weather permitting, disembark at Cork on Thursday night or Friday morning. From thence the Royal squadron will proceed to Dublin; and it is expected that her Majesty will be able to disembark in Kingstown Harbour early on Monday. Belfast is to be the next port at which her Majesty will touch; but the day cannot at present be indicated, as it must necessarily depend on many circumstances.

From Belfast the Royal squadron will proceed to Scotland, landing at Greenock.

THE LAKES OF KILLARNEY.

By visiting the "Gap of Dunloe," and returning in a boat through the Lakes, much of the sylvan beauty, and the savage grandeur of Killarney, may be seen in one day, should the traveller be pressed for time. But, whether his stay be short or long, the first excursion he should make is to this far-famed "Gap." The attentive host and hostess of the Victoria Hotel will make all the arrangements for his comfort. The usual mode of proceeding is to hire a car or pony and ride about half way through the pass; and thence proceed on foot over a shoulder of the Purple Mountain to the head of the Upper Lake at Geraghmene, where a boat will be stationed to row him through the three lakes. By this journey he will be enabled to see all the most celebrated and remarkable portions of the scenery; hear the finest and most renowned echoes; and learn from the civil, well-informed, and garrulous guides and boatmen, the legends, traditions, and histories of each spot he passes. The distance from the Victoria Hotel to the entrance of the Gap is from four to five miles, and the car proceeds about four miles through it, until it becomes too rugged and impracticable for vehicles or ponies. The traveller—who, if he be wise, will take a stout staff in his hand—must walk the remainder of the way to Geraghmene, at the head of the lake, a distance of about four miles more. I will not, by any general description of the scenery, anticipate the recital of the beauties that will enchant, or the sublimities that will enrapture him, during this excursion, but name each loveliness in its own place, and dwell upon each sublimity in the chronological order of its discovery.

Our party consisted of three, and was increased to four by our guide —Spillane the elder—a personage as well known at Killarney as Macgillicuddy's Reeks, and quite worthy of the renown which he has acquired in his vocation. Let me mention, also, that he has two sons, whom he has trained up in the path that he has trod, and who do no discredit, but the very reverse, to the education they have received. The first point of interest on the road is the ruined Church and Round Tower of Aghadoe, which, as we started rather late, and were pressed for time, we did not turn aside to visit. I made a point of visiting them on the following day, and would strongly advise the tourist to start early enough to spare an hour for this purpose. The ruins stand upon a gentle eminence, from whence a very good view of the lake is obtained. From this position the eye may wander over those delicious lakes and islands, and over a mountain chain of forty miles in length, stretching far beyond Mill-street towards Cahirciveen and Valentia. The ruins themselves are the most conspicuous are Crobanne, a conical hill, separated from Mangerton by a narrow glen; Mangerton itself, with the Devil's Punch-bowl upon his brawny side; the Torc Mountain; the Purple Mountain, with Glena, and Tomies, and Macgillicuddy's Reeks. Amongst the latter are included the magnificent and wonderful mountain of Carrantual, the principal in that range, which extends to a height of 3420 feet above the level of the sea, and is the highest mountain in Ireland. But beautiful as is this prospect, the crumbling round tower, the ruins of the church, and the horrible burial-place around them, impress most people far more strongly.

I could discover no account of Aghadoe in the guide-books, neither could I ascertain the age of the venerable ruin. A portion of the bare walls alone remains of an edifice that must once have been a fine abbey or cathedral. The "round tower"—or the ruin popularly so called—is in its immediate proximity. The ruin called the "Pulpit" by some, and the "Bishop's Chair" by others, is the remnant of a tower of the same kind; and both appear to me to have formed a portion of the building attached to, and dependent upon, the abbey or church of Aghadoe, and to have been in no way connected with the Druidical remains that are so frequent in Ireland. The small piece of ground that surrounds these ruins is one of the three burial-places of the people of Killarney, and the only one of the three where paupers are interred. The mortality of the Killarney Union for the last three years has ranged—as I was informed, by persons in authority—from 12 or 13 to 25 or 30 per week. Taking it at the lowest number, the pauper burials at Aghadoe during that time will amount to 624 annually, or 1872 for the three years—which are crowded in one very small corner of a cemetery that in its whole extent does not cover more than one acre of ground. The first glance shows the traveller in the midst of what a Golgotha he stands. In the wretched corner set apart for the paupers the earth is covered with deal planks and fresh remnants of coffins in immense profusion. They seem to have been placed in the earth only to have been tak n up again; and amidst them, skulls, thigh-bones, and other disgusting remnants of mortality may be counted, not by ones, or twos, or threes, but by the score. They lie scattered about in every direction; and it is a matter of difficulty to walk without treading upon them. Some of the skulls are white as Parian marble, and others green with moss and the vegetation of age. We found three cows, an immense pig, and a couple of sheep grazing upon the rank herbage that grows in the less frequented part of the burial-ground; and I must confess that I felt a qualm of stomach at the idea of ever again devouring beef, pork, or mutton in that manner. As chance, have drawn its living sustenance from such a foul source as the green grass in the churchyard of Aghadoe. Our party was about to leave the ground, when our attention was directed to a cart that drew up to the entrance. A lad, in the garb of the workhouse, was the driver; there was no other person in it. Two men met us in the cemetery, and expecting probably the alms that English travellers with any sympathy in their souls can scarcely avoid bestowing upon the miserable creatures that swarm about the country, he advanced towards us. We asked what he had got in the cart. He said three bodies—a man, a woman, and a child, who had died in the workhouse, and which he was despatched from the union house to inter. The gravediggers had not yet come; and he would wait for them. We asked how it was that they buried the people in such shallow graves. He replied, they were not shallow—they were fully a foot deep! We again asked how it was that the skulls and coffins lay about in such a disgusting manner. He said it could not be helped; but that he thought it would be as well if the coffin planks were all collected and burned.

As he spoke, two other men came up to the gate with pickaxes and shovels. One of them, an elderly man of severe and gaunt appearance, having deposited his shovel on the ground, took a small coffin out of the cart and walked rapidly away with it under his arm towards a retired part of the burial-ground. Anxious to witness the interment, I and my companions followed slowly, but were stopped by seeing the man, who seemed quite unconscious of our presence, place the coffin on the ground, remove the lid, which was not nailed, or otherwise fastened, and gaze intently upon the features of the little corpse within. A moment or two elapsed, and he began talking to it, partly in Irish and partly in English. What he said in Irish I could not understand; but the English portion of his address to the corpse consisted of the passionate exclamation, several times repeated, "Oh, why did you die, my darling, my honey? oh, why did you die?" As he proceeded, his words became thick and interrupted by sobs. Finally, to use the affecting scriptural expression, he placed his hands upon his breast, and wept aloud. I divined the reason. I saw the tears running down his thin and sunken cheeks, and I turned away with my companions. I felt angry with myself that I had watched him, and we left the father alone with his dead child to give vent to his sorrow, undisturbed by the presence of strangers. The lad who drove the cart volunteered the explanation that it was the man's child, and that it had died of fever the previous day, and that the father had begged permission of the master of the workhouse to see it interred.

In a minute or two afterwards we saw the father going towards the cart, and assist in taking out the other bodies. His face was calm, and there was not the slightest trace in his manner or countenance of the paroxysm of grief he had just exhibited. The third man then came up, and politely wished us the "top of the morning" I returned his salutation, and learned from him that he had been at the graveyard performing the same duty every day during the week. The previous day he had interred five bodies. We asked, was there any cholera in the house? He replied, "No;" the place was healthy, but the poor people were so far gone in starvation and fever before they entered the workhouse, that many of them never recovered.

He looked a stout hale man himself, and I asked if he received enough food at the house. "Indeed not," he replied; "the soup is very thin." "But you look hearty," said I, "and as if you had enough to keep you in health and strength." "Well, perhaps," he rejoined.

I was convinced by the visit I had paid to the house that the paupers were much better off than they could have been before they entered it, and that the food they received was both sufficient and wholesome. So, declining further conversation on this point, and anxious to depart, I gave him a sixpence. The shower of blessings that he poured upon my head was perfectly overwhelming, and he coupled them with the assurance that I was the very best gentleman that had ever come to Aghadoe.

We were about to depart when we heard a doleful sound in the narrow lane leading from the high-road to the burial ground. It was another funeral; not that of an inmate of the workhouse, but of an independent peasant. In a little donkey-cart, bending over a small coffin of plain deal, without pall or covering of any kind, were seated a woman of forty, and a girl of eleven or twelve. The woman was howling in the forty, and a girl of eleven or twelve. The woman was howling in the forty, and a girl of eleven or twelve. The woman was howling in the

PARIS FASHIONS FOR AUGUST

PARLIAMENTARY PORTRAITS.

MR. JUSTICE (LATE SERGEANT) TALFOURD.

ALTHOUGH the promotion to the vacant Judgeship of this learned gentleman within the last few days, has—by transferring the sphere of action for his accomplished intellect from the Legislature to the Bench—withdrawn him from that category of public men who furnish the subjects for our gallery of Parliamentary Portraits, we nevertheless include him in the series, as, up to the present week, he was a member of the House of Commons. Mr. Talfourd received the official notification of his elevation to the Bench on Tuesday last, at Stafford where he was engaged at the time in pursuit of his professional avocations, at the Summer Assizes of the Oxford Circuit.

There are few men at the bar who could have attained that honour with more satisfaction to the profession and the public generally. His career has been a remarkable one, presenting the rare instance of a man rising to distinction as an orator, dramatic poet, and advocate—eminence in any one of which rôles is sufficient for the fame of less gifted individuals

In the House of Commons, which so often resounded with his eloquence, he represented his native town, Reading. His father, who was established there as a brewer, married the daughter of a dissenting minister, Mr. Thomas Noon, who had officiated over an Independent congregation in Reading for thirty three years, and died three days previous to the birth of his grandson, which took place on the 26th of January, in the year 1795. The boy received in baptism the names Thomas Noon, in memory of his deceased relative. He passed two years at the Protestant Dissenters' Grammar-School at Mill Hill, which he quitted for the public Grammar-School of Reading, conducted by Dr. Valpy. Here he gave effect to his predilection for the Church of England over the dissenting communion of his early home; the change originating, it is said, in his keen appreciation of the greater tolerance of the former, in which the love of the drama was not prohibited as wrong. At Mill Hill, too, the young aspirant first evinced those ardent political feelings on the popular side, by which he has shown himself on many occasions to be animated.

MR JUSTICE TALFOURD.

His first venture in print is stated to have been a poem addressed to Sir Francis Burdett on his liberation from the Tower of London, which was contributed to the Statesman newspaper. While still at Reading School he was encouraged to print a small volume entitled "Poems on various Subjects," the first being "On the Education of the Poor," and written at Mill Hill, on the occasion of a visit to that establishment by the celebrated Joseph Lancaster. The other contents of the volume are "An Indian Tale," "The Offering of Isaac, a Sacred Drama," and "Specimens of a "Didactic Poem on the Union and Brotherhood of Mankind." These effusions gave indication of what might be expected from the riper genius of the man, especially the poem on Education, which gained for him some influential friends, by whose advice, on his coming to London to study for the bar in 1813, he became a pupil of the celebrated pleader Chitty, under whose able instruction he continued four years, during which period he considerably assisted that eminent lawyer in the production of his well-known work on "Criminal Law." In the same year the youthful Talfourd, who mainly looked for replenishing his purse to his literary exertions, published a long essay in the Pamphleteer, under the title of an "Appeal to the Protestant Dissenters of Great Britain on Behalf of Roman Catholics."

Several other productions of a similar kind came from his pen about the same period, all strongly marked by argumentative ability and forcible illustration. Amongst these was a reply to some objections taken by Cobbett to the Unitarian Relief Bill; also, "Strictures on Capital Punishments, with Observations on the true nature of Justice, and the legitimate design of Penal Institutions," the latter a treatise of marked ability

He also brought out at this time, "Observations on the Punishment of the Pillory," and an "Appeal against the Act for regulating Royal Marriages."

In 1815, he published "An Estimate of the Poetry of the Age," in which he exhibits a full appreciation of the genius of Wordsworth, whom it was then rather the fashion with critics to decry. In 1817, after quitting Mr. Chitty's office, he contributed largely to the Retrospective Review and the "Encyclopædia Metropolitana." In the latter work, the articles on Homer, the Greek Tragedians, and the Greek Lyric Poets (besides purely historical papers), are from Mr. Talfourd's pen. From 1820 to 1833, he was a constant writer in the New Monthly Magazine, the Edinburgh Review, and the London Magazine.

In 1826 he found time to prepare a memoir on the life and works of the celebrated romance-writer, Mrs. Radcliffe, which is prefixed to her posthumous works. His legal studies were not neglected amidst his literary avocations, and about the same time he superintended an edition of "Dickinson's Guide to the Quarter Sessions." When, in 1821, he was called to the bar by the Society of the Middle Temple, after four years' successful practice as a pleader, he joined the Oxford Circuit and Berkshire Sessions, and soon succeeded in obtaining a large and lucrative practice. In 1833 he was called to the degree of sergeant-at-law, with a patent of precedence; he also became Recorder of Banbury.

The great literary work on which Mr. Talfourd's fame will rest is his tragedy of "Ion." Towards the close of 1834, he had it printed for private circulation, and two editions were thus disposed of. A notice of the play next appeared in the Quarterly Review; and at length the author consented to its production at Covent Garden Theatre, for Mr. Macready's benefit, on the 26th of May, 1836, when its success as an acting drama was decisive. He subsequently brought out the tragedies of the "Athenian Captive" and "Glencoe." He is also the author of "Vacation Rambles," a "Life of Charles Lamb," &c. In Parliament, his exertions to amend the law of copyright will be long remembered for the brilliant speeches with which they were accompanied. He was not, however, a frequent speaker in the House, though always able to command the eager attention of honourable members.

He was first returned to Parliament, as member for Reading, at the general election that followed the dissolution of 1834.

In politics he is a Liberal, and has declared himself in favour of the ballot.

In 1822, Mr. Talfourd married Rachel, the daughter of John Fowell Rutt, Esq.

Amongst the more intimate literary friends of Mr. Talfourd (many of them now no more), may be enumerated Hazlitt, Godwin, Coleridge, Wordsworth, Leigh Hunt, Proctor (Barry Cornwall), Bulwer, Knowles, Macready, and Dickens, The latter dedicated his "Pickwick Papers" to him.

THE LAST ATTACK ON ROME BY THE FRENCH.

Our Artist at Rome has enabled us, this week, to illustrate the last struggle made by Garibaldi and the Italians against the French attack. We have already given the details, to which we can add a few additional [illegible].

The French operations on the night of the 30th, the capture of the Bastion No. 8, and the fire of the besieged, which attacked to annoy the second line of defence, struck a deep terror into the Romans, and all the troops save the Garibaldi bands, the Lombards, and the battalion of students, whose courage has never been for a moment questioned, showed much hesitation, and we believe nearly all refused to advance and protect the remaining ground to the S. Pietro in Montorio, where arose the battle of their independence was to be fought. Garibaldi, who had the charge of the Porta S. Pancrazio and the whole of this strong position, informed the Triumvirate that, under such circumstances, he could not undertake to preserve the first line of defence any longer, or maintain the second one beyond the evening of the following day. The success of the French, and the dreadful intensity of their fire on those parts of the Montorio which were still defended, struck a general terror in Rome.

Our Correspondent, referring to the clearing of the streets by the French troops says:—"There was a distribution the first few nights of the clearance system—[illegible] blessing, whacking, and crowning. Several assassinations have taken place—murdered Frenchmen, some priests, and others—women, I regret, of course, I should like to know the truth, as the lady of the pass has been put a stop to. Again, if a French officer quarrels a cafe or restaurant, one leads one's wife out. I petted the Frenchmen, as they seemed good-natured fellows, and many must be thoroughly disgusted at the duty which they have been obliged to do. It shows at any rate that the Romans did not want them. Several parchments have been put up, which are rather curious, coming from the authorities of a Republic for instance:—'Whilst twenty-four hours are to be given for all treasonable papers and heavy caps, cases of muskets and breech' (another forbidding the wearing of military uniforms, under penalty of so many lashes and imprisonment. I see it stated, in the despatches of the French government, that not a single bomb has been thrown into Rome, whilst the fact is, that upwards of 400 have been sent in—for more than an hour I saw them myself—watched the spark of each as it left the battery until it fell and exploded. The day afterwards, I saw the houses that had been damaged, and heard from a surgeon of several horrible cases of people being wounded, whom he had attended.

The first night the bombs nearly all fell in the direction of the Capitol, which is nearly a mile and a-half from the walls whence they were lighting, so that the absurdity of endeavouring to make out that they were unintentionally thrown in, is evident. The last night of the bombardment the shells were thrown from the other end of the town, outside the Porta del Popolo. Out of the few artisans I have the pleasure of knowing in Rome, there are three who had bombs burst in their houses, one gentleman having a lung knocked out of his hand, and being slightly wounded. The other had five burst in his house. It may, perhaps, be said that they were not bombs that were thrown into the city, it is what they call an obus. At any rate, this bomb, or obus, is a hollow iron ball, eight or nine inches in diameter, the iron an inch thick, which is thrown out of a mortar, and when it falls, bursts and plays destruction with anything that happens to be in its way. I have a piece of one [illegible], as any more proof is wanting."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1849.

THE session of Parliament is about to be brought to an early close, but at the expense of some of its more important measures. The Irish franchise bills, as was long foreseen, have been abandoned; a course by which the Ministry have shown, seeing that this is the second session in which these measures have been thus treated, that they are more bent upon other matters than on mere political reforms. The Ecclesiastical Commission Bill has been thrown overboard, by which Mr. Horsman has got a new grievance, on which, and very properly too, he will found another speech upon the Church and matters appertaining thereto, next session. The Railway Audit Bill, notwithstanding the undoubted importance of some such measure, has also been given up, and railway accounts will thus have the opportunity of getting, for another year to come, more entangled and more complicated than ever. For another year, too, shareholders will be at the mercy of irresponsible boards of Directors. True, we have the promise that a similar measure will be introduced next session, but what irreparable mischief may be done in the meantime. The Juvenile Offenders Bill is also among the "slaughtered innocents;" and youth in our gaols will thus be exposed for some time longer to the contaminating influences of contact with adult delinquents. The Marriage Bill is likewise amongst the slain, and the perplexing question which it was introduced to settle is as far from solution as ever. On Wednesday, the Insolvent Members Bill was withdrawn, giving a longer lease to the absurd anomaly of a legislative body, from whom bankrupts are excluded, being composed in part of insolvents. The Marriages and Registration (Scotland) Bills are not to be proceeded with; not that they have not been admitted to be of great importance, but that, in their inception, and in their conduct through Parliament, they have been characterised by the grossest bungling. And, to crown all, Mr. Mackinnon has withdrawn the Smoke Prohibition Bill; and to the manufacturing towns will be extended for yet another year the luxury of being canopied by "opaque smoke." But this is not all: the measures alluded to have been absolutely abandoned for the time being; but there are others which have been so mutilated that their originators almost doubt their identity. There is, for instance, Lord Brougham's Bankruptcy Consolidation Bill, which has received such a mangling at the hands of the select committee to whose tender mercies it was consigned by the Commons, that he can scarcely recognize his own offspring. There is, again, the Encumbered Estates Bill, which, at its introduction, all praised and welcomed, but which, in its passage through both Houses, particularly the House of Lords, was very greatly mutilated: the Commons, however, will, to some extent, restore it. And as for the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill, it might as well be slaughtered outright. One has often heard of "Hamlet" being played with the part of Hamlet left out: it is quite as good a joke to pass the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill without the maximum clause. It is probable that the Commons will, in this matter, insist upon their privileges, and call upon the Lords either to reject the bill in toto, or to allow the clauses struck out to remain in it—these clauses having reference to taxation. Something must be done; for, were it to become law in its present shape, not only would it be inefficient in itself, but it would also render the Encumbered Estates Bill, from which so much is justly expected, absolutely nugatory. This has been called a prolific session. It has, at least, earned that reputation, so far as dropped and mangled measures are concerned.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.

MAGDALEN COLLEGE.—Messrs. F. M. White, Commoner of Baliol College; J. Bird, Commoner of Trinity College; and S. Hill, Commoner of Magdalen College, were elected, on Wednesday last, demies of Magdalen College.

The Rev. J. Rigaud and Mr. J. W. Knight succeed to the two vacant Fellowships the former on the Winchester, the latter on the Northamptonshire foundation.

CAMBRIDGE.

POSTSCRIPT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY.

The Stamps, &c. Allowances Bill, the Defects in Leases Suspension Bill, and several other bills, were read a second time and ordered to be committed. The Judgments (Ireland) Bill, and the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Bill were read a third time and passed.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—FRIDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock

The following bills were read a third time and passed:—The Workhouse Loans (Ireland) Bill, the Drainage of Lands Bill, and the Admiralty Jurisdiction in the Colonies Bill.

POOR RELIEF (IRELAND) BILL.—CONSIDERATION OF LORDS' AMENDMENTS

Lord J. RUSSELL wished the House to have the benefit of the Speaker's advice as to the course which should be taken by that House with regard to the Lords' amendments to this bill.

The SPEAKER said the rule was, that the Lords could deliberate and propose amendments on any bill sent up to them by this House, provided that they did not interfere with the amount of or disposal of any rates, or with the persons who had to collect such rates This rule had been strictly adhered to up to the time of the passing of the Irish Municipal Bill of 1834, when a considerable infringement of these privileges took place. The Irish poor-laws of 1838, and 1847, also furnished opportunities for like infringement; and it was for the House to consider whether they would consent to accede to these precedents, and waive their privileges, or whether they would assert them.

Lord J. RUSSELL did not think that on the ground of precedent the House was bound to assert its privileges. He thought that the Legislature would be carried on more amicably by the two Houses if this House consented to waive its privileges in this case, and proceeded to discuss the amendments which had come down to them from the other House.

Sir J. GRAHAM thought it was right to endeavour to separate the constitutional question entirely from the merits of the enactment which had come down from the other House. The question was now for the House, whether they would consent to waive their privileges as they had done in the case cited by the Speaker; but he would ask if there if they consented to do so, what claim would they afterwards have to resist the interference of the Lords in a question of local taxation. It would be better, if they decided to waive their privileges in the present instance, at once to give up all claim to such a privilege; for they would never again have a chance of asserting it.

Sir D. NORREYS moved that the amendments be taken into consideration that day three months.

On a division, the proposition was negatived by a majority of 111 to 62.

The several amendments made by the Lords in the bill, the principal of which was the striking out of the maximum rate, were then discussed at considerable length and agreed to.—Adjourned.

CITY OF LONDON ELECTION.—The Lord Mayor (Sir James Duke), was elected yesterday (Friday) without opposition, as M.P. for the City, in the room of the late James Pattison, Esq., deceased.

READING ELECTION.—Sir John Hare has gone down to Reading, and announced his intention of starting as a candidate for that borough on the liberal interest. His reception has been most satisfactory. A placard has been put forth, announcing the retirement of Mr. C. Russell, the Conservative candidate.

Mr. John Frederick Stanford has offered himself to the constituency of Reading as a successor to Mr. Sergeant (now Mr. Justice) Talfourd in the representation of their borough.

THE "NATION" NEWSPAPER.—The Stamp-Office authorities at Dublin, after considerable demur, have agreed to register the new series of the Nation newspaper, to be conducted by Mr. Duffy, the first number of which will be published the last week in August.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

The committee of the National Assembly, to whom the question of the adjournment for some weeks has been referred, has recommended that the Assembly suspend its sittings from the 31th of August to the 30th of September: a committee of twenty five members will be appointed to remain in Paris, should the Assembly pass the proposition for adjournment.

On Thursday the Assembly passed the greater number of the clauses of the law on the press.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The racing community has been kept on the qui vive this week, by meetings in various parts of the country, none of which, however, have produced results calculated to affect speculation on future events. The ensuing week will be one of the most important of the season, as the great réunions of the aristocracy of all, in fact, who appreciate first-rate sport and beautiful scenery without the alloy of a mob—commencing on Tuesday, and continuing until Friday. The list is a monster one in length and value, each day offering a number of rich and exciting prizes for horses of all ages, the gross amount of which cannot be much under £20,000.

That the metropolitans may participate in the enjoyment of this truly great meeting, special trains will run daily from London-bridge, and the journey to the course may be accomplished in about three hours and a half. Those who may wish to be near the spot may find accommodation between Brighton and Southsea. The distance from each place is short, and the trains convenient.

As a guide to our readers, we may as well state that the great Two and Three-Year-Old Stakes will come off on Tuesday to suit taste the most interesting day of the Goodwood Stakes on Wednesday, and the Cup and ten or a dozen other races on Thursday. The provision for Friday is ample.

The only other race meetin s are Leominster on Wednesday, and Edgewars, a very minor affair, on Thursday.

There will be cricketing at Lord's from Monday until Saturday; the Marylebone Cricket Club and the Harrow, Eton, and Winchester Schools being the performers.

The aquatic fixtures are a match at Mortlake on Monday, the Tower Regatta on Tuesday, Doggett's Coat and Badge Wager on Wednesday, and the Wapping Regatta on Thursday. The Royal Irish Yacht Club Regatta (Dublin) commences on Tuesday.

TATTERSALL'S.

MONDAY. There were quite enough members present for business, but they were not "i' the vein," and the metallics found but little employment. The principal movements were the retirement of Maid of Lyons, and the retirement of Ingham, Van Dieman, and Remembrance—the latter went quite out of the betting.

ROYAL VICTORIA YACHT CLUB.—The regatta commenced on Tuesday under the highly favourable auspices of a stiff breeze. Some most animating sport was the result, as the yachts were tested in a most trying manner. About a quarter to six o'clock, her Majesty, Prince Albert, and the Court proceeded to the gay scene in the Fairy yacht, with the Royal standard flying, which was saluted at Ryde by the Club-house battery, by yachts, and her Majesty's ship Rapard, 80, Captain Parcell, at Spithead. Her Majesty remained about an hour viewing the festivities.

WORSE AND WORSE.—We observe that gutta percha speaking-tubes are now being used in dwelling-houses in place of bells; and when anything is wanted in the parlour, the mistress calls attention by blowing into the tube, which sounds a whistle in the kitchen. We have often heard complaints of the slowness of servants in attending to their mistress's wants; but now it seems that whatever they require, they may "whistle for it." Man is the Moon.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Mecklenburgh-Strelitz, and the Princess Mary, left town on Tuesday for Kew. Wednesday was the birthday of the Duchess of Cambridge. The auspicious event was celebrated at Kew, where a select party of the nobility paid their respects to her Royal Highness.

Her Imperial Highness the Archduchess, consort of the Archduke Ferdinand of Este, gave birth to a Princess at Brunn, on the 8th inst., which arrived only a few days.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

THE LORD MAYOR'S ENTERTAINMENT TO THE IRISH MEMBERS.

On Wednesday the Lord Mayor gave a grand banquet at the Mansion house to the Irish members of Parliament, and the leading members of the financial reform party. The dinner was served in the Egyptian-hall, where covers were laid for 150.

Amongst the foreigners present were Count Teleki and M. Fr. . Pulsk from Hungary

The usual loyal toasts having been given,

The Lord Mayor proposed "Prosperity to Ireland." He observed, in reference to the election of the Corporation of London with Ireland, it was well known that the Corporation of the City of London had for two centuries and a half past been closely connected with the sister country, and he was happy to say that circumstances had recently arisen to lead to the hope that it might be brought into intimate and advantageous connexion with her. (Hear, hear.) And as he felt that nothing was more essential than that such a connexion should arise, a clear explanation of the objects which the Corporation had in view was absolutely necessary, to prevent any misconception or misunderstanding of their motives and intentions with regard to that country (Hear, hear.) He hoped it was not supposed that they had any feeling in view other than the promotion of the honour, the welfare, and the happiness of the sister country. (Hear, hear.) He feared, whatever might be the endeavours to carry out that object, unless they were met by a kind and reciprocal feeling on the part of the Irish people, they would do more harm than good. (Hear, hear.) If it were supposed for a moment that the objects they had in view were to dispossess the owners of the soil, to sweep away the occupiers, or to interfere with the religion of the people, they would fail. (Hear, hear.) But he was anxious to take that opportunity, in the presence of so many Irish members of Parliament, of stating that they had no desire whatever, should they hereafter connect themselves with the country, to do more than to endeavour, by shewing their confidence in the integrity and kind feeling of the people of Ireland, to increase the demand for their labour, and generally to promote the welfare and happiness of the country. If the objects of the corporation should be doubted in Ireland, let it be borne in mind how often they had been decried. (Hear, hear.) He was anxious now to let it be known that the corporation had no other object in view than the welfare of Ireland, and that they had that confidence in the people of that country, that they were convinced they would receive with satisfaction any endeavour to assist them in their present distressed circumstances. The Corporation of London acted as trustees for the public, and he was quite sure that the improvements they were now contemplating would not only receive the support of the citizens of London, but of the great body of the people. (Hear, hear.) And if, in the progress of time, those arrangements should be carried out—if they should be able to connect themselves with Ireland in the manner proposed—it would be their object to go there as friends, not accompanied by a host of English and Scotch followers, to establish their own kith and Scotch settlements, but to cultivate a good understanding, and to provide employment for the people on the English principle of a fair day's wages for a fair day's work, and to promote the honour of the sister country generally. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. J. Reynolds, M.P., responded to the toast.

The Lord Mayor having proposed the health of the distinguished foreign gentlemen who had honoured him with their company, the toast was duly honoured, and Count Teleki said: I have been much gratified to find, since my arrival in this country, that there is an almost universal sympathy for the cause of Hungary. This has not surprised me, for I was prepared to find that in this classic land of constitutional freedom an interest would be felt for the welfare of a nation which in many of its institutions possesses a great resemblance to your well-regulated Constitutional Government. Hungary is now engaged in a struggle for independence against an almost overwhelming coalition. I should be wanting in courtesy to the first magistrate of London, whose position imposes on him a strict neutrality in your foreign and domestic politics, if I were to attempt to enter now upon the merits of this struggle. Suffice it to say, that my countrymen are contending only for the same temperate freedom which you possess in this country, and which you know so well how to enjoy. If we have been driven to a resort to arms in the maintenance of our rights, it has been only after every effort on our part to avoid this terrible extremity had been tried and proved unsuccessful. Whatever may be the result of that struggle, I pray God that he will give the victory to the side of right and justice), the kind sympathy you have expressed for my countrymen will sink deep in their hearts, and be recorded with gratitude in the annals of Hungary. (Cheers.)

Mr. Pulsky said: A Hungarian can meet the hospitality and the generous feelings with which this great nation welcomes him with good conscience; for while it is not easy to see how the interests of Hungary, if God give her success in the great struggle for her present trial, could clash with those of England, there are a thousand points, and all of vital importance, in which the interests of the two countries can only go hand in hand. England is a mighty maritime power, rich in colonies, while Hungary can make no tributary the globe, but her agriculturers anticipate the wishes, where they are allowed to exercise their power. Hungary, on the other side, rich in the products of agriculture, with a teeming soil and a numerous population, possesses every requisite to turn these resources to account, and to exchange, under the rule of free trade, the produce of its fields for the refinements of British industry. There has been in Hungary an instinctive attachment to England. [illegible] The day, I trust, is not far distant when more intimate relations than have [illegible] yet been practicable will unite Hungarians and Englishmen as friends and allies in the battle for civilisation against barbarism; when the ties of interest and of mutual trade invites shall be annobled by those of mutual appreciation of merit; and Hungary shall pay her debt of gratitude to England for encouragement held out in need, and for aid afforded in distress, with that fraternal assistance without which nobles manly hearts beat in unison across dividing seas and scorching deserts. (Cheers.)

The company then separated.

CONSERVANCY OF THE THAMES.—On Saturday last, the Lord Mayor, attended by the Recorder, several of the Aldermen, the Sheriffs, and City officers, held a Court of Conservancy, at the Guildhall, Westminster, After the adjournment of the Court, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress gave an elegant entertainment to a large party of friends, on board the Corporation barge, Maria Wood, at Twickenham. Amongst the company were the Countess of Waldegrave and Lady Elizabeth Waldegrave, Lord and Lady Milford, Lady Langdale and the Hon. Miss Bickerstath, Lady Parker, Mr. Bruce and Captain Bruce, the Hon. Leslie Melville and Miss Melville, Mr. Hume, M.P., and the Misses Hume, Mr. Cobden, M.P., and Mrs. Cobden; Mr. Henry, M.P., and Mrs Henry; Mr Masterman, M.P.; Mr. Chaplain, M.P., and Mrs. Chaplain; Mr. Dodd, M.P.; Mrs. Hawes and Mr. Hawes, jun., &c.

NEWSVENDORS' ANNUAL DINNER.—On Wednesday, the annual dinner provided by the proprietors of the metropolitan press for newsvendors and their servants employed in the sale and distribution of the London newspapers, took place at Highbury Barn Tavern, when a handsome entertainment for 300, had on early but substantial dinner; and at half-past six o'clock, the adults employed in the business, consisting of nearly 250, sat down to dinner, after which dancing was kept up until a late hour.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES IN THE METROPOLIS.—Between the hours of five o'clock on Saturday afternoon and three o'clock on Sunday morning four fires occurred in the metropolis and its environs, by which a considerable amount of property was destroyed, viz.:—At the Red Lion, King Edward-street, Hackney, on the 14th inst., the property of Mr. W. L. Bowden was destroyed by fire. At the Surrey Coalhole. The fire broke out at half-past two o'clock on Sunday morning Mrs. Tabernacle and the servant made their appearance in their nightdresses at the first-floor windows, and were assisted in descending into the street by the constable. The potman escaped in a similar manner. The landlord was assisted at the time with his children. Several engines were promptly on the spot; but, notwithstanding the exertions of the firemen, the fire travelled from floor to floor with inconceivable rapidity, and eventually the roof fell in with a tremendous crash. The house and contents were wholly destroyed.——At Plaistow, Essex, about 5 o'clock on Saturday night, a stack of hay, containing about 200 loads, was destroyed on the farm premises of Mr. Robert Freeman, cowkeeper. Supposed cause, the overheating of the hay. Not insured.——In Spitalfields, about half-past seven o'clock on Saturday night, at the weaving premises of Mr. Cash, Hanbury-street, two upper floors, used as pattern rooms, were burned out, the roof off, and a steam-engine, &c. much damaged by fire and water. Contents insured in the Licensed Victuallers' Office, Lombard-street. The premises, as now known, at Clerkenwell, at 3, Coppice-row, about midnight, on Saturday, and fire occurred upon the premises of Mr. Bayley, chandler. The counter and part of the stock were destroyed. Not insured.

HEALTH OF LONDON DURING THE WEEK ENDING JULY 21.—The return for the last week records the further progress of the prevailing disease. The deaths from all causes, which in the two previous weeks were 1076 and 1369, rose in the last to 1741; a number which exceeds the average of 1847 of the season by 733. In the two previous weeks the deaths caused by cholera were [illegible] 330; but in the last they have reached 678, whilst the weekly average [illegible] of the 678 persons who died of cholera under the age of 15 years, 344 males and 324 females, a more equal distribution than in previous weeks: three rate of increase is apparent in the fact that in each of the last two weeks the mortality from diarrhœa has been about double that of the week preceding it. The mortality from diarrhœa and dysentery also increases, the deaths in three weeks having been 54, 100, and 146; while the weekly average of this season is not more than 35. The whole mortality from the three diseases, last week, is therefore 824, and gives an excess of 391 above the average of 732, which almost exactly coincides with the excess of mortality from all causes, as stated above. The diarrhœa was fatal in a large proportion of cases to children under two years of age. The increase of diarrhœa is observed in each of the five metropolitan divisions, except the northern, which comprises Marylebone, Pancras, Islington, Hackney, and Hampstead, where the deaths in the week were only seven. But it is chiefly remarkable on the south side of the river, where the deaths in the last three weeks were successively 93, 192, and 443 In Newington they were [illegible] ark, 84; in Bermondsey 64; in Lambeth, 166. In Rotherhithe the deaths were 37, the same as in the previous week. In [illegible] tinues near the average; hopping-cough above; scarlatina and small- [illegible] derably under it. Two persons died of [illegible] 3 births registered in the week were 1213.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean reading of the barometer in the week was 29.652, and lower than in the previous week. The mean temperature was lower than the average, except on Monday and Tuesday. The highest occurred on the former day, and was 83.6. The mean of the week was 60.9 deg. less by 6 deg. than in the previous week.

FINE ARTS.

COURT OF LAHORE.

A large historical picture, by M. Hugo Schoeffi, now exhibiting at the Cosmorama, in Regent-street, is of a decidedly unique character. The grand military scene and national festival which it represents is one now for ever passed away. The canvas is crowded with individual portraits of a great Oriental King with his nobles and officers, who have nearly all fallen a [illegible]ce to the disastrous revolution in Oriental affairs consequent on his demise, and connected with our late wars in the Punjaub. The picture is admirably grouped and coloured; its effect is imposing and gorgeous; and, altogether, it impresses the spectator with the wealth and magnificence by which the fête it depicts was distinguished. The artist has had the advantage of a long residence in the East, has here turned his experience to good account. Familiar with the persons and manners of the native Courts, M. Schoeffi has been studiously faithful to the actualities of their splendour: the costumes and liveries are scrupulously correct. The King or Lahore here holding his state levee was Runjeet Singh, the founder of the Monarchy which he had established on the ruins of the Mahomedan, and governed with courage and skill down to his death, which happened in 1839, during a period of nearly fifty years. His son and grandson, Karee and Nonlal, are also present; together with Gonlab Sing, Rajah of Tuccnoca, who is presenting to the Monarch the usual offering, with great pomp, which the latter is stooping from his chair of gold to accept, and who deserves especial mention as the only one of Runjeet Singh's military ministers who has survived the effects of the revolution which, in such a short period, has swept away every vestige of the rule of the then existing nobility. As it is impossible, however, to register the very numerous portraits which the painting includes, we must be content with referring to that of Shere Singh, who held the throne for a few months in 1843, when he perished with his son, being assassinated by Adjit Sing and Lena Sing. To witness these personages, all here assembled in apparent amity, engaged in the celebration of a national fête, must meanwhile be that each is doomed to be the successive victim of perpetual family feuds, provokes reflection and awakens sentiment. There is no safety in that barbarous league—to which, however, the system of civilized Europe are miniscrant; for here are the portraits of many French officers who served in the Punjaub, together with that of the fanatic Fakir who chanted to be buried alive for forty days, and was then taken up in good health—the experiment being made under the superintendence of several officers, both French and English. Such a picture well deserves public examination. We understand that an engraving is now being made of it for Messrs. Bally, of Cornhill. In the same salon there are several other exceedingly curious and interesting pictures by the same artist, connected with Oriental subjects; such as "The Sacred Durbar at Amritsur," "The Tiger Hunt by Shere Singh," and "The Sati." M. Schoeffi's skill in portraiture is eminent. The portraits of the Great Mogul and of Mahomed Ali are striking and characteristic. The artist's fidelity to nature is remarkable; his flesh, in particular, being excellent, with body and blood in it. The pictures, and especially that of the Court of Lahore, have, we understand, already received the approbation of her Majesty, Prince Albert, and Sir Robert Peel.

REVOLUTIONARY PARIS.

A series of six and twenty pictures illustrative of the insurrections of February and June, by Messrs. Gadé, Ferrat, Lebaliff, Bidaux, and Comte Calix, may now be seen at the Cosmorama, Regent-street. The artist here has done their best to depict the horrors of civil and revolutionary warfare, and have indeed presented some scenes of thrilling interest. The value of these sketches is enhanced by the fact of their containing portraits of the principal actors in the transactions to which they relate. Much is made of the episode of the Archbishop of Paris—his proffered mediation—his wounding at the barricades—his giving his cross to the young Garde Mobile his receiving the sacrements, and his death. The pictorial series, in great part, has an evident Conservative tendency; but, upon the whole, justice is fairly done to the insurgents as well as to the constituted powers opposed to them. Without pretensions as works of art, these sketches cannot fail to be instructive, as realising the important events by which last year was made memorable in the history of the world.

PANORAMA OF THE NILE.

A grand moving panoramic picture of the Nile is now being exhibited at the Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, in which the exhibitors profess to have portrayed all the interesting scenes on both sides of the river. It is a large transparency, presenting in succession the pyramids, temples, cities, and grottoes; and occasionally varying the subject by a pictorial scene connected with the manners and customs of the people. The figures and boats pass slowly before the eyes of the spectator; and the way of life in the river and on the desert is amply illustrated. Music is introduced to aid the illusion. In this manner we have the famous [illegible] ay, Belzoni's tomb, the [illegible]s, Memnon's statue, the fountain of Ne[illegible] their voyage, and which is, indeed, the standard song of departure for the Kangras. It occurs, of course, as illustrative of that portion of the picture. We are next carried to Memphis, to Dashour, and thence to Cairo, and the sights of the Theban villages, the Memnonium, the Island of Elephantina, and other places down to the second cataract of the Nile. These scenes form the first part. The second part commences with Cairo, the capital of Egypt, and they have acted an exact copy of it to Mr Gliddon, whose "name" as an Egyptian archæologist and American scamer is, indeed, "a tower of strength," and who, it is said, will exhibit the same throughout the United States, commencing at New York, next October. Mr. Gliddon, it is known, connects with the illustration of his learned and elaborate lectures, with scientific deductions, calculated for the instruction even of the serious student in such matters. It were well if, in this country, similar exhibitions could be made equally useful.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

The performances since our last have been devoted to the débûts of that great vocalist, who, after twenty years absence, has been restored to the stage with such a marvellous preservation of those powers which first earned for her rank and enduring fame. The boldest attempt was to perform Amina, in "La Sonnambula"—a part which, applicable as it is to those every word and every note, has been elaborated, and tortured in the most minute point into novelty of meaning by the greatest vocalists that ever trod the stage; and a character which has but just dropped burning from the hands of the impassioned Lind. The question asked by every one was, whether, in this part, Madame Sontag would prove an imitator; or, spurning stereotyped models of dramatic action and vocalism, would present herself with the original stamp of individuality which characterises the highest order of talent. Those who doubted before, after the performance must then, also, have put to themselves the question, whether Madame Sontag in "Sonnambula" was not the real reading of the character. This great vocalist's interpretation is gentle, fascinating, and throughout truly pastoral. If it be true, as the Italian poet avers, that the deepest feeling is always hushed, and that a whisper will best express the anguish of a bursting heart, the embodiment of this part by Madame Sontag is entitled to the highest admiration—above all, when we reflect that the "Sonnambula" is not a tragedy queen in lyrical heroics, but truly the heroine of a dramatic, but essentially pastoral, opera. The style Madame Sontag, in adopting a reading of the part suited to her own genius, still appeals to the feelings of the audience most powerfully. Her bitter despair is expressed by a dejection of form and of look that denotes the inward agony; and the manner in which she winds round her lover, as she falls withered by his maledictions, at the end of the first act, is a dramatic attitude of exquisite pathos, and is followed by a burst of pure singing, it is perfect—each note bright, limpid, and polished in the extreme. The "internal singing" in the last scena is most exquisitely murmured, pellucid, and thrilling—mysterious scenes reaching to every corner of the house; and then comes, in admirable contrast, the outburst of happiness, and the winding-up of the artistic triumph with the "Ah, non giunge," when the vocalist's voice soared in the air with hard-like flight.

On Thursday, Rossini's chef d'œuvre, "Otello" (so long neglected, that it appears with all the freshness of novelty), was revived, with the principal parts performed by Mdme. Sontag and Sig. Moriani. In this magnificent opera, Madame Sontag finds a part which reveals in her the highest aptitude for the heroic lyrical drama. In the opera she previously performed, she fascinated by her grace, and astonished by her execution; but here she successfully attempts what is lofty—deep, sublime. In those passages of the opera where a great artist is bound to be most chary of ornament, there, by the beauty and the pathos of her accent, as well as by the chaste dignity of her style, she awakens the deepest admiration. Her first chief morceaux, "Si l'onte d'abandonarmi," in monody, accompanied by the utmost [illegible]sity of dramatic feeling and action; and "All'ombra d'un sasce" winds up her interpretation of the noble score in effect which may be pictured the same part to Pasta's Otello (!), and we were struck by the immense addition she has since made to her dramatic powers. On Thursday she appeared most truly as the "pearl richer than a liar tribe." The spectators rejoiced once more in the Semiramide of Lalibache, and the celebrated malediction was uttered with more than the wonted effect. Desirée performed Iago, and was a great accession of strength. Calzolari volunteered to play the secondary part of Rourigo, as on one occasion "il buon Rubini," his master, did before him. Under such circumstances, the performance was throughout triumphant.

At the conclusion of the opera, the audience—who had remained in the deepest silence during the last scene, worked up with a degree of dramatic pathos beyond expression—rose from their seats to summon the great vocalist before the curtain. She came forward with Moriani; she was received with acclamations and a shower of bouquets; and, when she had retired, she was recalled twice more with similar enthusiasm.

DRURY-LANE

We stated last week that a benefit would be taken at this theatre on Wednesday evening, for the benefit of Mr. Kenney, the veteran dramatist. By an extraordinary and melancholy coincidence, the bénéficiaire died on that same morning. The house, nevertheless, it is consoling to add, was well filled, and showed [illegible]pact in which the deceased author was held by the public and his friends. His reputation belongs altogether to the first half of the century. Among the histrionic artistes who gave their services on the occasion were Madame Vestris, Mr. Charles Mathews, Mr. Webster, Miss Woolgar, Mr. Wright, Mr. Sims Reeves, and several foreign artistes, with the principal members of the Lyceum company.

HAYMARKET

Mr. Webster's benefit, on Monday, commanded a crowded house, when Shakspeare's "As you Like it" was performed, the part of Rosalind being charmingly interpreted by Mrs. Keau, who introduced the "Cuckoo Song" with much effect. The character of Jaques was very evenly acted by Mr. Keau; and that of Orlando, by Mr. Wallack, vigorously and gracefully rendered. The play was, indeed, altogether so strongly cast, as to make it the chef d'œuvre of the season. It was followed by the two-act drama of "Flying Colours," acted by members of the Adelphi company—Mdme. Celeste, Miss Woolgar, and Mr. Paul Bedford; Mr. Webster himself supporting the character of Captain Sam Rouch, and, after the play, delivering his "usual farewell address." The season just terminated, he told the audience, had fared some what better than that of 1847-48. The Royal patronage of the drama at Windsor Castle had proved highly advantageous, and enabled him to counteract the influence of foreign competition, in the shape of four houses open for opera at once; and he trusted that things were sufficiently promising to justify him in hoping that he would be able to afford increasing encouragement to British dramatic genius, both in writing and acting —a sentiment which was much applauded.

On Tuesday Mr. Frederick Webster took his benefit, on which occasion Mrs. Keau supported the part of Juliana in the "Honeymoon" which was followed by the "Beggar's Opera" and the farce of "My Aunt." The house was crowded.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The anxiously anticipated new opera, "Le Prophète," was produced on Tuesday night. Its reception in the Italian adaptation was quite as triumphant as that which preceded its first representation in the Théâtre de l'Opéra, in Paris, on the 16th of April last, and of which performance a copious notice appeared in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS on the following Saturday, the 21st. Signal success has, therefore, fallen to the lot of the Chevalier de Meyerbeer, whose fame, in his last masterpiece, both in the French and Italian versions. As in Paris, the excitement here was prodigious; and amateurs and critics from France, Belgium, and Germany, as well as from our distant towns, were present, amongst the latter of whom, Lancashire and Yorkshire were especially remarkable, which filled the house in every part. Between the acts, the saloons and lobbies were crowded with dilettanti of all nations, and the event assumed the aspect of a musical festival. Consequently, the interest was increased by the opera being selected for the first appearance this season of the gifted Viardot. When Costa took his place in the orchestra, he was received with prolonged plaudits of approbation; and these followed the most profound silence, to listen to the short instrumental symphony preceding the drawing up of the curtain. An exquisitely painted Dutch landscape greeted the dramaturgus of satisfaction; and the beautifully scored accompaniments to the opening chorus, describing the gaiety of peasants at the break of day, after a storm, at once asserted the auditory that it was a production of the masterhand of the man who was about to be developed. Jean Hayes, as Berta, the betrothed of Jean of Leyden, entered after the first chorus, and was very well received; and then in the background was seen the figure of Viardot, as Fides, her original part in Paris. She was received with tokens of enthusiastic cheering. In the accompanied recitative between Fides and Berta, there is nothing of note. The three Anabaptists (Mei, Polonini, and Marini), the leaders of the Westphalian revolt, who are in Holland to excite the Dutch peasantry to revolt against the feudal system, now came on the stage, singing in unison a chorale—striving, by religious fanaticism, to move the multitude. Here one of the finest concerted pieces in the opera is heard. The Anabaptist appeal to the mob is responded to with enthusiasm by the peasants; and the choral and instrumental explosion was so grand and overpowering, as to cause the demand for an immediate encore. The musical piece next in importance was a two-part romance, in 6-8 time, in F, charmingly sung by Viardot and Miss Hayes, with a quaint and elegant cadenza at the close. The scene terminates with the seizure of Berta by the Count d'Oberthal (Tagliafico), who claims her as a vassal, and takes offence to the son of Fides. In the second scene of the first act, there is a pretty chorus, with a waltz under-current, and a nice flowing melody in 3-8 time for Jean of Leyden (Mario). In a concerted piece, the three Anabaptists see in the young blacksmith a tool for their political purposes, for Jean is described as a dreamy enthusiast. The grand scena, in which he relates to them his vision of the future, is a magnificent conception, which Mario will do justice to when more familiar with the language. There is a masterly orchestral shadowing of the storm in the scena; the violins muted, and the notes of the flutes in the lower octave, emit the motif of the coronation in the third act. In the pastorale in 9-8 time, with harp accompaniment, "O l'inpero mia sposa," Mario and Sirgeri, vocally. The concerted piece, in which Berta, who has escaped from the Count and takes refuge in Jean's auberge, is resigned by the lover to Oberthal's soldiers, who are about to take the life of Jean's mother, is full of animation. It is succeeded by an impassioned air in F sharp, sung by Viardot with much intensity of feeling, and acted with such simple and unaffected grace, that the house rang with the plaudits. From this moment Viardot commanded every sympathy, and the public has determined to be the favourite of the drama. The quatuor finale terminating the first act comprises the resolve of Jean, at the instigation of the three spirits of evil, the Anabaptist insurgents, to leave his home and to devote his revenge for the destruction of Berta.

The second act of the "Prophète" is more an episode than incidental. The scene of action has changed from Holland to Westphalia, and the Anabaptist insurrection is at its height. Munster, in the depth of winter, is besieged by Jean of Leyden, now a Prophet, and his followers. There is, however, some very fine music in this act—music which must be heard more than once, to be properly appreciated. The grand opening chorus of the conspirators, in which the whole Anabaptists maltreat their prisoners, is very remarkable. There is peculiar quaintness in the arrival of the skaters, bringing provisions to the Anabaptist camp. The ballet music, however, was too much cut down, and the "Pas de Bolèwa" and "Pas du Galop" ought to be much curtailed. The "Quadrille des Patineurs" was admirably executed, especially by the children-skaters. Meyerbeer's dance music is most exhilarating and captivating; the skating quadrille, with its double rhythm, that of the impulsion and that of the melody, is finely conceived. One of the most superb morceaux in the opera is in this act —a comic trio for a tenor and two basses; but it was not done justice to, owing to Mr. Hines. For the same reason, the fine music of the three Anabaptists suffered more or less throughout the opera. The finale, in which Jean of Leyden, after learning from Oberthal, whose life he saves, that Berta is in Munster, ecstatically adheres to the assault by a prayer and hymn, was also very fervid and imposing, and will be more so when Mario has more confidence in his powers. The success which had attended the first and second acts was unquestionable, but in the second, it became triumphant.

The third act opens in Munster, now in the possession of Jean of Leyden. This scene is one of the most artistical paintings ever seen on a stage, and it will bear the severest criticism. The opening chorus of citizens, despairing of their fears at the invaders, is full of character. The wail of the mendicant, in E minor, in 3-4 time, so touchingly sung by Viardot, is a lovely melody. Fides asks alms in the double rhythm, that of the impulsion and that of the melody, is finely conceived. One of the most superb morceaux in the opera is in this act —a comic trio for a tenor and two basses; but it was not done justice to, owing to Mr. Hines. For the same reason, the fine music of the three Anabaptists suffered more or less throughout the opera. The finale, in which Jean of Leyden, after learning from Oberthal, whose life he saves, that Berta is in Munster, ecstatically adheres to the assault by a prayer and hymn, was also very fervid and imposing, and will be more so when Mario has more confidence in his powers. The success which had attended the first and second acts was unquestionable, but in the second, it became triumphant.

The third act opens in Munster, now in the possession of Jean of Leyden. This scene is one of the most artistical paintings ever seen on a stage, and it will bear the severest criticism. The opening chorus of citizens, despairing of their fears at the invaders, is full of character. The wail of the mendicant, in E minor, in 3-4 time, so touchingly sung by Viardot, is a lovely melody. Fides asks alms in the double rhythm, that of the impulsion and that of the melody, is finely conceived. One of the most superb morceaux in the opera is in this act —a comic trio for a tenor and two basses; but it was not done justice to, owing to Mr. Hines. For the same reason, the fine music of the three Anabaptists suffered more or less throughout the opera. SCENE FROM MEYERBEER'S OPERA OF "LE [illegible]" AT THE ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—THE CORONATION banquet, in the last scene, and, singing a bacchanalian air, he perishes (his mother joining him in death) in the midst of the conflagration and explosion.

The "Prophète" is another instance of Meyerbeer's departure from operatic conventionalities. He makes maternal affection the dominant interest. In future notices the music of this opera must be analysed. The thanks of the musical public are due to Mr. Beale for having been the principal mover in the production of this sublime work, and to Mr. Costa for having so ably superintended its execution. The spectacle has been capitally arranged by Mr. Harris. The orchestra and chorus performed their functions to perfection. The recalls before the curtain at the end of the opera were, Viardot and Mario, and then Costa and Miss Hayes.

On Thursday, for the extra night, "Le Prophète" was given for the second time.

TERRIFIC STORM.

On Thursday, from one o'clock P.M. to half-past three, the metropolis was visited by a tremendous storm of lightning and thunder. The wind rose, and for some minutes blew a hurricane; the rain fell in sheets and torrents, and there were showers of hailstones of unusually large size. The vividness of the lightning, and the deep roar and rattling crash of the thunder were truly appalling, the whole presenting a terrific spectacle rarely witnessed in our climate. The last storm approaching it in violence was that on August 1, 1846.

While the storm raged, the electric fluid struck some chimney-tops in the Borough, Lambeth, the Commercial-road, &c.; and at the goods station of the Eastern Counties Railway a young man was struck dead. In Whitechapel, also, a young man named Thomas Johnson, while speaking to another person named Callon, was also killed; Callon being greatly stunned, but not otherwise injured by the shock. Accidents of a minor nature took place in other parts of the metropolis also, particularly at Mile-end, Stepney, and the Tower Hamlets.

Earlier in the week, two melancholy deaths occurred by lightning. On Tuesday, Mr. Martin William Ffolkes, eldest son of Sir William Ffolkes, Bart., of Hillington, Norfolk, was fishing in the neighbourhood of Fakenham, with a friend; and the latter, having left him for some time, was told that his companion was lying fast asleep by the road-side. He returned, and found that his young friend had been struck dead by lightning. Mr. Ffolkes, thus suddenly snatched away, was very much respected. He was in his 31st year; and married, in March, 1843, Henrietta, second daughter of the late General Sir C Wale.

On Wednesday, we learn that a soldier was struck dead by lightning, at Woolwich

The storm of Thursday, in its intensity, approached the violence of a tropical tempest, such as is engraved from a sketch taken by one of our artists in Grenada. In this scene, the fury of the hurricane, the descending torrents of rain, swelling the mighty flood beneath; and the forked lightning momentarily illuminating the whole scene, and revealing its dark terrors—all form a spectacle as sublime as appalling.

The characteristics of a thunder-storm in the West India Islands are thus described by an eye-witness:—The noise of the wind through the apertures formed by it, the peals of thunder, and the rapidly-repeated flashes of lightning (more like sheets of fire), and the impenetrable darkness which succeeds them, the crash of walls, roofs, and beams, are all mixed in the appalling confusion of the hurricane. The whole atmosphere at one time presents the appearance of livid flame, such is the immense body of electric matter in the heavens; this appearance being quite distinct from the lightning, which comes in alternate sheets and forks. Such a hurricane has been known to last in its utmost fury eight hours

TERRIFIC STORM IN GRENADA.

"THE MURDERERS OF THOMAS CHASE OF AMERSHAM DRAWING UP 'THE LETTER TO THE CLERGY.'"—PAINTED BY E. H. CORBOULD.—(NEW SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER-COLOURS.)

We this week engrave Mr. E. H Corbould's finest work in the Exhibition of the New Society of Painters in Water-colours, which closes this day. The picture is most powerfully painted, and equally remarkable for its masses of colour and the high finish of the flesh.

In the catalogue, the scene is designated "The Murderers of Thomas Chase of Amersham, drawing up the letter to the Clergy." Appended is the following epigraph:—

"After that these stinging vipers (being of the wicked brood of Antichrist) had thus most cruelly and impiously murthered this faithfull Christian, they were at their wits end, and could not tell what shift to make to cloke their shamefull murther withall: at last, to blinde the ignorant silly people, these butchers most slandrously caused it, by their ministers, to be bruted abroad, that the foresaid Thomas Chase had hanged himself in prison, which was a most shamefull and abominable lie, for the prison was such that a man could not stand upright, nor lie at ease, but stooping, as they doe report that did know it. And, besides, that this man had so many manicles and irons upon him that he could not well moove either hand or foot, as the woman did declare that saw him dead. Chase suffered martyrdom in the Bishop's prison, called 'Little-ease' at Wooburne, under William Smith, Bishop of Lincolne, A.D. 1506."—Fox's Book of Martyrs.

THE WAR IN HUNGARY.

THE accounts from the seat of war are of the usual contradictory character; the Vienna journals, as usual, suppressing or falsifying any intelligence favourable to the Magyar cause. It is certain, however, that the Hungarian forces under Görgey have succeeded in breaking through the "vicious circle" of Imperial troops by which they had been hemmed in, and have marched a large body of troops to the north, after having completely routed the Russians under Genera Sass, on the 17th instant

In the south the Hungarian operations have been equally successful under Bem, who, in a general engagement at St. Thomas, with the Ban Jellachich, completely crushed the Croat hordes. The Ban was driven over the Danube into Syrmia and the Servian Chief Knicanin was forced to leave his position at Titel.

One of the first consequences of this victory will be the relief of Peterwardein

In the prefixed Illustration, our Artist has portrayed a troop of Hungarian Artillery, with a view of a portion of Raab in the distance.

MUNICIPAL BOROUGHS, IRELAND.—The total amount received by the various municipal boroughs in Ireland, for municipal purposes, during the past year, was £77,951 5s. 0d., and the expenditure amounted to £75,359 16s. 2d. leaving a balance in the hands of the treasurer of £2623 9s. 7d. The disbursements are thus detailed:—Loans paid off with interest, £23,562; public works and repairs, £11,323; watching, paving, cleansing, and lighting, £5972; rents, rates, taxes, and insurance, £5921 19s. 4d.; salaries and allowances to municipal officers, £18,159 3s. 2d.; municipal elections, £1173 14s. 10d.; charities £717 7s. 10d.; law expenses, £2685; printing, &c., £1044 3s. 2d.; miscellaneous, £2544 7s. 6d.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SATURDAY, JULY 21.

The House met on Saturday last, at twelve o'clock.
A new writ was ordered to be issued for London.

THE WAR IN HUNGARY.

On bringing up the report of the Committee of Ways and Means, Mr. B. OSBORNE moved for papers connected with the advance of the Russian troops into the kingdom of Hungary. He declared that the contest at present raging was one between despotism and liberty

Mr. M. MILNES, Mr. ROEBUCK, Colonel THOMPSON, and Mr. M'GREGOR followed in speeches laudatory of the Hungarians and their constitution.

Lord C. HAMILTON contended that the so much eulogised Hungarian constitution was a monstrous engine of despotism.

Lord PALMERSTON took the occasion to reply to the charges brought against him in the House of Peers on Friday night. The noble Lord said that an accusation had been brought against him that he entertained unfriendly feelings towards Austria, and that his foreign policy was marked by personal hatreds and dislikes. To such an imputation he would reply that, if it were made in sincerity, it could be traceable only to ignorance or folly; and if it were made in malice only, he should leave to others the task of designating it. Much had been said about Austria being the ancient ally of Great Britain, but every country with which we were on friendly terms was an ally; and though undoubtedly there were long subsisting friendly relations between this country and Austria, more than once Austria had been compelled to break our alliance. Austria was an important element in the balance of power in Europe, as a barrier between encroachment on the one hand, and invasion on the other, and the preservation of Austria was therefore of the highest consequence. Having had a fling at certain "old women," and talked of their "antiquated imbecility," the noble Foreign Secretary remarked that Austria had become an extraordinary favorite with parties who had lately folded France in their embrace, but who now were charmed with Austria because they considered the Government of that country the symbol of arbitrary principles. With regard to the Hungarian nation, he believed that it had enlisted on its side the hearts and the wishes of the whole people, and he asserted that it was a separate nation though under the crown of Austria. The question at issue was whether Hungary was to preserve its ancient national liberty or be amalgamated and become an integral part of Austria. It was painful to witness the warfare now proceeding in Hungary; but whatever way war, if allowed to go on, might end, Austria could not fail to be weakened. It was therefore desirable for the sake of Europe generally that this war in Hungary should be brought, if possible, to an amicable termination. No opportunity had as yet presented itself for the Government to give any official (as distinguished from private) expression of opinion on this question; but, should a fitting opportunity occur, it would be the duty of the Government to seize it, and to state their views, with the hope of leading to a satisfactory arrangement. He did not think that the free expression of opinion on the part of England upon the affairs of other countries in any way endangered the preservation of peace, for he held that opinions were stronger than arms, and that, if right, they would in all cases eventually prevail. This country should not interfere so far as to endanger our relations with other states, but we could not remain passive spectators of such events as those now passing in Hungary; and it would be the duty of the Government to take advantage of any opportunity that might present itself to offer its counsels of friendship and peace, but in such a manner as not to commit us to embark in the quarrels. In reply to the taunt about "sham mediations," the noble Lord referred to the preliminary treaty between Denmark and Germany, just concluded, to prove that his mediations had sometimes real substantial results. With respect to the motion for papers, no official despatches had been received.

After some observations from Lord D. STUART and Mr. WYLD,

Mr. B. OSBORNE withdrew his motion, and the report of the Committee of Ways and Means was received.

Some unopposed bills on the table were forwarded a stage.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

The Lunatic Asylums (Ireland) Bill passed through committee, on the motion of the Marquis of CLANRICARDE.

STOCK IN TRADE.

The Earl GRANVILLE moved the second reading of the Stock in Trade Bill.

The Earl of MALMESBURY pointed out the injustice of the present mode of assessing the rates for the poor—an injustice that was greatly aggravated by the results of recent legislation. A vast mass of property was exempted from assessment to the poor-rates that ought in all fairness to contribute to the support of the poor, and the whole burden fell now on real property. The noble Earl said he could not object to this bill, as it was a temporary one, and as the Government had given a pledge to consider the whole question of rating to the poor before another year

After a few remarks from the Duke of Richmond, Lord Stanley, Lord Colchester, and Lord Campbell,

The Duke of RICHMOND drew the attention of the Government to the justice of extending the distribution of medals to the officers and men who had served in all the naval and military actions for which the thanks of Parliament had been voted; and moved for some returns connected therewith.

After some observations from Earl GREY, the Duke of WELLINGTON, and Lord COLCHESTER, the returns were ordered.

The Highway Rates Bill, on the motion of Earl GRANVILLE, passed through Committee.

THE CONDUCT OF BUSINESS IN PARLIAMENT.

Lord CAMPBELL having moved the second reading of the Small Debts Act Amendment Bill,

Lord STANLEY took that opportunity of protesting against the course of legislation adopted this year, and which had been the subject of complaint for some years past. They were within a week of the expiration of Parliament, and their Lordships were called upon to discuss the whole code

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

Her Majesty the Queen, and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, have entertained during the past week, at Osborne, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Kent and the Duke and Duchess of Nemours. Lord and Lady Blomfield, Sir Hamilton Seymour, and the Baroness de Speth have also had the honour of joining the Royal circle.

On Monday evening the Queen gave a concert, at which Herr Pischek and M. Formes assisted, Mrs. A— arson presiding at the pianoforte.

On Tuesday her Majesty, Prince Albert, the Duchess of Kent, and the Court proceeded off Ryde, in the Royal steam-yacht Fairy, to witness the sports of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club Regatta, of which club her Majesty and the Prince are patrons.

On Wednesday, his Royal Highness Prince Albert left Osborne, attended by Colonel the Hon. C. B. Phipps and Colonel Seymour, at half-past seven, and proceeded in the Fairy yacht to Southampton, en route to Portland, where his Royal Highness laid the first stone of the proposed Breakwater.

Colonel Grey has relieved Lord Aifred Paget as Equerry in Waiting on her Majesty.

RURAL FETE AT OSBORNE.

On Saturday afternoon, the annual fête given by her Majesty the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert to the labourers and others employed at Osborne, and to the seamen of the Royal yacht, took place in the park of her Majesty's marine residence.

Dinner was served in tents at three o'clock precisely, to which about 350 persons sat down; and shortly after, the Queen and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, accompanied by their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales, the Princess Royal, Prince Alfred, Princess Alice, Princess Helena, and the Duke and Duchess of Nemours, and attended by the ladies and gentlemen of the household, proceeded to the ground, and walked through the tents in which the happy guests were dining.

After dinner the healths of her Majesty and his Royal Highness were proposed by Mr. Toward, her Majesty's steward, who presided upon the occasion, and heartily responded to by the cheers of those assembled.

After dinner, the sports of the afternoon commenced with a dance upon the green. The ground was decorated with tents, flags, and banners, and the weather being very fine, the whole scene was one of gaiety and happiness.

The bands of the Marines and of the 77th Regiment alternately played to the merry dancers.

Her Majesty and his Royal Highness, together with the younger branches of the Royal Family, and the Royal guests, honoured the fête with their presence during the whole afternoon, and appeared much to enjoy the mirth, happiness, and good-humour of their joyous country-people, servants, and sailors.

At half-past seven the sports ceased. The large concourse of people separated in the most orderly manner, and in less than half an hour the Royal pleasure-grounds had resumed their usual appearance of quiet and retirement.

The Queen and the Prince Consort have taken their accustomed early walking exercise during the week, except when prevented by the inclemency of the weather.

His Excellency Chevalier Bunsen arrived at Osborne on Thursday, on a visit to the Queen and the Prince Consort.

The Duke and Duchess of Marlborough arrived at Rotterdam last week, in their yacht, the Wyvern, from Dover. His Grace, accompanied by the Duchess, is making a tour in Holland.

The Marchioness of Normanby has arrived in London, from the British Embassy at Paris.

The Earl of Lincoln, at the close of the session, intends to leave England on a tour of several months. The noble Earl has recently purchased a yacht, which, at this moment, is being fitted out.

The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his customary entertainment to the officers of the House of Commons on Saturday last, preparatory to the close of the Parliamentary session.

The Prince of Canino has arrived in town, from Havre.

PROROGATION OF PARLIAMENT.—It is now generally understood in official quarters, that her Majesty's Ministers will visit the Queen, at Osborne House, on Monday next, and that, on the following day, Tuesday, the 31st inst., Parliament will be prorogued by commission.

The Ministerial fish-dinner, which usually precedes the prorogation of Parliament, will take place at the Trafalgar, Greenwich, on Saturday (this day).

Her Majesty, after settling the Speech from the Throne, and the Royal commission for the prorogation, is expected to sail from Osborne, on the 1st of August, en route for Cork, Dublin, Belfast, and Scotland.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL LOFT.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL JOHN HENRY LOFT, who formerly represented the borough of Stamford in Parliament, was a distinguished officer of the Peninsular War. He served through nearly the whole of its campaigns, and (with the exception of Waterloo, a few days before which he had been despatched on other service) he was in almost every battle under Wellington on the Continent of Europe. The gallant General was a High Tory of the Rt. Honourable type, was a personal friend of that celebrated statesman. General Loft was a total abstainer from intoxicating drinks. His death has occurred at a very advanced age.

THE HON. EDWARD STAFFORD JERNINGHAM.

THE decease of this gentleman took place at Carlton Villas, on the 22nd instant. He was the second son of the present Lord Stafford, by Frances, his wife, daughter and coheir of the late Edward Sulyarde, Esq., of Haughley Park, county of Suffolk.

At the period of his death Mr. Jerningham had not quite completed his 45th year. He married, 16th June, 1836, Marianne, daughter of the late John Smythe, and niece of Mrs. Fitzherbert, so well known in the time of George IV., and by her he leaves the eldest son being Augustus-Frederick-Fitzherbert, born 28th June, 1830.

JAMES KENNEY.

THIS distinguished dramatic author, who has been for more than forty years a popular writer of plays, was a native of Ireland. He early in life was engaged in an eminent banking-house, but soon relinquished this position for literature. His first production, published in 1803, was "Society—a Poem;" he also brought out other pieces, but afterwards devoted almost exclusively to writing for the stage. Here his success was very great, and of very long duration: as an author of farces and melodramas, he had few to surpass him. Among his most known productions we may mention "Raising the Wind," "Matrimony," "Too many Cooks spoil the Broth," "Fila Rosenberg," "False Alarms," and "Sweethearts and Wives."

After a long life thus employed in the amusement of others, Mr. Kenney shared the too frequent fate of authorship. His circumstances did not prosper; and, in some measure to better them, a benefit was got up for him by his friends, which brought crowds to Drury-Lane. But, alas! this kindness came too late: the dramatist breathed his last on the 26th instant, the very morning before the benefit. He leaves a widow and family to deplore his loss.

HORACE SMITH (whose death we recorded last week) had long been a resident of Brighton, where he took a warm interest in the affairs of the poor. For very many years he was connected with most of the charitable institutions in the town, but more particularly with the Sussex County Hospital, of which he was a Governor as well as one of its most active managing committee.

NEW CHURCH IN WEST BROMPTON.—A plan of the new church so long required in this locality has been prepared by Mr. George Gwilt, architect; and the building will be commenced immediately, on the site given by R. Gunter, Esq. The first stone will be laid on Friday, August 3.

PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—On Wednesday, the anniversary festival of this most benevolent institution was held at the London Tavern, J. J. Rosbrook, Esq., M.P., in the chair, supported by Mr. Richard Taylor, Luke Hansard, Esq., &c. In the course of the evening Mr. R. Taylor, the treasurer, stated that the subscriptions received in the room amounted to £400.

EGYPTIAN MEDICAL HONOURS.—The distinguished surgeon Clot Bey has resigned his posts of Inspector-General of the Medical Department and President of the Council of Health in Egypt, preparatory to his retirement to his native country (France). Abbas Pacha, the viceroy, has issued a firman designating Clot Bey as most honourable, skilful, and distinguished, and as his most faithful friend; that, in consideration of his services, the half of the annual income, 16,000 francs, allowed Clot Bey, shall be retained by him for life; and that it should die before his three children attain their majority, one-fourth of the annuity is to be allotted them; and, as a further testimony to his abilities, the Pacha confirms him in the post of hereditary general, and presents the insignia of the rank, ordering it to be set on diamonds.

OPERATIONS OF THE COUNTY COURTS.—On Saturday a Parliamentary return was printed, showing the operations of the county courts. Since their establishment, from March, 1847, to the 31st of December last, the amount sued for in the courts, in the period of twenty-one months, was about £2,700,000 In the first nine months, from March to December, 1847, there were 429,215 plaints entered; and in last year, 827,511: of the former, only 267,448 were tried: of the latter, 526,148. Last year the total officers' fees were £234,274, of which the judges' fees were £57,661 16s. 8d., and the 60 are now paid £1000 a year. The costs at 8396 days in the year. The sum-cost of costs in the year was £198,989 12s. 5d. There was £66,352 18s. 1d. paid into court without proceeding to judgment. The gross total received as judges' fees, bailiffs' fees, clerks' fees, the general fund, and the suitors' fund, amounted to £534,860 13s. 9d. There were 884 cases tried by a jury. In 446 cases the party requiring a jury obtained a verdict. The total amount for which plaints were entered last year in the 491 county courts was £1,34 ,802, of which £86,292 was paid into court before trial. The total amount of the sums for which judgment was obtained in the 259,118 cases tried, was £702,843. At the Clerkenwell County Court there were 15,504 plaints entered in the year, the largest number in one court.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The General Board of Health, at a full board on Saturday last, received the President of the Academy of Medicine in France, M. Magendie, on a mission of enquiry from the French Government as to the progress and treatment of cholera in England. M. Magendie was accompanied by Dr. M'Laughlin. Professor Owen, and Mr. Hodgson, of the College of Surgeons, were present at the conference.

From returns just made by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, it appears that the total number of omnibuses now plying for hire in the metropolis is 3000, who pay duty, including mileage, averaging £9 per month each, or £324,000 per annum. The number of conductors and drivers is about 7000, who pay annually £1750 for their licences.

The following is an auctioneering estimate of Mr. Hudson's estates about being brought under the hammer:—Londsborough (bought of the Duke of Devonshire), £470,000; Baldersby, £108,000; Ostor. Grange, £26,000; Newby Park, £22,000; Gibraltar House at Albert Gate, £18,000, making a total amount invested in lands and houses alone within a trifle of £700,000.

PRIZE CATTLE, AT THE ROYAL AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY'S SHOW, AT NORWICH.

HEREFORD.—1ST PRIZE, £40. CATTLE OF ANY BREED.—1ST PRIZE, £30.

In our Journal of last week we chronicled, as fully as our limits would allow, the proceedings of this Anniversary Meeting. Our space will not permit the insertion in full of the List of Prizes awarded by the Judges. We have engraved portraits of Cattle from the First Class, and of Horses from the First and Second Classes.

The Stock is generally allowed to have been equal to that of any previous Exhibition, and in numbers it exceeded the entries at York, last year, by 130. Latterly, considerable efforts have been made to introduce through the eastern counties the purest breeds, both of sheep and cattle; and the list of prizes shows the matter to be in good hands. In the breeding of horses for agricultural purposes, Suffolk stands pre-eminent; and this department of the Exhibition was, accordingly, a splendid one. The stallion which carried off the highest prize in the first class was a very fine creature.

The show of short horns and Devons was excellent; that of Herefords was rather inferior. The bull of Mr. Tod, of Elphinstone Tower, Tranent, Scotland, excited universal admiration. His great size, beauty of form, and docility made him the principal object of attraction. In the sheep department there was an unequalled exhibition of Southdowns; and the shearling ewes in particular were, in the opinion of the best judges, never surpassed. The Leicester and long-woolled sheep were of a very high character. In pigs of the large breeds the show did not reach high, but the smaller breeds were better, and Mr. Fisher Hobbs exhibited some porkers, which, as far as the species go, were models of symmetry.

A more important collection of agricultural machines never before was assembled together in one yard. There were, perhaps, fewer novelties than usual, but there were also fewer absurdities. Again, the workmanship displayed was of a very improving order, a result which is doubtless to be attributed to the influence exercised by the meetings of this Society in exciting the exertions of the implement-makers on the one hand, and inducing the patronage of the farmer on the other. The tile-making machines and the steam-engines appear to have been most attractive.

The great features of the Norwich show were the Rev. Mr. Sidney's lecture on the Parasitic Fungi of the Farm, delivered in the Crown Court, in the Shire Hall. In the afternoon, Professor Simonds delivered in the County Court a lecture on the Anatomy, Physiology, and Diseases of the Respiratory Organs in Domesticated Animals, particularly with reference to Pleuro-pneumonia in the Ox." In the evening, the Council dinner took place in St. Andrew's Hall, and was very numerously and influentially attended; the Earl of Chichester, President of the Society, in the chair.

On Thursday, the great dinner took place in St. Andrew's Hall; the Earl of Chichester presiding. Covers were laid for 900 guests. After the usual loya' easts, the Earl of Orford, in an appropriate speech, proposed "Success to the Royal Agricultural Society of England," which was drunk amidst the loudest applause. Mr. Wodehouse then proposed "Agriculture, Manufactures, and Commerce." The Duke of Richmond was received with tremendous cheering, and having mounted on the table, in a speech which was remarkably well received, proposed "the Mayor and Corporation of Norwich," for which Mr. S Bignold, the Mayor, returned thanks.

The Bishop of Norwich then proposed the health of his noble friend the Earl of Chichester, whose Christian zeal in behalf of many excellent and benevolent societies in London he warmly eulogised. The right rev. prelate, in a highly characteristic speech, traced the connexion between the Church and the land, and concluded by calling on the company to drink their chairman's health with three times three. The toast having been very heartily responded to,

The Chairman returned thanks, and having explained that business or indisposition had prevented three or four of the Foreign Ministers from being present, he noticed in a complimentary manner that the Society was honoured with the presence of many gentlemen from other countries. His Lordship then, in a judicious address, proposed "The Health of the Labouring Classes," adding that he need not remind the company that in the toast were included all the classes who earned their bread by the sweat of their brow. Whether labouring in the cellar, in the factory, or at the plough, they well deserved the care of the society and good-will. If they were duly attended to, and received a moral and religious education, they would become sound and useful members of the community. (Loud cheers.)

The toast was very cordially responded to.

Mr. Barroughes, M.P., proposed "The Judges of stock and the Judges of implements."

Mr. Taylor returned thanks.

The Earl of Leicester then proposed "Prosperity to the Highland Agricultural Society of Scotland, and the Royal Agricultural Society of Ireland." As a native of Norfolk, he could not help expressing his delight at the results of that day's exhibition, and his conviction that the eastern counties would greatly benefit by the visit which the Royal Agricultural Society had honoured them with.

The Duke of Richmond returned thanks, alluding to the benefits which the Agricultural Society of Scotland had conferred upon that country, and to its popularity amongst all classes, tenants and farmers.

The Marquis of Downshire shortly returned thanks, and proposed "The Railway Companies, and thanks to them for the facilities they have afforded to the society."

The toast was warmly responded to by the company, who separated immediately after.

The proceedings of the Society for the present year were next morning wound up with the annual general meeting of the members, when the usual formal business was transacted. It is calculated that the number of persons admitted to the show-yards by half-crown tickets, on Thursday, amounted to nearly 12,000; and by shilling tickets, after two o'clock, to upwards of 10,000; and that, on the previous day, to the implement-yard alone, there were more than 4000. During the week, the railway trains conveyed to Norwich no less than 40,000 passengers, independently of the through traffic; and on Thursday and Friday, 100 additional carriages were placed upon the lines for the accommodation of the public. All the locomotive arrangements were perfect: Mr. Betts, the new chairman of the Eastern Counties Railway, accompanied by the board of directors, and Mr. Roney, their active, intelligent, and respected secretary, being themselves upon the spot, engaged in the personal superintendence thereof.

To the admirable arrangements of the Managing Director, Mr. T. B. Gibbs, was owing, in a great degree, the satisfactory manner in which the whole affair went off.

TESTIMONIAL PRESENTED TO MR. MITCHELL.

THE patrons of the French Plays lately presented to Mr. Mitchell, the spirited lessee of the St. James's Theatre, a very splendid testimonial of the high estimation in which his exertions are held.

The Testimonial consists of a silver plateau, 2 feet 4 inches by 2 feet 4 inches, with an enriched scroll border, within which, in scroll frame-work, is represented a bust of Voltaire, with an illustration of "Tancredi;" Racine, "Phædre;" Corneille, "Les Horaces;" and Molière, "Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme;" designed by Howard.

In the centre of the plateau is inscribed—

CANDELABRUM PRESENTED TO MR. MITCHELL, LESSEE OF THE ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

"Presented to Mr. Mitchell by the patrons of the St. James's Theatre, as a testimonial of the zeal, liberality, and good faith which have characterised his management of the French Plays."

In addition to the plateau, is a magnificent silver-gilt candelabrum for twelve lights, which we have engraved; and displaying the armorial bearings of Mr. Mitchell, with a terse sentence of compliment.

Both plateau and candelabrum are the exquisite manufacture of Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, and cost about £[illegible].

The presentation of this superb testimonial has been already recorded in our Journal.

ACCIDENT WITH THE NASSAU BALLOON.

ON Wednesday evening Mr. Green made an ascent in the Nassau Balloon from Vauxhall Gardens, which was nearly attended with loss of human life.

The monster balloon having been fully inflated, Mr. Green and a party of ladies and gentlemen took their seats, seven persons in the car and four on the hoop, which is seven feet above the car; and the machine having been released, it rose majestically. Upon gaining a certain altitude, it took a south-easterly direction; when suddenly, as it was passing over the Westminster-road, it was observed to rock to and fro, and a large quantity of ballast was thrown out. The balloon, however, kept falling until within a few feet of the house-tops in the Waterloo-road. It cleared that thoroughfare, and came sealing down Gaywood-street, barely escaping the chimneys of the houses; when, on reaching the London-road, it bowed first on one side, then on the other; and, finally, the hoop struck the parapet of the house No. 94, tore down the brickwork and a portion of a stack of chimneys. The concussion was so great that it threw three of the gentlemen, who were seated on the hoop, upon the house-top; but no one in the car sustained the slightest injury. The balloon was with some difficulty extricated, and, as it ascended, one of the gentlemen managed to climb up the rope—a work of no small difficulty—and having [illegible] car again, the balloon ascended [illegible] a direction towards Bromley [illegible], it was quickly out of sight; and the gentlemen on the house-top descended, without having sustained any injury. The balloon ultimately descended in a field near Erith Church, none of the affrighted travellers having suffered beyond the shock which an occurrence of such a dangerous character must neces[illegible]

[illegible]ent, as explained to [illegible] Mr. [illegible] somewhat curious. A balloon during its ascent is alternately changing its shape: by the expansion of the gas, as the balloon rises into a more rarified atmosphere, it assumes the apple shape; again, by the necessary opening of the valve, to permit the escape of a portion of the expanded gas, the balloon becomes elongated, and assumes the pear shape. The cord attached to the valve on the top of the balloon passes through the centre. It appears that Mr. Green's nephew had the care of this cord, and did not allow it to escape through his hand with the longitudinal expansion of the balloon: the consequence of which was the opening of the valve, and the sudden escape of at least 14,000 feet of gas; the balloon, when full, containing upwards of 70,000 feet.

ACCIDENT TO THE NASSAU BALLOON IN THE LONDON-ROAD, ON WEDNESDAY.

GRAND SIEGE OPERATIONS AT CHATHAM.

ON Saturday, this great engineering spectacle (announced long since, and postponed in consequence of the illness of Col. Wearé) took place at Chatham, on a scale of grandeur and completeness rarely witnessed.

The engineer works and operations, and the general arrangements for the Attack and Defence, were entrusted to Col Sir Frederick Smith, K.H and F.R.S., Royal Engineers, Director of the Royal Engineer Establishment. The Attack was led by the Royal Artillery, commanded by Captain Mackinnon and Lieutenant Batchelor; and the attack, by Captains Percy Scott and Papillon, assisted by Lieutenants Close and Hope.

A brilliant staff of general and field-officers were present, including the Marquis of Anglesea, Viscount Hardinge, Sir John Burgoyne, Major-General Fox, and Sir Frederick Smith. They visited every part of the lines where the operations were in progress, and appeared highly satisfied with everything they saw.

The élite of the company were accommodated with cards of admission to the Belvedere Battery and the Casemate No. 1, whence upon the whole the best view could be obtained of the general scene. Amongst those were—Prince George of Cambridge, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, the Duke of Leeds, the Earl of Cardigan, Viscount Canning, Viscount Newport, Viscount Cantilupe, Lord J. Murray, Admiral Elliott, Admiral Dundas and Lady Emily Dundas, Lord G. Fitzgerald, Mr. Hubert de Burgh Colonel Lockyer Freestun, M.P., the Hon. W. Scarlett, the Earl of Darnley, the Hon. M and Mr. D. Astley, Major-General Astley, Mr Grenfell, M.P., Mr. Moffatt, M.P., Mr. Ross, M.P., Sir W. Fraser, the Hon. F. Charteris, M.P., and the Hon C. Hardinge. Lord F. Fitzclarence, the Hon. Captain Berkeley M.P., the Hon. W. Fitzroy, M.P., and others, accompanied the staff in the inspection of the operations.

The spectators could not have amounted to less than 60,000 to 70,000.

Above any other place in the kingdom, Chatham is admirably adapted for the purposes of such an exhibition as took place on Saturday. It comprises a large garrison, being the great depôt of our military establishment, and the head quarters of troops on their way to, or their return from, the different parts of our colonial empire. Here, therefore, there is a greater number of regiments represented, and a more complete type of the various elements which go to make up the British army, than in any other of our military stations at home. The engineer and artillery departments of the service also have here their strongholds. The dockyards employ 2000 artisans. The force stationed here or in the neighbourhood is rendered easily available for such an occasion; and, altogether, without saying anything as to the results of a real siege, for the purposes of a sham siege the situation of Chatham has pre-eminent advantages.

To understand the operations of Saturday, it must be supposed that an army having originally captured the outer line of works, and carried on an attack upon the citadel (which represents the works rendering Fort Pitt and Prince Frederick's to the Terrace bastion), has been suddenly obliged to raise the siege for the purpose of giving battle to a force which had approached to the relief of the place; and that the besieging forces having been recalled from the country desired to renew the siege of the citadel. It is assumed, also, that during the absence of the besiegers the garrison have mined some of the batteries of the attack, have prepared countermines under the trenches, and are determined to resist any attempt to escalade the outer line.

The first part consisted of an unsuccessful attempt to carry the right of Chatham Lines by escalade. This was in that direction were defended by a company of the Royal Artillery on the extreme right, the Provisional Battalion and Enrolled Pensioners in the centre, and a company of the Royal Sappers and Miners on the left, the whole lining the parapets from the Gunwharf to the Spur. The flanks and salients were armed with ordnance, and manned by two companies of the Royal Artillery. So much for the force of the besieged. The assaulting columns, on the other hand, consisted of the 17th Regiment on the left, the Royal Marine Artillery and Royal Marines in the centre, and the Royal Sappers and Miners on the right. On the signal being given, the three columns rushed forward simultaneously, and with admirable precision. Skirmishers were thrown out, and the cover which the ground afforded used as far as practicable. The Sappers, advancing along the side of the hill, and sheltering themselves from the fire of the fortress, descended into the ditch, but were there pulled up by a hedge which they were unable to get through. The Marines were equally unfortunate, the left wing being beaten by a high wall, and the right, after descending into the ditch, and scaling the counterscarp, to get a footing on the ramp, driven back by the vigorous resistance of the besieged, to retire. The 17th Regiment also descended into the ditch, but there found that their scaling ladders were too short, and the counterscarp too strong for any chance of success; and so this failure withdrew. Within and without the lines, nothing could be more praiseworthy than the manner in which the men went through their evolutions. Without, the attacking columns were received with a shower of small arms, hedges, a high wall, and short scaling-ladders were the real causes of the retreat, and not the slightest taint rests upon the honour of the corps engaged. In fact, they seemed to court destruction, and scarcely escaped it. Within and on the lines, at them by the besieged was what no one present could perfectly understand. The details of this first operation were in all respects admirably performed, and the general appreciation. The scene at this time was grand. From the height at which the lines attacked stand, and the evolutions of the troops in swarming themselves of the shelter which the ground afforded.

The second portion of the day's proceedings was a far more elaborate one than the first, and consisted of a successful assault and escalade of the left of Chatham Lines, and in further operations leading to the reduction of the place. The garrison was formed of a squadron of cavalry, two companies of the Royal Artillery, one company of the Sappers and Miners, four companies of the Enrolled Pensioners, and the Provisional Battalion. The columns of attack were the same as in the escalade of the right of the lines, with the addition of two companies of the Royal Artillery and a small force from the island and the north side of St. Mary's Creek. A portion of the sailors and Marines of the fleet also were employed in manning four gun-boats and in capturing the Tower and battery. The operation commenced with the advance of a portion of the pontoon bridge over St. Mary's Creek, for the passage of troops from the island to the main, combined with a successful assault and escalade of the [illegible] Lines, and the occupation of the [illegible] being supported by the fire of artillery from the high ground on Cook Cottage, and by the fire from gun-boats in the Medway and [illegible] (to the minute proceedings this was perhaps the most interesting).

The great variety of military and naval operations combined in it, the immense numbers of spectators by this time assembled on the ground, and the admirable practice and steady movement of the attacking columns, all contributed to the effect produced. Within the lines, the besieged had been drawn up in expectation for some time before the attack commenced. Nothing was to be seen of the assailants, although closely on this distant side, from where the signal was given, Gillingham Tower took up the firing; three different divisions debouched upon the open ground in front of the works, and having taken up positions in echelon therein, the skirmishers were quickly thrown out, and the whole again moved forward. The garrison make a sortie, but are beaten back, and, pursuing through the gateway of an inner fortification, are unable, from the rapidity of the pursuit, to lift the drawbridge. In the meantime, the firing becomes general from the attacking skirmishers, and a sortie is made by a portion of cavalry from the Brompton Barracks. The 17th forms square and repulses the charge. The stockade at St. Mary's is breached with gunpowder; and the flank of the besieged being thus turned, they retire beneath the parapets of the ravelins. At the same moment the pontoons are produced, and the attacking column pouring in great numbers across the ditch, take up position on the banks of the ravelin and turnpikin of the works. Thence they gradually make their way to the head of each column might be distinguished continually peeping out, while the main body was covered by the nature of the land. At length, however, the signal was given. Gillingham Tower took up the firing; three different divisions debouched upon the open ground in front of the works, and having taken up positions in echelon therein, the skirmishers were quickly thrown out, and the whole again moved forward. The garrison make a sortie, but are beaten back, and, pursuing through the gateway of an inner fortification, are unable, from the rapidity of the pursuit, to lift the drawbridge. In the meantime, the firing becomes general from the attacking skirmishers, and a sortie is made by a portion of cavalry from the Brompton Barracks. The 17th forms square and repulses the charge. The stockade at St. Mary's is breached with gunpowder; and the flank of the besieged being thus turned, they retire beneath the parapets of the ravelins. At the same moment the pontoons are produced, and the attacking column pouring in great numbers across the ditch, take up position on the banks of the ravelin and turnpikin of the works. Thence they gradually make their way to the head of each column might be distinguished continually peeping out, while the main body was covered by the nature of the land. At length, however, the signal was given. Gillingham Tower took up the firing; three different divisions debouched upon the open ground in front of the works, and having taken up positions in echelon therein, the skirmishers were quickly thrown out, and the whole again moved forward. The garrison makes

REV. T. SCOTT'S COMMENTARY.—The increased attention to religious subjects which has marked [illegible] library, however small, there should be a Commentary on the Bible. This universal necessity has caused the appearance of a flood of cheap [illegible] of this class; while the number of which, in general circumstances, stands at the head of them all, has been limited in its sale by the [illegible] of price.
The COMMENTARY of the Rev THOMAS SCOTT stands quite alone and unrivalled in its department. The present Bishop of Lincoln, in his Synodal Sermon, on Mr. Scott, the describes it "as the [illegible] excellency of this valuable and luminous undertaking consists in its following more closely than any other the fair and adequate meaning of every part of Scripture, without regard to the niceties of [illegible]
[illegible] objections which modern assailants had advanced; and adaptive the [illegible] of the various parts of the Commentaries more than a century old: such as Patrick's, Poole's, Matthew Henry's, and others, or of modern works by writers of no established reputation, or of reprints of some of the earlier publications of Mr. Scott's own day—editions which have in a most unjust idea of the value of his Commentary presenting its first and most original form, instead of the matured results of studies continued for more than twenty years.
A cheap edition of the last and only complete Edition of Mr. Scott's great work, feel that they have it in their power to offer to the public on terms even more advantageous than those on which any of these inferior works can be produced. For
THE GREAT MODERN COMMENTARY OF THIS RICH SCRIPTURES,
1st. They possess the whole of Mr Scott's great work in stereotype, with all its notes and additions, the author having added more than 600 pages in his last revision, none of which can be given in any other edition than that now stereotyped by them.
2nd. By the circumstance of this edition being in stereotype, it is preserved from the numerous errors which inevitably creep into common reprints.
3rd They have engraved, at the expense of nearly £2000, a set of Fifteen Maps, of the best description, and Sixty-nine Illustrations of Scripture Scenery
4th. They recently they have added a copious Topical Index, placing the whole contents of the work under the reader's immediate command.
This only complete Edition of Mr. Scott's Commentary, in Six large Quarto Volumes, containing nearly 3000 pages, was sold, until within the last three or four years, at Eight Guineas per copy. In this, the purchasers, taking into consideration the reduction in the cost of paper and printing, lowered the price to Six Guineas; at which sum it was far cheaper than most other works of established reputation.
[illegible] Proprietors, [illegible] the [illegible] present time, which prescribes "large sales and small profits," to propositions (Messrs. SEELEY, Fleet-street, and Hamilton, Adams and Co., Bermers-street) have made a close calculation of the cost of producing a copy of ten thousand copies, performed the steam-machinery, and on good paper, but purchased to the best advantage, and, for every copy of the work that may be ordered and delivered in the sum prepared, for this edition only, to offer the whole work to subscribers, who may wish to possess a copy of the [illegible]
[illegible] and they appreciated that, considering the high character of the work, and its completeness in all respects, the offer of Six large Quarto Volumes, containing nearly 3000 pages, with more than Eighty Engravings and Illustrations, now on good paper, and delivered in cloth boards, at so exceedingly small a price, is one quite without a parallel.
To parents, guardians, and others, taking an interest in the rising [illegible] a most eligible birthday or marriage present.
The proprietors will endeavour to deliver the copies before the end of the present year, but they must, therefore, beg that names may be sent in before the 7th of August. As, however, books will as delivered in the order in which the names are received, the earliest applications will obtain a preference.
In course wishing to avail themselves of this unprecedented offer —an offer which can never be repeated— will have the kindness to forward their names without delay. And as the number of a stereotype plate made will a few of no losses from death, removal, &c., they will leave the purchaser to transmit, with their names, a post-office order for the full payment. On receipt of the subscription, the proprietors guarantee to issue a perfect copy of the work, properly bound in cloth [illegible] within a month from the time of their subscribing, each subscriber then paying the remaining 1s. The book will be delivered in town free of carriage, in all cases, but such means as the subscribers shall direct, but not at the cost of the proprietors.
As no more copies than the stipulated number will be printed, and as the work will be out of print immediately after those are sold, the proprietors recommend that applications be made without delay. Beyond the time specified, August 7, they cannot undertake to enter a subscription at the price of Six Guineas, or at any price.
Subscribers' names may be sent, with the post-office order enclosed, to Messrs. SEELEY, Fleet-street, or to Messrs. HATCHARD, 187, Piccadilly.
London, May 30, 1849.
* Mr. Scott's biographer, writing in 1825, says:—"Besides the English Edition, up to this time amounting to twenty copies, I have received the particulars of eight editions printed in the United States of Georgia, New York, Boston, and Hartford, from the year 1808 to 18.9, amounting to 30,950 copies. The retail price of the English copies would amount to the sum of £57,600, that of the American copies to £13,933, making together £70,900. Probably no theologian, work can be named which produced by its sale during the author's lifetime an equal sum." Since that time vast numbers of editions have been printed, both in England and America; and the aggregate sum already expended by the public for copies of the great work must considerably exceed £500,000.

REV. THOMAS SCOTT'S COMMENTARY.
NEW and CHEAP EDITION.—The receipt of above five hundred orders before the publication of Part I., in the course of only three days, compels the proprietors to give a little longer time for the entry of their names. All the parties declaring that the announcement had only just reached them. They have, therefore, resolved, however unwillingly, to allow the list to remain open until August 7, when it must finally close. They wish, once for all, to repeat, that their offer must be the very utmost which can be made. The whole above 600 pages added by the author in his final revision, and which none of the former copies can give. It has also a copious Topical Index, made expressly for this edition, and above eighty Engravings Maps and other Illustrations. It has never been sold, until now, for less than the old price of Eight Guineas, and was originally sold, as now offered in cloth, at THREE GUINEAS, to parties subscribing before August 7. THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

Her Majesty's first visit to her greatly-distressed but loyal realm of Ireland is an event of national importance. Viewed in all its aspects, present and future, it is, perhaps, the most interesting that has yet signalised her auspicious reign. The time at which it is made and the social circumstances of the people throw around it an additional importance, and invest it with a halo of hopes for the future prosperity of the country. The once loud and angry voices of political and religious factions have died away amid calamity: famine and plague have taught all classes that the real evils of Ireland are social, and not political. The landlord and the peasant, the Roman Catholic and the Protestant, the Conservative and the Repealer, the Whiteboy and the Orangeman, have been chastened by the heavy hand of affliction; and have had their eyes and their hearts opened to many things which in less unhappy times they could not or would not see. Mutual animosities, though not wholly extinct, are weakened. There is a general impression amidst all classes that the worst is over—that the culmination of evil has been reached—and that henceforward, with the sad experience of the past brought to bear upon the future, there are well-founded hopes for Ireland.

It is amidst these hopes that Queen Victoria goes to Ireland. Her presence is well calculated to increase and to brighten them. At first, there were some whisperings of dissatisfaction, and an avowed determination, on the part of a few, to take advantage of the occasion to raise the old party cries. One clown was found rude enough to hint at mourning, and at a funeral procession as the best greeting that could be given by a famine-stricken land. But these whisperings have gradually subsided. The man of mourning was hooted and hissed into decency; and the few malcontents have been silenced by the loud expression of popular enthusiasm. The fervent character of the Irishman forbids any cold or lukewarm manifestation of his feelings or his opinions. Whatever he does, he does warmly. His gratitude, when he has any, is heart-deep; and his welcome, when he gives it, is sincere and cordial. The world has rung with the history of the magnificent reception which Ireland gave to George IV. If we may judge from present appearances, the visit of our far more beloved Sovereign will throw all the splendour and enthusiasm of that earlier visit into the shade; and the landing of Queen Victoria in Ireland—like a beneficent messenger of peace and good-will—will be celebrated throughout the country with manifestations of popular love and rejoicing, to which the previous history of Ireland can offer no parallel. Cork, Dublin, and Belfast raise the unanimous cry of loyalty and affection; and it is certain that the national "Cead mile failte," or "A hundred thousand welcomes," will be shouted on the progress of Queen Victoria by ten times a hundred thousand tongues. It is equally certain that every heart will do homage to one who, in the day of Ireland's sorrow, has come to make acquaintance with her people, and teach them by her presence how great is the interest that she takes in their welfare, and how happy she is to do all she can to make the Union not a barren union of parchment and of law, but a fruitful bond of mutual confidence and affection.

The Queen, it has been alleged, will not see the dark side of Ireland. She will not behold with her own eyes the wretchedness of the peasantry—the fertile acres lying uncultivated for want of capital and of skill—the roofless cabins of myriads of homeless people, and the vast tracts of land that have never been turned by spade or plough, nor yielded food for human kind. She will see, it has been said, the bright side only. She will see illuminations, triumphal arches, and processions. She will see the best, the fairest, the most enterprising, and the most wealthy of the land congregated to do her fealty and honour. She will hear the thunder of artillery and the shouting of the multitude, but not the wail of distress and sickness that comes from the road-side, or from the miserable cabins of the interior. But though, in all probability, she will neither hear nor see, she is not ignorant of these things. It is on account of these things that she goes to Ireland. She knows them, she deplores them, and she will do her best to relieve them. She does not proceed to Ireland on a holiday trip, to see new landscapes and a new people, but to perform a great and pleasing duty; and to set an example which, in future years, will make Ireland as attractive to the sight-seer and the tourist as Wales and Scotland.

In the face of calamities such as those which have afflicted Ireland, it is little that Parliaments or Monarchs can do. It is not laws that are wanted, but confidence. Hence it is that the visit of her Majesty to Ireland is calculated to produce more good than any enactments which a populace might demand or a Parliament devise. It is a proof of confidence on the part of the Sovereign which has already begotten confidence on the part of the people, and which in due season will beget confidence between England and Ireland. The English and the Irish will learn to know each other better. The example set by the Sovereign will extend to the classes of wealthy English capitalists. The more they know of Ireland, the better they will like it. From the mutual knowledge of the people will spring mutual confidence; and from confidence, all the blessings of which Ireland stands most in need. The Irishman will learn that the Englishman is not his oppressor, either in deed or thought; and the Englishman will convince himself, by the evidence of his own senses and experience, that the Irishman is not naturally turbulent, idle, vicious, or intemperate; but peaceable, hardworking, sober, grateful, and affectionate: and that he only needs fair play to develop his own energies and the resources of his country. Capital, so jealous and so sensitive, never penetrates and permeates a country where confidence is wanting; but it follows confidence, as effect follows cause. It is for these reasons, without predicting any sudden amount of benefit to be derived from her Majesty's visit to Ireland, that we anticipate the turning over of a new leaf, the dawning of a new day, the inauguration of a brighter era. English travellers will learn in time that life and property are as safe in Ireland as they are in London; that the country is fertile; and that capital, wisely expended by active and skilful men, might yield in Ireland a large return of benefit to the capitalist, and be the means of affording employment and comfort to a people whose chief desire is to avoid the poor-house, and to live by the fruits of their honest industry. These blessings must, however, be the result of time: they are not to be snatched in a day. At all events, if the English and Irish people will but believe them possible, the greatest impediment will be removed from the way. The visit of Queen Victoria will greatly aid this consummation; and the people of England will, we are certain, look upon it with pleasure and solicitude, and be, on this occasion, "more Irish than the Irish" in the expression of their good wishes, health for the Queen and for Ireland. They wish her most sincerely a pleasant journey and a glad reception, and Ireland many repetitions of the Visit.

EMBARKATION OF HER MAJESTY FOR IRELAND.

THE requisite arrangements having been made for the Royal visit to Ireland, the following steam squadron left Portsmouth on Tuesday afternoon, for the purpose of forming an escort:—H. M.'s steam-sloop Sphinx, 560 horse-power, Commander Hewlett; H.M.S. Stromboli, 280 horse-power, Lord Amelius Beauclerc; and the Black Eagle, Admiralty yacht, Master Commander Coles, accompanied by the Royal yacht Victoria and Albert, Captain Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, G.C.H., and anchored in Cowes-roads. On Wednesday, the Vivid, steamer, Commander Luke Smithett, joined the squadron; the whole of them hoisted the red ensign, being placed under the command of Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence. The Royal yacht brought up at her usual moorings, and the other steamers in a line outside. The Stromboli anchored to the westward of the Sphinx and Black Eagle in succession. The scene, as witnessed from Cowes, was imposing; there being upwards of 30 sail of German vessels at anchor in the roadstead, independent of Danes, Prussians, Russians, and other vessels of nations which have not their national colours as a token of respect—the Bremen ship, Uhland, Captain Meyer, as the Commodore of the Germans, appearing the most conspicuous.

Towards Wednesday noon, the squadron got up their steam; and at one P.M. the whole, accompanied by the Royal Yacht, proceeded to Made Hole, to embark the Royal family. Early in the forenoon, the Royal carriages were put on board the Vivid, and conveyed to the Black Eagle.

At three P.M. her Majesty and Prince Albert, accompanied by his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, the Prince Edward, the Princess Royal, and the Princess Alice, Sir George Couper, Secretary of State for the Home Department, and the following gentlemen of the suite and the attendants, viz. Colonel the Hon. C. Phipps; General Bowles; Lady Jocelyn, the Lady in Waiting; the Hon. Miss Dawson, Maid of Honour; Miss Hilyer; Mr. Birch, Tutor to his Highness the Prince of Wales; &c., embarked from Osborne Pier, and were conveyed to the Royal Yacht. As soon as her Majesty paced the deck the Royal standard was hoisted at the main, and the Admiralty flag forward. The whole of the Royal flotilla were dressed with signal flags, low and aloft; and the Sphinx and Stromboli manned yards. The cutter yachts of the Royal Yacht Squadron and the Royal Victoria Yacht Club being in the offing, presented the very interesting spectacle shown in our Engraving.

At 3h. 15m. the Royal Yacht, with her illustrious freight, left her moorings and preceded the Royal escort, the Vivid following in her wake, then the Black Eagle, Stromboli, and Sphinx. In this manner the Royal Squadron proceeded to the westward. The weather was most auspicious for the occasion; the wind being N.W., and veering more to the northward as the squadron progressed down the Solent. As soon as the Royal standard opened Old Castle Point, the artillery from Cowes Castle and the Royal Yacht Squadron boomed forth a Royal salute.

At 37 minutes past 3 the Royal squadron had cleared the Roadstead, when the Royal yacht pushed on for her destination, leaving the Stromboli and Sphinx considerably behind. At this time the Peninsular and Oriental Company's splendid steamer the Ava fell in company, and, intermingling with the Royal fleet, would, no doubt, accompany it down Channel.

Owing to the favourable appearance of the weather, the squadron proceeded on through the Needles without bringing up in Yarmouth Roads, as was originally intended; and, with the prospect before them, they expected to reach Cork on Thursday night, "having a good moon before them."

As soon as the Royal flotilla approaches the coast of Ireland, it will be increased by the steamers Fairy, Hazard, Banshee, Arrogant, Dragon, Trident, and Lucifer.

The Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron, the Earl of Wilton, accompanied by the Royal Yacht Squadron schooner Cygnet, C. R. M. Talbot, Esq., the Rostellan, Duke of Rutland, and several of the Royal Yacht Squadron, got under weigh in the forenoon, and proceeded to the westward to escort her Majesty; but, as the steam power of the Royal squadron had over that of the sailing craft, the Royal Yacht Squadron yachts returned to Cowes.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL INTELLIGENCE.

FRANCE.

The prorogation of the National Assembly has been finally decided upon by a large majority. It is to extend from Monday the 13th inst. to Saturday the 20th of September next. In the interim the Finance Committee is to continue to examine the estimates for 1850, and a committee of twenty-five members is to remain in the capital.

The President of the Republic left Paris on Sunday morning, accompanied by three of the Ministers, the Vice-President of the Legislative Assembly, and about 100 representatives, for Angers, Tours, Nantes, and other places. The professed object was to open the railway at Angers, to lay the foundation stone of an hospital, &c.; but many of the Paris papers see in those journeys a desire to win the popular favour with a view to Louis Napoleon being made Consul for ten years, or for life. However that matter may be, it is certain he was well received in those places.

At Angers a magnificent banquet was given to him; and upon his health being drunk, he responded by saying that he attributed the flattering reception he had met with not to the name he bore, or as a nephew of the Emperor, but because he represented the system of moderation and consolation inaugurated by the Republic, which extended rational liberty to all, and tolerated oppression to none.

On the conclusion of the banquet, the President visited a fête, and witnessed a magnificent display of fireworks at the Champ de Mars. He then returned along the boulevards, the houses on which were brilliantly illuminated, to the Prefecture, where a ball took place in his honour, and that for the benefit of the poor. He afterwards retired to the chamber prepared for him in the Prefecture. The room was once occupied by his mother, the Queen Hortense, and the President was much affected at the souvenir.

The President intends to take part in the opening of the Paris and Strasburg Railway on the 16th instant.

The anniversary of July was celebrated on Tuesday at a banquet, by the political prisoners in the Conciergerie, when Colonel Guinard presided upon the occasion.

Corporal Gansels has been tried by court martial at Metz, and sentenced to death, for attempting to rescue Sergeant Bolchot whilst under arrest for a breach of military discipline.

A portion of the Red Republican members of the Assembly had contemplated meeting during its prorogation, but it is now abandoned.

PRUSSIA.

Immediately after the conclusion of the election of Deputies of the Second Chamber (the returns were all conservative), which took place on the 27th ult., the Ministry issued an ordinance declaring the state of siege and martial law in the capital, and a circle of two miles around it, on the 12th of November last, at an end. The order came into force on the 28th, together with the suspended articles of the Constitution.

SWITZERLAND.

The Swiss Confederation have ordered a levy of 32,000 men to be placed under the command of General Dufour, in consequence of the violation by a number of Hessian troops of the territory near Schaffhausen, for which satisfaction was refused, and in consequence of a considerable body of Prussian troops being assembled on the German line in the direction of Switzerland.

General Dufour arrived in Berne on the 29th ult. The different corps that had been ordered to take arms in consequence of the hostile demonstration of Prussia proceeded immediately on his arrival to their respective destinations.

The cause of dissatisfaction on the part of Prussia is the shelter afforded in Switzerland to the Baden and Bavarian insurgents.

SCHLESWIG-HOLSTEIN.

The Government of Holstein has received intimation from the states of Germany, that it will not be supported in its refusal to recognize the armistice with Denmark; its opposition, therefore, it is expected, will be virtually abandoned.

ITALIAN STATES.

PIEDMONT.—The general elections having terminated in the return of an ultra-Radical and Republican House of Representatives, the Government at Turin has thought it the wiser policy, in order to avoid being forced into the Legislature the extreme course, to a final adjustment of terms with Austria. The conditions of the treaty of peace are said to be as follow:—The pecuniary demands of Austria have been reduced to 75,000,000 of francs, 20,000,000 to be paid down, and the remainder in annual sums of 10,000,000. Piedmont renounces all sovereignty over, and even all claim to, the Duchies of Parma and Piacenza. Austria consents to an amnesty in favour of the Lombards who, having taken refuge in Piedmont, wish to return into the Austrian possessions of Italy, on conforming themselves to the general police regulations. The treaty has been sent to Vienna for its perfect. It is presumed that there are secret conditions attached to this public treaty, and that an offensive and defensive alliance has been agreed on between Piedmont and Austria, in which all eventualities are provided for.

VENICE.—The accounts this week from the beleaguered city represent the inhabitants as on the verge of a siege famine. They heroically hold out, however, against their assailants; and accounts dated the 19th ult. state that a body of 2500 Lombards and Venetians had made a successful sortie, overpowering the Austrians, and driving them back as far as Dolo. Great numbers of Austrians, sick and wounded, were arriving every day at Padua.

TUSCANY.—The Grand Duke has returned from Naples to his dominions, whence he had been forced some months back by the violence of the Republican party. He debarked on the 24th ult. at Varegglo, under a salute from the guns of the fort, the ship the Vettorgrano, and a Neapolitan frigate. He was received by the Ministers of Finance, Foreign Affairs, and War. Several addresses were presented to him on landing.

ROME.—There is nothing of any special interest from Rome this week. The latest accounts are to the 23rd ult., on which day General Oudinot had left for Gaëta, in order to consult with the Pope as to what course should be pursued with respect to the foreigners and natives concerned in the late proceedings in Rome. On the 22nd there was a second review of the French troops, on which occasion medals were distributed to those solid ers who had distinguished themselves in the siege. The King of Sardinia has recalled his Consul-General from Rome, having signed the collective note of the consuls of the 24th of June to General Oudinot, calling on him to desist from the bombardment of the city. The paper money, which amounts to 7,800,000 crowns, daily diminishes in value. The edicts which had been closed, have had permission to re-open.

Garibaldi is warmly pursued by the Austrians, but he manages to avoid capture. When last seen he was proceeding in the direction of Montevbi, towards the frontier of Tuscany.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The accounts from the seat of war present the Hungarian side of the contest as the most successful, not only in the south, where the victories over the Ban have been attributed, by mistake, to General Bem, instead of the Irish General, Guyon, but also in the north, where Görgey is operating.

The Austrian Commander-in-Chief, Haynau, on entering Pesth-Buda, issued the following savage proclamation, on the 19th ult.:

"TO THE INHABITANTS OF BUDA AND PESTH.

After several victories which the Imperial arms have obtained over those of the traitors, we are again in possession of your capital, and have again planted the Imperial standard on your ramparts. But our feelings [illegible] were when we left you a short time ago. Doomed to death by a [illegible] were when we left you a short time ago. Doomed to death by a [illegible] the spot of the crime, [illegible] deeds, or by revolutionary decree doomed to instant death by [illegible] any of my soldiers or officers who attempted to instantly put to death any one who entered into traitorous communication with the enemies of the Crown, or who maliciously promised, by rumours, to assist the rebellion, or to conceal weapons.

On the 20th he proclaimed as follows:—

In my proclamation of yesterday (see above) are indicated those infractions of the laws established by the state of siege, which are referred to the jurisdiction of the court-martial. In the present these provisions are laid down with that circumspectness necessary for the maintenance of tranquillity and order in these cities, so deeply shaken in their moral foundations by the intrigues of the rebellious faction. All inhabitants of both cities are to deliver up, within the space of 48 hours, the arsenal of Buda, all arms and ammunition of whatever sort in their possession. The municipalities of both cities are to appoint a responsible committee of twelve members for each district, which committee, during the above-mentioned space of time, is to proceed, in the company of military individuals, to search all the houses, to seize and to bring up all the arms found, and to apprehend those who upon being convicted of the forty-eight-hours' ritual are named solely to be shot. In an unshakable and quiet house the sentence of death is to be reflected with the house proportion or house owners it being the duty of such persons well their houses. 2. For the maintenance of order in the streets and public places, no group of more than six persons will be allowed. The mixed patrols have orders to fire immediately upon such groups which do not disperse at the first challenge. 3. Meetings of political clubs are strictly forbidden, under pain of trial by court-martial. 4. Any one in the same jurisdiction are all those who sing songs of any description, or issue any copies of or [illegible] without previous leave of the Commander of the City, post up placards, sell prints or pamphlets in the streets, or give out bills, or distribute, or expose [illegible] of the kind proscribed in the present. 5. Lastly, such as presume to wear the insignia of the National Guard which demonstrated its rebellious spirit, or as was mentioned yesterday's proclamation, wear badges of the Magyar Republic in tri-coloured ribbons, red plumes, and so forth, whether in their hats or anywhere else, will be without further ceremony tried by court-martial and shot.

He also imposed a fearful fine upon the Jewish communities at Buda and Pesth. They are bound to furnish the Imperial-ist army with 48 000 cloaks, 64,000 pantaloons, 95,000 pairs of boots and shoes, 60,000 shirts, 60 000 pair of drawers, 20,000 cravats, 18,000 neckcloths, 16,000 yards of grey, and 30,000 yards of white cloth, and 16,000 pair of shoe-leathers, to be supplied in certain quantities, from fortnight to fortnight, with a fine of 500 florins for each day they miss. They are also forced to give the General 1000 well-caparisoned horses.

On the 24th ult., just before leaving Pesth, he issued the following proclamation:—

"TO THE INHABITANTS OF BUDA AND PESTH.

Scarcely arrived with my corps at, I quit them again with the greater part of the troops, in order to advance with our victorious arms further to the pursuit and destruction of the rebellious enemy. I do not, however, doubt, and withhold [illegible] expectation would [illegible] oldenly on entry with regard to your behaviour, and the disarmament of which will be followed infallibly by the most rigorous consequences. I expect that you will studiously endeavour to maintain tranquillity and order in both the cities. I expect that all portion of my proclamations of the 8th and 20th will be observed, by you as strictly as if you were urged [illegible] personally. Lastly, that during my absence you will touch not a hair of one of my officers or soldiers that may remain behind, nor of those of the brave army in alliance with us for the holy end of re-establishing order. If you heed not my warnings, if even a part of you shod venture, with audacious hand only, to transgress my orders, then annihilation will [illegible] you. Then, make all ping for one, and one for all we will regard your lives and properties as forfeit in atonement for your crimes. Your fair city [illegible] burnt to a heap of ashes—a monument of your [illegible] and of its destruction. Believe me that I am [illegible] of my word, whether to [illegible] the [illegible] of mercy. The disloyal inhabitants of Buda, who, like yourselves, [illegible] city once [illegible] by the ringleaders of the insurrection, set about their treason, may see [illegible] chance which visited that city, and burnt [illegible] by neglecting to warn, and [illegible] me to inflict the same upon you.

Al comment on these documents is unnecessary: they show the spirit in which the war is carried on by the Austrians.

INDIA

An extraordinary express in the early part of the week brought advices in anticipation of the overland mail, from Bombay to the 28th, and Calcutta to the 13th of June. All is at present tranquillity in India. The rainy season has set in rather late this year, but in such flooding copiousness as to compensate for the delay,

It will be remembered that Sir W. Gomm was to have succeeded Lord Gough as Commander-in-Chief in India at the expiry of the term of his Lordship's command; but the tardy success which attended Lord Gough's first efforts in the late Punjaub war caused the appointment (as successor to his Lordship of more than ordinary military prestige to be determined on, and the result was the immediate despatch of Sir C. Napier to India. This circumstance, it is said in the placing of Sir W. Gomm in a rather awkward position, for we learn by the present advices that that gallant officer had arrived in Calcutta from the Mauritius in the full belief that he was to succeed Lord Gough as Commander-in-Chief, and then only learnt that the commission he had anxiously expected was recalled, and that his place had been taken by Sir C. Napier at least a month before. In the meantime Sir C. Napier had not only been sworn in, but had assumed all the duties of his station, and had set off to Simla, to take command of the army in the Punjaub.

It was believed that Sir S. Cotton had already tendered his resignation, Sir W. Gomm would accept of the command of the forces in the Bombay Presidency.

The Punjaub, upon which attention has been so long concentrated, scarcely supplies a single topic of intelligence. The trial of the Dewan Moolraj for the murder of Messrs. Agnew and Anderson, was still proceeding at Lahore, and continued to excite considerable interest.

At Mooltan, the breaches in the defences made during the siege had been completely repaired.

The great heats had set in; but, although the troops were indifferently provided with quarters, they were generally in good health.

The utmost care was taken throughout the Punjaub to protect the inhabitants against any exactions on the part of the troops, and to establish the most complete relations between the civil and military powers.

UNITED STATES.

The advices this week from the Union are more than ordinarily barren of interest. The ravages of the cholera still continue, and in New York great variations in the atmosphere, from extreme heat to cold, in the course of 24 hours, were reported of every description.

Father Mathew still remained at New York, administering the pledge and receiving courtesies and homage. On a visit to Brooklyn he had been received with distinguished civilities by the authorities.

Mrs. Madison, the widow of the late ex-President Madison, has died at Washington, at an advanced age.

CANADA.

The Government have nearly completed their investigations of the late riot and the burning of the Parliament House, and are about to lay hands upon the alleged prime movers of the disturbance. It appears that the riot was not a sudden affair, but the evidence proves it to have been deliberately arranged beforehand.

A riot recently took place at Quebec, in which a mob of some 2000 persons attacked the Customs but ding and completely gutted it, destroying furniture, stationery, and documents, without interference on the part of the police. The reason of the riot was, that the building was about to be employed as a cholera hospital.

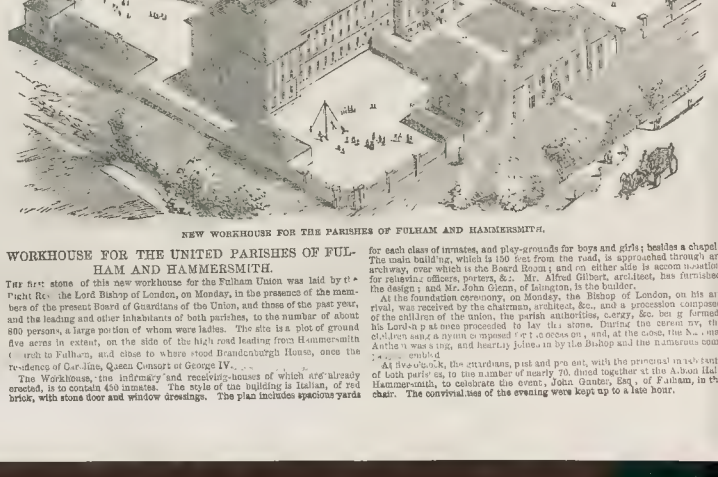
In Upper Canada it is said that there were serious disturbances on the 12th of July, the Orange anniversary festival, and that life was lost at one or two places. No details are given.

The cholera at Montreal was on the increase, the deaths from that fearful disease averaged 80 per day. At Quebec it was also increasing.

SWEARING IN OF MR. JUSTICE TALFOURD.—On Saturday Mr. Justice Talfourd was sworn in as one of her Majesty's judges, before the Lord Chancellor, at his private residence in Park-lane. He was accompanied by Mr. Baron Alderson. The learned Judge was formally introduced to the Lord Chancellor by the learned Baron. Her Majesty's approval of the appointment having been read, the customary oaths were administered, after which the newly-created judge received the congratulations of the Lord Chancellor, Mr. Baron Alderson, and others present. His work is to be sent as judge on Monday morning at chambers, and will continue his sittings until the vacation.

WESTMINSTER AND MARYLEBONE PATENT RAMONEUR COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on Tuesday, at their offices, in Bedford-street, Covent-garden; C. Ione. Thomas Dickinson in the chair. It appeared from the report presented by the directors, that the number of chimneys swept by the company during the last six months had equalled, in number, those swept during the preceding twelve months, and that the receipts had increased in a corresponding proportion. It also appeared that the efficiency of the patent machinery used by the company had been amply tested, and in all cases proved by the large accession of business to the company. The reports and accounts were received and adopted.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE AT BROCKWELL HALL, BRIXTON.—On Sunday forenoon a fire broke out upon the premises belonging to Joshua Blackford, Esq., known as Brockwell Hall, Water-lane, Brixton. The flames commenced in one of the newly-erected ricks in the rick-stead, which contained upwards of fifty loads of hay. The head gardener, seeing smoke pouring forth from the centre of the stack, immediately hurried from the property was in flames, discovered what is technically termed the "man-hole," which he found the heat so intense as to nearly overpower him. He, however, managed to crawl through the middle of the burning property, and had just succeeded in gaining the grand entrance when immense bodies of flames shot forth from various portions of the rick, whereas the work of devastation extended to an adjoining rick, containing about twenty loads. The highly inflammable character of the material caused the flames to travel with astonishing rapidity, and before informa ion could be forwarded to town for the assistance of the engines, the flames were so intensely high into the air as to be distinctly visible at Norwood, Dulwich and Kingston. The engines from town having arrived, were set to work, but, in spite of the utmost exertions of the firemen, upwards of eight hours elapsed ere the flames could be mastered, and not until a serious destruction of property had taken place.



NEW WORKHOUSE FOR THE PARISHES OF FULHAM AND HAMMERSMITH.

WORKHOUSE FOR THE UNITED PARISHES OF FULHAM AND HAMMERSMITH.

THE first stone of this new workhouse for the Fulham Union was laid by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of London, on Monday, in the presence of the members of the present Board of Guardians of the Union, and those of the past year, and the leading and other inhabitants of both parishes, to the number of about 800 persons, a large portion of whom were ladies. The site is a plot of ground five acres in extent, on the side of the high road leading from Hammersmith church to Fulham, and close to where stood Brandenburgh House, once the residence of Caroline, Queen Consort of George IV.

The Workhouse, the infirmary and receiving-houses of which are already erected, is to contain 450 inmates. The style of the building is Italian, of red brick, with stone door and window dressings. The plan includes spacious yards for each class of inmates, and play-grounds for boys and girls; besides a chapel. The main building, which is 150 feet from the road, is approached through an archway, over which is the Board Room; and on either side is accommodation for the officers, porters, &c. Mr. Alfred Gilbert, architect, has furnished the design; and Mr. John Glenn, of Islington, is the builder.

At the foundation ceremony, on Monday, the Bishop of London, on his arrival, was received by the chairman, architect, &c., and a procession composed of the children of the union, the parish authorities, clergy, &c. being formed, his Lordship proceeded to lay the stone. During the ceremony, the children sang a hymn composed for the occasion, and, at the close, the National Anthem was sung, and heartily joined in by the Bishop and the numerous company present.

At five o'clock, the guardians, past and present, with the principal inhabitants of both parishes, to the number of nearly 70, dined together at the Albion Hall, Hammersmith, to celebrate the event, John Gaster, Esq., of Fulham, in the chair. The convivialities of the evening were kept up to a late hour.

or, at all events, an inn of some kind, is necessary to attract tourists; and it is only recently that this great want has been supplied at Glengariff. Let no tourist who loves nature in all her moods, the wildest as well as the softest, be deterred from visiting Glengariff by any doubts as to his creature comforts on the way. They will all be well and cheaply attended to; and if, leaving for awhile the better known districts of Scotland, Wales, and England, and the great Continental highways of the sight-seers, he will turn his steps towards this lonely but beautiful region, he will be fully rewarded for his pains and for his selection. The mere repetition of the only possible epithets which admiration can apply to scenery, fails to convey a proper idea to the minds of those who are not passionate lovers of it. All that the tongue or pen can do is to affirm that it is "beautiful exceedingly." No words can describe the beauty of some scenes. We can feel, but we cannot exactly say why. I can say no more of Glengariff than that it is both sublime and beautiful, and that it seems to me far better worth the time and cost of a pilgrimage than hundreds of other scenes of greater celebrity. The valley is nearly three miles in length, a quarter of a mile to a mile in breadth, and is shut from the busy world by stupendous precipices. Through its centre flows in summer a peaceful stream, which in winter takes to itself the voice of many waters, and rushes a foaming torrent into the sea. The vegetation upon its banks is profuse and lovely; but it requires a residence of some days at Glengariff to make the adequate acquaintanceship of this little river and all the loveliness and grandeur that surround it. From the inn at Glengariff—which stands upon the shore of the Bay of Bantry—a different, but equally magnificent, prospect is obtained. The Bay, famous as the place where the French dropped anchor in their projected invasion of Ireland upwards of fifty years ago, stretches its broad, deep waters studded with islands, towards the Atlantic Ocean. He who would see its beauties of island and of mountain in their full extent, should take boat, as I did, on a fine summer evening, and be rowed across to Bantry. The distance is but nine miles, and the scenery is most magnificent. The picturesque island of Garnish, crowned with a fort and a martello tower, erected shortly after the French made their appearance in the bay, is for awhile the most conspicuous object after leaving the inn: but, as the boat proceeds on its course, the island and the fort dwindle into insignificance against the dark background of the lofty Glengariff Mountains. As these seem to recede, the low island of Whiddy appears in front, with its solitary ruin of the ancient castle of the O'Sullivans: and the eye may range across the noble bay and drink its fill of beauty from the towering summit of Dade, or "Hungry Hill," 2100 feet high, to the thickly-wooded cove that leads to, and hides the town of Bantry.

Bantry is a small town, but full of bustle. The Earl of Bantry is the proprietor of the county: his residence stands finely upon the shores of the bay, and is open, with its extensive domains, to the inspection of visitors. The inhabitants of Bantry carry on the fishing trade to some extent. The morning after my arrival, I found the quay full of activity and life. Several herring-boats had come in with large takes. One of them had captured upwards of eight thousand fish during the night, and the other boats, of which there were seven or eight, had been rewarded with takes but slightly less abundant. They were disposed of at sevenpence the hundred; and conveyed for sale in donkey-panniers into the interior of the country, as far as Killarney and Mill-street. I was somewhat surprised to learn, that, although the take of herring and haddock, as well as whiting, soles, flounders, and turbot, is very extensive, there is not a single establishment in the place or neighbourhood for fish-curing. This is a source of wealth for Ireland which has yet to be developed; and which a capitalist, knowing the business, might turn to good account, both for himself and for the people. This, however, is a subject of too much importance to be discussed within the limits at my command. I must content myself by merely glancing at it; and affirm my belief that in this, as in many other ways, there is a fine field for the introduction of capital into this long-neglected, but naturally rich and productive country. I must reserve for another letter the account of my trip to Dublin; through Bandon, Cork, Tipperary, and Cashel.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—SATURDAY.

The House met at twelve o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

The Earl of SHAFTESBURY, the Earl of MINTO, and Lord CAMPBELL took their seats below the throne, robed as Lords Commissioners, and gave the Royal Assent to sixty-five public and private bills, including the following:—

Consolidated Fund; General Quarter Sessions Course Process; Turnpike Trusts Union; Mutiny and Desertion (India); Attorney and Solicitors (Ireland); Sites for Schools; Administration of Justice (Vancouver's Island); Turnpike Roads (Ireland); Sewers Acts Amendment; Pupils Protection (Scotland); Militia Ballot Suspension; Common Inclosures (No. 2); Highway Rates, Exeter Benevolent Fund Society; Newgate Gaol (Dublin); Lunatic Asylums (Ireland); House of Lords' Costs Taxation; Marriages in Foreign Countries (Facilitating); County Rates, &c.; Poor Relief (Cities and Boroughs); Stock-in-Trade; &c.

THE BANKRUPTCY LAW.

Lord BROUGHAM said, that, although it was contrary to his custom to give notices at the end of a session for the next session, yet the question of the bankrupt law was one of such importance, that he rose for the purpose of giving notice that early next session he should introduce a bill upon the subject. The object of the bill would be to remedy the evil occasioned by the House of Commons having struck out the execution clauses and fraudulent preference clauses from the Bankrupt Law Consolidation Bill. The House of Commons had also failed to introduce into that bill a clause abolishing some four or five sinecure offices in the Court of Bankruptcy, and the bill which he (Lord Brougham) intended to introduce next session would deal with that subject.

Lord CAMPBELL: There is no danger with reference to the sinecure offices to which my noble and learned friend refers, because these are not likely to be filled up during the vacation.

Lord BROUGHAM: My noble and learned friend speaks as if he were to be eternally in office (laughter), and could not conceive the possibility of the Great Seal being put into other hands than those in which it at present is. (Renewed laughter.)

Lord CAMPBELL: Perhaps my noble and learned friend expects to have the Great Seal himself. (Loud laughter.)

Lord BROUGHAM: It is well known that I have refused it, and that I will never take it again. My noble and learned friend thinks everybody is a candidate for the Great Seal because he is one himself. I wish he may get it. (Loud laughter.) But it does not suit my habits or my tastes. (Laughter.) The noble and learned Lord then gave notice that early next session he should introduce a bill upon the law of bankruptcy.

YORK, NEWCASTLE, AND BERWICK, &c. BILLS.

On the question of the third reading of the York and Northern, &c. Railway Bills,

Lord MONTEAGLE moved clauses limiting the period within which the audit of the accounts should take place to nine months; which clauses, after some discussion and opposition, were agreed to and introduced.

The numerous bills on the table were severally advanced a stage, after which a conference took place with the Commons on the subject of their amendments to those of the Lords on the Poor Relief (Ireland) bill, which were ordered to be considered on Monday.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—SATURDAY.

The House met at two o'clock.

PRECIPITATE LEGISLATION.

A conversation respecting the hasty legislation during the week was originated by Mr. BERNAL, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, who declared he was so overwhelmed as to be incapable of bestowing upon private bills the requisite degree of vigilant attention; Mr. DISRAELI characterised the scenes which had occurred through this haste as disgraceful; Mr. ANSTEY attributed the gush that occurred through this haste and disgrace to the obstruction created by "too much talk" of bills at the end of the session to the obstruction created by "too much talk" at the beginning: and Lord J. RUSSELL alluded to the same cause, and to the number of amendments on the motions for going into supply; whilst Mr. DISRAELI, on the other hand, protesting against restriction of debate, threw the blame upon the Government, whose measures were ill prepared.

Sir J. GRAHAM and Mr. GLADSTONE mentioned a practical example of the evils attending hurried legislation. On that day clauses had been introduced by the other House into a railway bill which were the same, mutatis mutandis, as the abandoned Railway Audit Bill, and the House was placed in the dilemma of being obliged to adopt the principle of that bill with all discussion, or of rejecting the railway bill, to the great injury of the parties.

Lord J. RUSSELL, admitting the importance of the case, consented to advise the Crown to postpone the prorogation until Wednesday, in order that the subject might be discussed on Tuesday.

CEYLON.

Mr. BAILLIE, chairman of the select committee on Ceylon, then moved an address for a Royal commission to inquire on the spot into the means taken for the repression of the late insurrection in that colony. He stated that the object of the branch the committee had thought it their duty to make this application, namely, that neither the minutes of the proceedings of the council of Ceylon nor those of the courts-martial had been forwarded; and there were, moreover, grave charges against the Governor, which could not be inquired into without the presence of witnesses now in Ceylon. The committee, in these circumstances, the session being about to close, had instructed him to move for a commission to inquire on the spot.

Lord J. RUSSELL said, if this commission was to inquire into the conduct of the Governor of Ceylon, with reference to "the means taken for the repression of the late insurrection," it must tend to weaken and impair the authority of the Governor, who could not carry on the affairs of the colony with a grand inquisitor down the spot, taking down the complaints of individuals against his conduct in an insurrection not put down without force and severe proceedings. Very grave reasons could alone justify such a measure; and the Governor should be first recalled, in order that he might be impeached, and put upon his trial. For evidence taken by the select committee had not been reported; the committee, therefore, asked the House to pursue this course blindly. A motion might be made next session for a select committee, or articles of impeachment might be preferred against Lord Torrington; but the House should not adopt a course which would destroy the authority of the Governor, without knowing anything of the evidence upon which it was founded.

Mr. HUME said the reason why the evidence taken before the committee had not been produced was, that the charges were so serious, and the evidence was partial, minutes and other official documents from Ceylon having been withheld.

After some discussion,

Mr. LAWES vindicated his own proceedings in the committee; and Mr. BAILLIE offered, if Lord J. Russell gave a pledge that the attendance of witnesses from Ceylon should be secured, to withdraw his motion; but Lord J. RUSSELL, observing that there would be no difficulty in securing the attendance of witnesses, would not consent to the withdrawal of the motion; and in spite of the entreaties of Mr. LAW, Sir J. Graham, and Mr. Roebuck, he adhered to this resolution, remarking that the question affected the honor and character of the Governor of a colony.

A division accordingly took place, when the motion was negatived by 90 against 32.

Lord J. RUSSELL then agreed, that, if the committee should re-assemble on Monday, and by a majority pass such a resolution as they proposed to the House, measures should be taken to secure their attendance next session, when the committee should be re-appointed.

A motion of Mr. HUME, that the evidence taken before the select committee be laid before the House, was negatived.

Adjourned at half-past six o'clock, until Tuesday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—MONDAY.

THE WEST INDIES.

The Earl of HARROWBY presented a petition from the standing committee of the West India planters, merchants, &c., complaining of distress, and praying for the exclusion of all sugar, whether free or slave labour, except British colonial sugar, from the British markets. The colonies were suffering from the want of labour, and to remedy this evil they ought to suffer the planters to employ coolies or Africans for longer periods than one year with the immigrant black labourers. The £500,000 advanced last year for the relief of the West India colonies had been granted upon such terms as to preclude the planters from deriving any advantage from it. He hoped that a measure of the same proposition would be brought forward to advance money, by way of loan, to the West India colonists, on the same terms as it had been advanced to English and Irish proprietors, for the purpose of drainage and other improvements.

Earl GREY said the Act of Parliament prohibited the advance of these monies to individual West India proprietors, and he could hold out no hope that the law would be altered. He was also of opinion that the contract which labourers were to enter into compulsorily would be injurious; but he was not prepared to say that such contracts should not be entered into for longer periods than one year, provided they were not entered into compulsorily.

After a short conversation, the petition was ordered to lie on the table.

BRIBERY AT ELECTIONS.

Lord MILFORD moved the second reading of the Bribery at Elections Bill.

Lord STANLEY complained of the attempt made to smuggle it in, through the House, and moved that it be read a second time that day three months.

Mr. GREY said that the bill ought not to pass during the present session, and he hoped his noble friend would withdraw it.

After a few observations from other quarters,

Lord MILFORD withdrew the bill for the present session.

NAVIGATION LAWS.

Lord WHARNCLIFFE moved for copies of any correspondence which had been passed between her Majesty's Government and foreign powers, in consequence of the passing of the Bill for the Repeal of the Navigation Laws.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE said he could not consent to the production of the papers while negotiations were still pending.

The Commons' amendments to the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill were then taken into consideration, and, after some discussion, were agreed to.

Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—MONDAY.

The House did not meet on Monday.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—TUESDAY.

The House of Peers assembled at half-past twelve, and, having forwarded some business, adjourned to five o'clock.

At the evening sitting,

ORANGE PROCESSIONS.

The Earl of RODEN vindicated himself from some charges which had been made in the House of Commons respecting the recent conflict which took place between Orangemen and Ribbonmen at Castlewellan, in the county of Down. It had been alleged that he had invited the Orangemen to assemble on the 12th of July at his residence; and that on that occasion he had treated them with ale, beer, and whiskey; after which he addressed them, and told them to return through Dolly's Brae, and not to attack any parties, but if they were attacked to defend themselves. He distinctly denied the truth of this statement; for he had not invited the Orangemen to his residence—he had not treated them with ale and whiskey—but merely with small beer and bread and cheese; and he did so as many of the persons in the procession had walked many miles. Instead, also, of telling the party in question to return by Dolly's Brae, and if they were attacked to defend themselves, he had not said a single word which would bear such an interpretation. On the contrary, he had strongly urged them to conduct themselves peaceably to all parties. He confessed he had seen with regret that out of the number of 2000 Orangemen, who formed the procession, about 200 were armed; but he had not anticipated any serious consequences to arise from this circumstance. One of his most deeply regret than himself the lamentable events which followed. He was glad, however, that the Government had instituted an inquiry to ascertain the facts of the case.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE, without assenting to or dissenting from the correctness of Lord Roden's statement, expressed his regret that such disgraceful and fatal occurrences should have taken place. A rigid inquiry should be set on foot; and all he would say was, that he hoped strict justice would be done.

NATIONAL EDUCATION.

Lord LITTELTON wished to ask whether, with respect to schools belonging to Dissenters, the conditions had been imposed on them which had been imposed on Church of England schools.

The Marquis of LANSDOWNE replied that the management clauses which were adopted and enforced by the Committee of Council of Education were adopted and enforced with respect to Dissenting schools as well as Church of England schools. He was glad to say there was a perfect understanding between the Committee of Council of Education and the Church and the various bodies of Dissenters on this subject. (Hear, hear.)

CONDUCT OF PUBLIC BUSINESS.

Lord BROUGHAM brought under consideration the necessity of devising some means for the better conducting of public business during Parliament. The noble Lord proposed the establishment of a board to prepare and watch the progress of bills through both houses, with the object of seeing that the clauses were consistent with one another, that one bill was not contradictory of some other bill. The noble and learned Lord moved for a return of all the occasions within the last ten years on which proxies in their Lordships' House had been used, and the number of times on which the votes by proxy had overturned the votes of noble Lords present at the discussions.

Lord REDESDALE remarked that proxies had been used oftener during the present session than during his previous Parliamentary experience, and on occasions when the majorities of those peers present were large.

The returns, as far as they could be made out, were ordered.—Adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—TUESDAY.

The House assembled at noon.

Sir J. S. Dake, the Lord Mayor of London, was introduced by Mr. Masterman and Mr. Duncan, and took the oaths and his seat for the City, in the room of Mr. Pattison, deceased.

The Lords' amendments to the Newcastle and Berwick Railway Bills, in which the property of a Government audit was involved, were rejected on a division. The bills were consequently thrown out.

Mr. HUME submitted resolutions declaring that the annexation of the Sattara territory to the British dominions was a violation of the national faith, and against the recognised rights of all the sovereign princes of India, and that the orders for annexing these territories should be suspended.

After a few observations from Sir R. HORSFORD and Sir E. COLEBROOKE, the House was counted out at four o'clock.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—WEDNESDAY.

Their Lordships met at half past two o'clock.

ROYAL ASSENT.

The Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Earl of Minto, Earl St Germans, and Lord Campbell took their seats below the throne, robed as Lords Commissioners, for the purpose of giving the Royal assent to several public and private bills, and also for proroguing Parliament.

On the Lords Commissioners taking their seats,

The Lord Privy Seal commanded the Usher of the Black Rod to summon the Commons to the bar, to hear the commission for giving the Royal assent, and for the prorogation of Parliament, read.

In a few minutes, the Speaker, accompanied by Lord John Russell, Lord Palmerston, and a great number of members of the House of Commons, appeared at the bar, and after the reading of the commission, the Royal assent was given in the usual manner to upwards of seventy private and public bills, amongst which were the Consolidated Fund (Appropriation), Cruelty to Animals Prevention, Boroughs Relief, New Forest and Waltham Forest, Inclosures Act (Extension of Powers), Municipal Corporations (Ireland), Collection of Rates (Dublin), Dublin Improvement, Pilotage, New Zealand Land Conveyance, &c.

THE PROROGATION—HER MAJESTY'S SPEECH.

The Lord PRESIDENT then read her Majesty's most gracious speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We have it in command from her Majesty to inform you that the state of public business enables her to dispense with your attendance in Parliament, and to close the present session.

"Her Majesty has directed us to express her satisfaction with the zeal and assiduity with which you have discharged the laborious and anxious duties in the performance of which you have been occupied.

"Her Majesty has given her assent to the important measure you have passed to amend the Navigation Laws, in full confidence that the enterprise, skill, and hardihood of her people will assure to them a full share of the commerce of the world, and maintain upon the seas the ancient renown of this nation.

"Her Majesty has commanded us to acquaint you that the friendly character of her relations with foreign powers affords her a just confidence in the continuance of peace.

"The preliminaries of peace between Prussia and Denmark have been signed under the mediation of her Majesty, and her Majesty trusts that this convention may prove the forerunner of a definitive and permanent treaty.

"Her Majesty's efforts will continue to be directed to promote the restoration of peace in those parts of Europe in which it has been interrupted.

"Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

"We are commanded by her Majesty to return you her thanks for the provision which you have made for the public service.

"The public expenditure has undergone considerable reductions in the present year, and her Majesty will continue to apply a watchful economy in every branch of the public service.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"We are commanded by her Majesty to congratulate you on the happy termination of the war in the Punjaub. The exertions made by the Government of India, and the valour displayed by the army in the field, demand her Majesty's warmest acknowledgements.

"Her Majesty has observed with gratification the spirit of obedience to the laws which has been manifested by her subjects during the period which has elapsed since her Majesty last addressed her Parliament.

"It is characteristic of our constitution that it renders the maintenance of order compatible with the fullest enjoyment of political and civil liberty.

"The satisfaction with which her Majesty has viewed the peaceful progress of her people in arts and industry has been greatly alloyed by the continuance of severe distress in one part of the United Kingdom.

"Her Majesty has observed with pleasure your liberal exertions to mitigate the pressure of this calamity, and her Majesty commands us to thank you for your unremitting attention to measures calculated to improve the general condition of Ireland. It is her Majesty's fervent hope that it may please the Almighty Disposer of events to favour the operation of those laws which have been enacted by Parliament, and to grant to her faithful people, as the reward of that patience and resignation with which they have borne their protracted sufferings, the blessings of an abundant harvest and of internal peace."

The CLERK at the table then read the Royal commission for the prorogation of Parliament, after which,

The Lord PRESIDENT, in her Majesty's name, and by her command, declared the Parliament prorogued until Tuesday, the 9th day of October next.

The Lordships then adjourned, at half-past three o'clock.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.—WEDNESDAY.

The SPEAKER took the chair at a quarter after two o'clock. The sitting was attended by about one hundred members. The right hon gentleman read to the House a letter which he had received from the Marquis of Dalhousie. It was dated from Simla, and to the following effect:—

"My Lord,—I have had the honour to receive your letter of the 25th of April, enclosing resolutions adopted by the House of Commons on the previous day. In obedience to the request of the House I have communicated those resolutions to Lord Gough, and to the several officers under his command, and to my own part. I have to express the gratitude and pride with which I have received this distinguished mark of the approbation of the House. (Signed) DALHOUSIE.

REFUGEES AT MALTA.

Mr. HAWES stated, in reply to Mr. H. Mines, that the Governor of Malta had been obliged, in consequence of the crowd of Sicilian and Italian refugees who had landed on the island, and who had the intention to land, to limit the number of those who would be permitted to remain in the island.

AUSTRIA.

To questions from Lord Nugent, Lord PALMERSTON replied that the Government, in common with every one else, had read with regret the proclamation reported to have been issued by the Austrian General, Haynau, to the inhabitants of Pesth and Buda, threatening with instant death all persons guilty of what he called political offences; but he had no official knowledge of the genuineness of this document. He could not say what course the Government would take, in case the reported proclamation should turn out to be genuine.

Some returns relating to the cotton trade having been ordered on the motion of Mr. WYLD,

SUNDAY TRADING (METROPOLIS) BILL.

The order of the day for the second reading of this bill was discharged.

THE PROROGATION.

At ten minutes before three o'clock, Sir Augustus Clifford, the Usher of the Black Rod, appeared at the bar of the House, and, advancing to the table, summoned the House to attend the House of Peers, to hear the Royal assent given by commission to several bills, and also to hear the commission read for the prorogation of Parliament, and the speech delivered by the Lords Commissioners on the occasion.

The Speaker, accompanied by the members present, then left the House, and was absent for half-an-hour.

On his return, with the members who had attended him, the right hon. gentleman took his seat at the table of the House, the various members present standing round it, whilst he read to them the Royal speech, which had already been delivered in the House of Peers by the Lords Commissioners

That ceremony having been concluded, the greater portion of the members cordially shook hands with the Speaker, many mutual congratulations took place, and within a few minutes afterwards, the house and the galleries were empty, and the session of 1849 had terminated.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

SUSAN ELIZABETH, COUNTESS-DOWAGER OF MORTON.

THE decease of this lady was announced last week. The Countess had completed her 66th year, having been born 23d January, 1783. She was elder daughter of the late Sir Francis Yarde Buller, Bart., of Lupton, in Devon, and grand-daughter of the famous Judge Buller [illegible] Lady Buller married, first, 23d January, 1814, George Earl of Morton, who died 17th July, 1827; and secondly, 17th September, 1841, Edward Godfray, Esq., of Old Hall, Suffolk, who died 19th May, 1842. By the former she had no issue; but by the latter she leaves a son (Peter Godfrey, born 19th December, 1833) and two daughters.

MARSHAL MOLITOR.

GABRIEL JOHN JOSEPH, COUNT MOLITOR, a Marshal of France, was born at Hayange, in the department of Moselle, the 7th March, 1770. Although he did not receive his bâton of Marshal until some years after the restoration of the Bourbons, Molitor was a hero of the Republican and Imperial armies. He was a Captain in 1791, when only one-and-twenty, and a General in 1799. He did good and gallant service for France throughout Napoleon's career, being continually at the head of military divisions, and on the battle field. In the trenches before Mayence he was severely wounded, and very nearly killed. He was created a Count of the Empire by Napoleon in 1808, and on the restoration of the Bourbons Molitor gave in his adhesion to the Bourbons, and remained faithful to them during the return of Bonaparte. He was made Inspector-General of Infantry in 1815; and, in 1823, he commanded the chief the second division of the army of the Pyrenees, which went into Spain to assist King Ferdinand. The same year Molitor became a Marshal of France. He has since held various military appointments. He died on the 28th ult. at Paris, in his 80th year.

JOHN WILSON, ESQ.

We are indebted for the following to Tait's Edinburgh Magazine for the present month:

"The last accounts from Canada bring the melancholy tidings of the death of John Wilson, Esq., the celebrated vocalist. He died at Quebec on the 9th of July, of cholera, after only having been a few days on his way out of fatigue while on a fishing excursion. He had given three or entainments in Quebec, and was advertised for a fourth on the evening of the day on which he died, when he would have had two of his daughters, who also sang professionally, he went out to America in the fall of last year, and his reception in every place where he had publicly appeared was marked by the same enthusiasm wh ch ever characterised his musical entertainments. In Boston, indeed, his success was perfect. In this, his last, professional tour in America, that we are informed he was enabled to send home £6000 since he went out.

"Mr. Wilson, who will long be remembered as the Scottish minstrel, was born in Edinburgh, where he had many warm and attached friends. He was in early life brought up to the profession of a printer, and worked as a compositor. He was gifted with a good voice, and with a quickness of enjoyment, where he read the proofs of the 'Waverley Novels' being, it is said, one of the few who were in the secret of Sir Walter Scott being the author. He officiated for some time as precentor in one of the Edinburgh churches, and first attracted attention before he seriously thought of cultivating the musical powers with which he was so richly endowed. With a voice of the finest quality, he possessed the most exquisite taste for music, and he improved it by the assiduous and earnest study and cultivation. He made his first appearance on the stage as 'Masaniello,' in the Edinburgh Theatre. His success was so striking, that he was soon called to London; and on the boards of the principal metropolitan theatres he had the foundation of that fame which he afterwards so deservedly acquired. For a considerable time he took the lead in the English opera. In 1839, he sang in the operatic pieces of Drury-lane. It was soon after this, that, abandoning the stage, he commenced those musical entertainments, in which he soon became so popular. They consisted entirely of Scotch songs, in which he was the sole performer, varied with descriptive remarks and appropriate anecdotes, illustrative of the various pieces he sang. They were eminently successful. His 'Night with Burns,' and his 'Adventures of Prince Charlie,' were treats of no ordinary kind. He was the first to originate this new species of musical performances, and he has been worthily followed in them by Mr. Braham etc. He devoted himself to the study of our national music; and to Wilson belongs the high distinction of causing the songs of Scotland to be admired and appreciated wherever they are heard. For pathos and expression in the singing of melodies of his native land, he had no superior. He particularly excelled in the plaintive and unadorned lays of Scotland. No one who has heard him warble a simple Scotch ballad will ever forget the effect of his truthful and touching execution. In air of a humorous cast, he equally maintained the national character, and showed a skill and quaintness entirely his own. On the Queen's visit to Scotland in 1842, when at Taymouth Castle, Wilson delighted her Majesty with his melodies; her Majesty, it will be remembered, paid him the high compliment of requesting him to sing 'Oh, wae's me for Prince Charlie!' While his sweet yet powerful voice, and perfect mastery of music, charmed crowded audiences to his entertainments, his mild and unassuming manners, and kindly disposition, procured for him, wherever he went, hosts of friends. His countrymen were justly proud of their national songster. On his last visit to Edinburgh, as admirers, in his native city, took an opportunity of publicly testifying their high estimation of his powers, by presenting him with an exquisite bust of himself, by Mr. Steele, the eminent sculptor. His friends in Glasgow, about seven years ago, gave him a public dinner, in the Black Bull Inn, on the occasion of Mr. Wilson's about fifty years of age. He has left a widow, with two sons and three daughters. An interesting and well written account of the Mammoth Cave of Kentucky, which had been visited by him, appeared recently in the Daily Mail and other papers, from his pen."

ETON COLLEGE.—The annual delivery of the speeches took place on Monday last, and attracted a large number of distinguished and fashionable visitors, including the Duke of Cambridge. Before the speeches commenced, the Duke proposed to the authorities of the College that those young gentlemen whose duties did not require them to remain, should be permitted to retire, in order that they might return to their respective friends. This proposition, which was vociferously seconded amidst the loudest cheering by the pupils, was adopted by acclamation, and upwards of 600 of the boys immediately left. At the conclusion of the speeches, the Duke of Cambridge, accompanied by the College authorities, proceeded to the Chapel, to inspect the extensive alterations and improvements. On leaving the chapel, the Duke proceeded across to the Provost's Lodge, and expressed his regret that his engagements would not permit of his being present at the grand banquet in the College hall.

SOCIETY FOR THE PROPAGATION OF THE GOSPEL IN FOREIGN PARTS.—A large public meeting was held on Wednesday last, at Great Marlow, in Essex, for the purpose of considering the claims of the above society. It was stated at the meeting, that the society's exertions were now chiefly directed to British North America, and the West Indies, Australia, and the Cape. Also a most interesting statement of what the society had done in each of those several places, the increased number of clergymen connected with it, and the churches which had been added by the funds of the society. It was further stated that in the diocese of Guiana, which was part of the continent of South America, eight missionary clergymen were maintained by the society, and large sums had been granted for the furtherance of missionary enterprise in Australia, India, and Ceylon. Resolutions, expressive of strong confidence in the principles of the Society, proceeding the meeting to support it in its foreign operations, were agreed to. The Rev. Dr. Carver presided.

THE NEW CHAPEL AT BROMPTON.—The Chapel for the use of the patients and officers of the Hospital for Consumption was commenced on Monday last, and in a few days will be sufficiently advanced for laying the foundation-stone.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

THE ROYAL GENERAL ANNUITY SOCIETY.—On Monday a numerous meeting of the members and supporters of this institution, established in 1827, for all widow annuitants of decayed merchants, bankers, professional men, master manufacturers, tradesmen, their widows and clerks, as also to single females, their daughters, took place at the London Tavern, for the purpose of electing two male and three female annuitants from a list of candidates; in addition to the 38 already on the funds. The chair was occupied by the Rev. W. H. Jones, M.A., F.S.A. (the chaplain). Prior to the commencement of the election the following resolution was unanimously adopted:—"That all life subscriptions and donations of £5 and upwards (instead of a moiety as at present) be invested in the public funds in the names of the trustees, and that the div dends only arising therefrom be applicable to the general purposes of the institution." The ballot having closed, and the names of the successful candidates having been announced, the chairman addressed the meeting, congratulating the successful, and sympathising with the unsuccessful candidates, expressing a hope that the funds would increase as the result of the election of a great portion of the latter in the ensuing year. He trusted also, that the arrangements now in progress for establishing an asylum would, by the aid of kind friends, be speedily carried out. The last annual festival had materially augmented the funds; but he regretted to say that the fancy sale, held in June, at the Bazaar-street, Bazaar, had, in consequence of unfavourable weather, not answered their expectations. There would, however, be a ball at the latter end of the year in aid of the funds, which by God's blessing he hoped would prove beneficial to the institution. From the report it appeared that the receipts of the previous year, comprising a balance of £89 15s. 4d., annuities and life subscriptions, donations, dividends, collections at the sermons, &c., amounted to £1613 18s. 3d., from which, after deducting the necessary expenses, and the purchase of £870 3s. 9d. Three per Cent. Consols, there remained a balance of £108 9s. 6d., in addition to the funded stock of £2349 6s. 10d.

PROTECTION OF (FALSELY) ALLEGED LUNATICS.—A most respectable and unanimous, though not very numerous, meeting took place on this subject, at Exeter-hall—Chairman, C. Lushington, Esq., M.P.—on Monday evening. The chairman stated that, though his own family had been exempted from any such real or pretended visitation, he was aware of the insufficient safeguards at the present law. He knew the case of a gentleman who, having been unjustly incarcerated for some years, was now happily married to the young lady from whom the machinations of his relatives had separated him. The Lord Chancellor had well observed, that, to frustrate the pecuniary designs of these harpies, the property of persons charged with lunacy should be placed under the control of Government. Mr. J. Percival, Kensington (son of a lamented Prime Minister) delivered a long and able speech, which evinced much practical knowledge. He even deprecated the deposition of one or two strangers, and of one medical man—on which persons could be unjustly imprisoned, and treated in a way calculated to make them mad. Persons should know the plea urged against them, and the causes should not be decided behind their backs. The present secretary to the society, Mr. Bailey, had been confined two years and a half before he knew why; and, at last, it appeared that his bad name by inverted, introduced, the numskull of a magistrate in a London police court, and had boasted somewhat sanguinely of the fortune he expected to make. Mr. Percival warmly eulogised Mr. Bennett, a clergyman and magistrate of Gloucestershire, who procured his liberation. Mr. J. Bennett (a clergyman) stated, that a jury, including some persons of the same pursuits and turn of mind as the accused, would be a better judge than a single medical man. Several others addressed the meeting, including the solicitor to the society and an Irish clergyman; and it appeared that on the most frivolous pretext—for any fancy or eccentricity—even of goodness, as in the case of a lady of superior intellect, who gave most of her money to the poor—persons might be called "mad," and so treated. One medical man had given a wished certificate of lunacy after five minutes' presence with a party in a carriage in the dusk of the evening. The man received "bounty money" from a private asylum for every "lunatic" (?) he brought there, and a yearly allowance whilst he was there kept.—A medical gentleman present at the meeting said that the bounds of perfect sanity and perfect insanity were much more obscure than the world generally thought, and gave many cases in point. Many other opinions the necessary restraint might be decided on.—The meeting separated with a strong desire that public attention should be effectively aroused to the subject before the next session of Parliament.

THE YOUNG AND POOR MARRIED MEN'S BENEFICIENT FUND.—The seventh general meeting of this society was held at Messrs. Tattersall's, on Monday evening; Mr. John Deacon in the chair. From the report it appeared that since the last meeting £451 12s. 7d. Consols had been invested, and that the amount now invested amounted to £2212 18s. 1d.; that two additional life annuitants had been placed on the fund, and that three applications for temporary assistance had been liberally responded to; that there were now five life annuitants, whose annuities in the whole amounted to £106 12s. The directors then drew attention to those members who were life annuitants, as affording strong examples of having effectually placed themselves beyond the casualties want, and who had availed themselves the advantages of this institution, which they, by being members of it, had assisted to establish. The report was unanimously adopted.

OPENING OF THE CHURCH OF THE JESUITS IN MAYFAIR.—The first church which we believe the Jesuits have ever possessed in London was opened on Tuesday, by the Right Rev. Dr. Wiseman, assisted by Dr. Browne, Roman Catholic Bishop of Cloyne, Dr. Gillis, Roman Catholic Bishop of Edinburgh, and numerous priests, by of clergy. The situation of the edifice, which has been for some years slowly rising, is not advantageous, being, in fact, in a mews; but the beauty of the building, both externally and internally, compensates in some degree for its site. The form and style of the church are the work of Mr. Scholey; but the decorations of the sanctuary and of the whole interior have been designed by Mr. Pugin. The church is communicated with by the Jesuits' palace (now building). It is of the Decorated English style of arch texture, and is slightly cruciform, the arms which the aisles form being but just marked. Over the altar is a great arched window, which is a magnificent piece of stained and figured glass; and opposite to it, over the organ-loft, there is another magnificent window, of similar character. There is no rood-screen. On the right and left of the high altar, and in either aisle, is a chapel—the one of the Immaculate Conception, the other of St. Ignatius Loyola (founder of the Order), and another Saint. The sanctuary is a marvel of decorative, both glyphic and coloured. With the intrinsic beauty of the church the furniture and appointments of the altar are in harmony. The music is by a choir from St. Charles Tempest, and will serve to illustrate the liberal character of the general decorations. The mere binding of the book is said to have cost £35. Between the beginning and conclusion of the pontifical service, Dr. Wiseman preached a most impressive sermon on the history and present situation of the Jesuits; on their expulsion from Rome previously to the democratic outbreak, as from other states and countries on the eve of revolutionary troubles; and congratulated his own flock on the accession of such fellow-soldiers in a due form, and with adequate means, to their common warfare. In the evening Dr. Browne delivered a very eloquent sermon.

A BULL FIGHT IN LONDON.—On Tuesday three buffaloes, a grown bull and two calves, one of them about the size of a small donkey, and the other of a sheep, landed at the docks, were being driven along Holborn, to Lincoln's-inn-fields, for combat, when a bull suddenly, without any notice, or the slightest noise and clamour at the foot of Holborn-hill, the bull darted away, followed by the calves. The animals proceeded at a very rapid rate along Fleet-street, the Strand, to Charing-cross. Here the bull gored some horses drawing a coal waggon, passed across Trafalgar-square, St. James's square, along Jermyn-street, up Bond-street, through Grosvenor-square, into Park-lane, upsetting a gentleman and his horse at the moment coming out of the Park. Having accomplished this, he fell in behind a load of hay being driven up Park-lane. The keepers, who had followed in a chaise cart, attended by an immense crowd, now came up, and roped the bull by a horn, he was secured to the tail of a cart. He kicked and plunged furiously, and, from his great strength, threatened to upset both horse and cart, and broke one of his horns, which bled profusely. He was at length drawn to a neighbouring stable, and deposited for safety. The bull and calves are very handsome animals, of a greyish slate colour. No serious accident occurred in this long chase, though numbers were excessively frightened.

ALARMING ACCIDENT.—On Sunday evening last, at about half-past eight o'clock, an appalling occurrence took place at a spacious building, formerly a coach-factory, in Charles-street, Drury-lane, which has lately been opened as a place of worship by a congregation of Roman Catholics. A very large number of persons had assembled on the occasion to hear the Rev. Dr. Fat preach. During the service the giving way of a post near the pulpit, in consequence of the pressure of the crowd, caused an alarm to be raised, which was followed by the cries of fire! converted into one of those unaccountable panics that so often seize on a mass of persons thronged within a building. A general rush to the door ensued, and the stairs leading from the chapel to the ground floor gave way, precipitating the struggling crowd some thirty feet to the bottom. The police aided by the people collected in the street, extricated this portion of the congregation, numbering between two hundred and three hundred yer ons, of all classes and sexes, without any further casualty than the fright. Service was then read by the reverend gentleman in the pulpit, whose presence of mind was most commendable, were rescued, by means of ladders and fire-escapes, which were quickly conveyed to the spot. Indeed, it is supposed that only five were hurt, but some thirty persons were dreadfully contused and lacerated; and three or four others, who had leapt from the windows, were found suffering from contusions of the head, and other injuries of a more serious nature. The cry of "Fire" was groundless.

FRIGHTFUL ACCIDENT AT PUTNEY-BRIDGE.—On Tuesday evening, about seven o'clock, a terrible occurrence took place whilst the Eclipse steamboat was passing through the arch of Putney bridge. A large party of small trade-men and mechanics, with their families, who resided at Chelsea, had been up the river in a strong and capacious wherry, which, on their return, the tide being against them, they were taken in tow by the Eclipse, and the boat was made fast to the steam boat's quarter instead of stern, the consequence of which was, the boat was towed by the side of the steamer instead of at her stern; and, in passing under this ill-contrived bridge, where there was not an inch of room to spare, a woman named Webb, the wife of a cook-dealer at Chelsea, had her arm frightfully hanging outside the boat, when it was caught and dragged completely through the bridge between the boat and the pier. The shrieks of the woman were awful; and, on emerging into a clear space, a horrible sight presented itself; the flesh had been torn in so dreadful a manner as to lay bare bone, and nearly all the tendons and muscles of the arm were divided. At least a dozen boats put off from Putney and Fulham shores; but the Captain of the Eclipse continued his passage to Wandsworth pier. The woman was then lifted out of the boat in an insensible state, and carried into the Waterman's Arms, when Mr. Pearce, the landlord, and his wife afforded every assistance possible. Mr. Howell, junior, surgeon, attended; and, having bound up the arm, the poor creature was taken in the course of the night to St. George's Hospital.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, JULY 28.—Again the return indicates an increase on the excessive mortality of the previous week. The deaths from all causes—which, in three previous weeks, were respectively 1070 1363, and 1141—rose in the last to 1391; a number which is almost double the weekly average, and exceeds that of the former week by nearly 900. To compare these results with the deaths from all causes in the four weeks, when influenza was unusually fatal in the last quarter of 1847, it may be stated that the mortality at that time increased in the following numbers:—1086, 1577, 2404, 2416, and in the fifth week continued to decline. The deaths, from cholera, which, in three previous weeks were 124, 339, 678, rose in the last to 753—a rate of increase which it will be observed is not so great as in the first weeks of the outbreak. But the deaths from diarrhœa (of which a great majority of cases to children) and dysentery, which in three previous weeks were 54, 100, 146, increased in the last to 238, showing a more rapid increase recently than the mortality from the more contagious form of the disease. In the corresponding week of 1848, the deaths from diarrhœa and dysentery amounted to 187, a mortality which is almost as considerable as the return of last week. The total deaths from the three diseases in the present return were, therefore, 1231, which, added to the weekly average of the season is only 99—a result, when compared with the excess of mortality from all causes, which shows that the aggregate deaths from other diseases do not vary much from the usual amount. Small-pox, scarlatina, and hooping-cough, however, are below the average, especially the first two of these zymotics; measles and hooping-cough have fallen to the average. Cholera was fatal last week to 382 males and 401 females; previous returns showed a majority on the other side. The disease on the south side of the river still form the field on which the disease is most active. The deaths from it, which, in this region, were in three previous weeks 93, 102, 443, rose last week to 514. There is a decided increase in the eastern districts, as Bethnal-green and northern, comprising Kensington, Chelsea, St. George's (Hanover-square), Westminster, St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, St. James's, Marylebone, Pancras, Islington, Hackney, and Hampstead, the deaths were only 68, against 53 in the preceding week. The districts which show the greatest mortality are, Bermondsey, where 64 deaths occurred last week; Newington, where there were 66; St. George's, Southwark, where there were 70; and Lambeth, where there were 111. The births numbered 1313.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The mean height of the barometer in the week was 29.986. The temperature was generally below the average during the week. The mean was 58.9 deg.

QUARTERLY RETURN OF THE MARRIAGES, BIRTHS AND DEATHS REGISTERED IN ENGLAND.

The following return, published by authority of the Registrar-General, comprises (1) the births and deaths registered in all the districts of England during the spring quarter ending June 30, 1849; and (2) the marriages in the churches and chapels, 2629 registered places inconnected with the Established Church, and 623 superintendent registrars' offices during the quarter ending March 31, 1849

Leaving out of the circumstances of the country, the general result of the return is favourable. The marriages continue steadily at the average; neither swelled by speculative expectations, nor depressed by idle doubts of the necessary of the industry, science, and nature of the country to supply its wants. The births are increasing. The deaths also increase; but the health of the country had quite recovered at the close of 1848 from the destructive epidemics which rages, and were so fatal to the people and particularly the inhabitants of London.—In the two years extend ng from the middle of 1845 to the middle of 1848. The epidemic cholera, which reaches England in October, 1848, and is now causing many deaths in London, Liverpool, and other places, has, it is true, increase the general mortality of the country in the months of July, August, and September, as it did before; but the ravages of cholera, of typhus, and of the insidious influenza, which threaten the country, may be greatly mitigated. If the same talent and energy are applied to the improvement of the public health as have been applied to other great undertakings in which England has engaged.

Cholera is a disease well calculated to excite alarm by its wide, well-marked march over the world, the suddenness of its invasion, the suffrings it awakens, the fatality of its attacks, the helplessness of medicine, and the fearful character of its victims. But it cannot be denied that the epidemic of cholera in 1832 aroused attention, and led the way to sanatory inquiries and ameliorations, which, however imperfect, have saved more lives than cholera destroyed.

Registration did not exist in 1832, but it appears from the returns then made to the Board of Health, that in London 994 persons died of cholera in the first part of the epidemic, extending from Feb. 11 to May 13, 1832; and 6536 in the second part, extending from June 15 to October 31; and 16 in November and December. Although for defective returns in 1832, it is not probable that the fatality of cholera will be greater in 1849 than it was then; or that the mortality amount to more than this, that for a few weeks an inhabitant of London will incur the same chance of dying in one week as he usually incurs in two or three weeks. But it has been shown in the annual registration reports, that the ordinary times (1838-44) the chance of dying in London is constantly 40 per cent. greater than in the neighbouring counties. Taking the rates of mortality at each age for England, and applying them to the population of London, there would be 53,137 in the year; while at the rates which prevailed in Surrey, Kent, Sussex, Hampshire, and Berkshire, the deaths in London would be only 37,910. Thus, quite independently of cholera, we have an excess of 15,227 deaths in the year in London, from known and not irremovable causes, that prevail to a certain but less extent in the south-eastern counties. The same argument applies to Liverpool and to all our large towns.

In towns, as well as in the country, many diseases are unquestionably caused by a bad, insufficient diet, by cold, by intemperance, idleness, and vice, which all predispose to cholera; but the great excess of mortality is from the atmosphere of decomposing organic matter given off by the undrained ground, and vegetable and animal bodies, dead or living. The insalubrity of untrained land is seen now in England, on comparing the mortality (2.45) of Ely, North Wichford, Whittlesey, and Wisbeach in Cambridgeshire, at the mouth of the Ouse, with the mortality (1.80 to 1.40 per cent.) of the high parts of Surrey, Sussex, North Devon, and Northumberland. And the fatal effect of effluvia generated by bodies of men on board land has long been well known; it was known to the Romans, and it is laid down by their writers on military affairs, that the camp should be frequently changed to get rid of these incommodities. In modern times men under canvas cannot be kept in health long on the same spot. But an undrained town, insufficiently supplied with water, drains, and sewers, has the inconveniences of a perpetual camp, and the diseases, fevers and dysenteries besides being exposed to the fatal inroads of influenza, cholera, and all epidemics.

MARRIAGES.

56 540 persons were married in the quarter ending March, 1849. In the corresponding quarter of 1848, 56,602; of 1847, 54,803; of 1846, 52,834. Comparing the marriages with the popu ation, and taking the increase into account, the disposition to marry, which was excessive in the winters of of 1845-6, is found to have declined, and remained considerably near the average through the years 1847-8-9. The rate of marriage (15½ per cent.) in the winter of 1849 was lower than in the winters of 1840, 1842, 1845, 1846, 1848; and higher than in the winters of 1838-39, 1841-2-4-7.

The marriages in England are always fewer in the winter than in any other quarter of the year. They have increased rapidly, though not uniformly, through the last five years. In 1845 the marriages in the winter of 1839 were 24,679; in the winter of 1849, 28,270.

The steadiness of the rate of marriage indicates the prudence of the people, and proves that they are as far from the depression of 1842 as from the elation of 1845.

The returns of the five winter quarters of 1845-9 show that the marriages in London were numerous in 1845-6, stationary in the three winters 1847-9.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS.—INCREASE OF POPULATION.

In the first three months of 1849 the births exceeded the average, the mortality was near the average. The present returns are for the three months ending June 30, when the births registered were 153,822; the deaths, 102,14 6,,676 sem is the addition to the population of England in the 91 days.

This natural increase of the population is, however, disturbed by the immigration of the Irish, and the emigration of the English people.

153,822 is a greater number of births than was ever registered before in the June, or in any other quarter. The rate of births, that is, the proportion of births to the population, was 3·42 per cent. per annum: it was higher (3·530) in the spring quarter of 1846. The births in the three years 1846-7-8, were 572,625, 539,965, 553,455. The depression in the births of 1847 is remarkable, and is not easily explained. The 307,512 births in the first half of the present year (1849) is an increase equally remarkable, and, to the depression of 1847, cannot be accounted for by any fluctuation in the marriages

STATE OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

The deaths in the quarter ending June 30 were 102,143, the deaths in the corresponding quarter of 1848 were 99,733; of 1847, 105,718. The annual rate of mortality in the spring of the five years, 1845-9, was 2154, 2131, 2488, 2·54, 2219. If the rate remained through a year uniformly the same as in the spring of 1849, 22·9 persons would die in every 100,000 living. The mortality in 1849 is above the average; it is, however, lower than in the corresponding quarter of 1838, and considerably lower than 2488, the rate in the June quarter of 1847

LONDON.—The deaths this quarter were 13,023; the deaths in the 13 weekly tables were 13,008. This implies a lower rate of mortality than prevailed in the spring of 1848. Cholera almost subsided; it was only fatal to 268 persons, while the deaths from the disease in the previous winter were 846. Typhus went down; the deaths were 312: in the spring of 1848, 882 persons died of the disease. Only 16 deaths were referred to Influenza, but 745 were referred to bronchitis. Small-pox and scarlatina were more, hooping-cough more fatal than in the spring of 1848. 27 persons died of poison, 52 of burns and scalds, 32 of hanging and suffocation, 67 of drowning, 130 of fractures and contusions, 26 of homicide, 12 of other violence, 13 of intemperance, 33 of delirium tremens, and 1d of privation.

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

ORDINATION.—At the Ordination held at the Cathedral at Norwich, by the Bishop of the diocese, twenty-two candidates were admitted to the order of deacons, and nine to the order of priest

CONSECRATIONS.—The Bishop of Carlisle consecrated the new church of Newton Arlosh, in the parish of Holme Cultram, on Tuesday the 24th ult. On the next day, Wednesday, his Lordship consecrated the new church at Shinburness; and on Thursday he performed the same office for the new church of Mawbray, near Allonby.—On Tuesday, the 24th ult. the Bishop of Ely consecrated the enlarged church of Caphill.

On Monday last the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of the new church about to be erected at Pirbright, took place in the presence of a numerous assemblage. The Rev. Thomas Sutton, D.D., vicar of Sheffield, placed the stone. The total number of sittings is 847

NEW CHURCH AT CLAY CROSS.—The Queen Dowager has, with her usual liberality, remitted the handsome sum of twenty pounds to the Clay Cross Church Building Fund

PREFERMENTS.—The Rev. A. Williams to the vicarage of Cerne Abbas, Dorsetshire, £241. The Rev. R. S. Earle to Compton Abbas, West, £191. The Rev. W. E. Win to the rectory of Boobon, Norfolk, £238. The Rev. A. Fleet to the vicarage of Thornton Steward, Yorkshire, £234.

PREFERMENTS VACANT.—Perpetual curacy of St. Matthew's, Stockport, £150; patron, the Queen and the Bishop alternately. The rectory of Kingsdelany, Upton, £547; patron, Rev. R. B. Hughes. Vicarage of Bolney, Sussex, £162; patron, Prebend in Chichester Cathedral. Rectory of Great and Little Thurlow, Suffolk, £267; patron, Lord Henniker. Rectory of All Hallows the Great, London, £458; patron, Archbishop of Canterbury.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

THE COURT AT OSBORNE.

The Queen held a Court and Privy Council on Monday at Osborne. The Council was attended by his Royal Highness the Prince Albert, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Lord President; the Earl of Minto, Lord Privy Seal; Lord John Russell, First Lord of the Treasury; Sir George Grey, Secretary of State for the Home Department; Viscount Palmerston, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs; Sir Charles Wood, Chancellor of the Exchequer; Sir Francis Baring, First Lord of the Admiralty; Sir John Hobhouse, President of the Board of Control for the Affairs of India; and the Earl Fortescue, Lord Steward.

At the Council the Royal Speech on closing the session of Parliament was arranged and agreed upon.

Mr. Matthew Talbot Baines, First Commissioner of the Poor-law, was, by command of her Majesty, sworn of her Majesty's most Honorable Privy Council, and took his place at the Board.

A proclamation was ordered to be issued for giving currency to coins called Guries.

Another proclamation was ordered to be issued for a distribution of prize money.

The Hon. W. Bathurst was the Clerk of the Council in waiting at the Court.

Sir David Dundas, Judge-Advocate-General, had an audience of the Queen, and submitted to her Majesty the proceedings of some courts-martial.

The noblemen and gentlemen attending the Queen's Court travelled to Gosport by a special train on the London and South-Western Railway, crossed in the Fire Queen steam-packet, landed at Osborne-pier, and arrived at Osborne at a quarter before one o'clock. After the Council, luncheon was served; and at three o'clock the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl of Minto, Sir George Grey, Viscount Palmerston, Sir John Hobhouse, Earl Fortescue, Sir David Dundas, the Right Hon. M. T. Baines, the Hon. W. Bathurst, and Lieutenant-Colonel Shell left Osborne, re-embarked at Osborne pier in the Fire Queen, crossed to Gosport, and returned to town on the London and South-Western Railway by a special train.

The Duke and Duchess of Nemours arrived at Ostend early on Monday morning, by the English packet, the Vivid en route for Germany.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer and Sir Francis Baring left Osborne for Jersey. Lord John Russell remained at Osborne on a visit to her Majesty until Tuesday morning.

Sir J. Stephen, K.C.B., and Mr. and Lady Mary Vynet, were among the guests honoured with invitations to the Royal dinner circle on Monday and Tuesday last.

On Wednesday afternoon, at half-past three o'clock, the Queen and the Prince Consort embarked in the Victoria and Albert yacht, en route for the Cove of Cork.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT.

DUBLIN AND KINGSTOWN.

The preparations for her Majesty's reception, on landing at Kingstown, are still in progress. There will be a pavilion at the jetty, from which her Majesty will proceed to the terrace fronting the railway terminus, and from thence pass to the Royal carriage by a new entrance into the waiting-room, in which workmen are now employed, fitting it up with great taste and elegance. On reaching the terrace, her Majesty will have an opportunity of beholding the splendid panorama of the bay of Dublin in all directions—the unrivalled beauties of the Bay of Dublin, and the bold and picturesque mountains, that render this one of the most magnificent scenes that can be witnessed.

Her Majesty will leave the railway at Sandymount Avenue, where the civic procession is to be in waiting.

The Royal carriage is an exquisite specimen of Irish manufacture—most tasteful and elegant in construction.

Twenty-four horses and two carriages, intended for the use of her Majesty and Prince Albert, have arrived in Dublin, and were put up at the Lord-Lieutenant's, in the Phœnix Park

In the city of Dublin, the preparations for giving her Majesty a hearty and flattering reception, have set aside almost all other descriptions of employment in this city. The Corporation, and numerous other persons of influence, were occupied during the past week in the erection of balconies, triumphal arches, dressing up mansions, &c. The hotels are full; and lodgings have risen considerably, particularly along the line of procession. Tiers of elevated seats are raised on Le Rotundo and Rutland-square, to accommodate those who reside out of the line of the procession; and similar accommodations are provided in other sites on the line. In addition to the triumphal arches to be erected by the committee, the Midland Railroad Directors have erected one over their bridge on the Circular-road, near Phibsborough; and Mr. Turner has erected another at his factory gate, near Balls-bridge. This will complete six triumphal arches between Balls-bridge and the Park gate. Already the tradesmen of the Pale in feel the effect of her Majesty's gracious determination to make personal acquaintance of her fr ss subjects—coachmakers, carpenters, house-painters, weavers, and dressmakers are in general requisition; and certainly never was a stimulus amongst the artificers of Dublin more required.

Mr. Patrick Byrne, the celebrated Irish minstrel, and who has the honour of being known as her Prince Albert's harper, has arrived in Dublin, in expectation of her Majesty's visit. Already this eminent performer on the national instrument has had the privilege of playing before the Queen and Court at Windsor, and is no stranger to the Vicereg l Court.

A Gazette Extraordinary, issued from the Lord Chamberlain's office, Dublin Castle, announces that her Majesty will hold a full dress Levee and Drawing-room at the Castle, in the course of next week.

The following may be said to be the programme of the Royal movements while in the metropolis:—

Monday, 6th, August—Public Entrée. Tuesday, 6th—Reception of Addresses. Wednesday, 7th—Grand Review, Phœnix Park. Thursday, 8th—Levee. Friday, 9th—Drawingroom. Saturday, 10th—Déjeûner at Curton.

THE QUEEN'S LEVEE AND DRAWINGROOM.—As the Queen can have but one rule of action, wherever it is held, the presentations in Dublin will be regulated by exactly the same rules as in London, viz. that no person can be presented except by some one who has personally been himself or herself presented to the Queen, and that, of course, by ladies, and gentlemen by gentlemen only, and the names must be sent in three days previously to the Lord Chamberlain (the Marquis of Breadalbane), at Dublin Castle.

Arrangements have been made for the attendance in Dublin of the following noblemen to receive her Majesty:—The Marquis of Londonderry, the Marquis of Donegal, and the Marquis of Drogheda, the Earl of Glengall, the Earl of Kenn, Lord Strathnairn, Lord Lismore, Lord Ashtown, Lord Hawarden, the Marquis of Ab rorn, Marquis of Downshire, Marquis of Kildare, Marquis of Waterford, Earl of Wicklow, Earl of Enniskillen, Earl of Roden, Earl of Bessborough, Earl of Cromnel, Lord Adare, Lord Josslyn, Lord Ashbrooke, Lord Downes, Lord Farnham, Lord Lifford, Lord Charlem, and Lord Rossmoreen.

BELFAST.—Preparations of a similar character have been made in Belfast.

THE ROYAL SQUADRON.—The Royal squadron consists of the Victoria and Albert, the Arrogant, 46, Captain Bruce; the Hogue, 60, Captain M'Dougall; the Dragon, 6, Captain Hall; the Sphynx, 6, Commander Hewlett, the Scorpion, 6, Commander Lord Amelius Beauclerk; the Stear-water, 2, Lieutenant the Honourable; the Pyladus, 2, Lieutenant Rice, the Queen's Lieutenant Osborne; the Lucifer, 2, Lieutenant R. Lloyd; the Black Eagle, Mr. Cook, Master, commanding; the Fairy, Mr. Welch, Master, commanding; the Vivid, 1, Mr. Sargent, Master, commanding; the Banshee, 2, Mr. W. Sanbert, Master, commanding; and the Fire Queen, Mr. Allen, Master, commanding.

CORK.

The intention of the Queen, on her arrival at Cove, is to proceed up the river in the Fairy Royal yacht, and from thence to land at the new Quay Island lately present and access on board. Her Majesty also intends to land at Cork, and to drive round the city. She is anxious that no expensive arrangements should be made for, or reception, and only desires to have such precaution as taken as may ensure the protection of persons in the streets during her progress

With respect to her Majesty's route, another account states that it will be by land, from the Cove to the city.

The following letter has been received by the Mayor:—

"DUBLIN CASTLE, 19th July, 1849.

"Sir, I am directed by the Lord-Lieutenant to acquaint you that Secretary Sir George Grey has transmitted to his Excellency a copy of your letter to him of the 14th inst., communicating the desire of the citizens of Cork that her Majesty would honour them by accepting a déjeûner in the Corn Exchange or the Cork Harbour, from Old Monkstown Road.

Commercial Buildings, and has requested that you might be informed that while her Majesty fully appreciates the strong feelings of loyalty and attachment which have been expressed in so gratifying a manner with reference to her intended visit to Ireland, the nature of that visit will prevent her Majesty from accepting invitations to any public entertainment.

"I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant,

"T. N. Redington."

Triumphal arches have been erected in the line of her Majesty's progress. They are decorated with Blackpool ginghams, which will be subsequently handed over to the "Ladies' Clothing Society," for the benefit of the poor.

The reception at Cork will be truly splendid. The line of route selected for the procession will display most picturesque views, as the committee, with excellent management, have arranged that her Majesty will proceed by one route and return by another. The Cork river is noted for its beauty, and the city itself is well calculated for scenic effect.

A brilliant display of fireworks is to come off at Rostellan, on her Majesty's arrival, which will have a fine effect when viewed from the eastern portion of the magnificent harbour of Cork. At Aghada, too, preparations have been made for a similar display, suitable to the joyous occasion, as also in Cove, so as to render the watering-place worthy of the intended visit of Royalty.

A tasteful pavillion has been erected on Columbine-quay, where her Majesty is expected to land, and receive a loyal and congratulatory address from the inhabitants of that town and island. Extensive benches for the spectators rise amphitheatrically on the quay, from which picturesque views of the river can be obtained, where the Royal Yacht and squadron will be moored, with every portion of the magnificent basin, studded as it will be on that occasion with every description of craft. The evening of her Majesty's arrival will be ushered in by the firing of cannon, and an exhibition of fireworks, both on land and water. The precise day of her Majesty's arrival is stated to be Friday.

We have this week Engraved the fine Harbour of Cork showing its most interesting points:—

1. Rostellan and Aghada.
2. Man-of-War Roads.
3. Corkabeg.
4. Spike Island.
5. Convict Dépôt.
6. Carlisle Fort.
7. Lighthouse.
8. Entrance to the Harbour.
9. Camden Fort.
10. Cove Harbour.
11. Hawlbowline Island and Stores.
12. Magazine
13. Black Point.
14. Monkstown Bay.
15. Part of the Town and Church Spire of Monkstown.

FINE ARTS.

"MALVOLIO I' THE SUN."

This charming picture was Mr. J. C. Horsley's only contribution to the Exhibition of the Royal Academy, which closed on Saturday last.

The scene is from Shakspeare's "Twelfth Night;" "Malvolio i' the Sun practising behaviour to his own shadow, Maria, Fabian, Sir Toby Belch, and Sir Andrew Aguecheek in the background," and at the point where Maria says, "Get you all three into the box-tree. * * * Lie thou there (throws down a letter); for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling."

Mr. Horsley has painted this scene of rich comedy with great success. The colouring is warm and mellow, and the effect characteristically sunshiny, while the grouping is well conceived. The fooling of Malvolio is admirable; and the three in the box-tree an episode of fine humour.

"Malvolio i' the Sun."—(Twelfth Night.)—Painted by J. C. Horsley.

SUMMER.

SUMMER SHADES.

Under the trees
Let me lie at ease,
To muse or slumber, wake or dream,
Lull'd by the ripple of the stream;
By the buzzing of bees like a trumpet tune,
By the whisper of leaves to the wind of noon,
That scarcely stirs the upper boughs
Or wafts a breath to feverish brows;
By the clink that sounds amid the grass,
Like temper'd steel on greaves of brass,
As the mail-clad grasshoppers chirp and run.
Lull'd by these murmurs many in one,
A refuge from the sultry sun,

Beneath the trees I love to lie,
Heedless how the time goes by—
Heedless, thoughtless, happy ever
Upon the greensward by the river

Upon that streamlet's mossy brink
The thrush and linnet bathe and drink;
There the tender violets grow,
And the water-lillies float and blow;
And the humble daisy-blossoms spread
Their snow-white petals tipp'd with red:
Into its breast the oak-tree drops
Its abortive acorn-cups;
And the beeches scatter their loosen'd leaves.
Far adown, the panting beeves
Cool the hoof and switch the tail,
And gaze upon the waters pale
With mild eyes, grateful for the shade
By the o'erarching verdure made.
Over its breast the dragon-fly
Darts in silken brilliancy;
And a myriad happy living things
Sport their variegated wings.
A little, but a lovely brook,
It flows through many a quiet nook—
A vein of life, a bounty given,
Refreshing earth, reflecting heaven.

By the sultry day opprest,
Sweet are shadows, sweet is rest;
Shade and rest and cooling wind,
And half vacuity of mind,
Drowsy waking, watchful sleep,
And a feeling calm and deep,
That though the world may fret and moil,
And busy slaves in cities broil,

Their sweltering care affects not us,
Under the leaves luxurious.
Gold and power, though both are good,
Lose their charm in the fresh greenwood.

THE STEWARDS' CUP.

THE GOODWOOD CUP.

THE CHESTERFIELD CUP.

THE GOODWOOD RACE PRIZE PLATE.—1849.

They cannot vie with ease and rest
And the cool winds on the waters' breast;
And the floating shadows that go and come,
And the sweet monotonous drowsy hum
That Nature's voices all express
To woo us to forgetfulness.

Peace on the spirit and the brain,
A sense of life unmix'd with pain—
Give me these. O sultry Summer,
And to thy shade as a frequent comer,
I will lie and dream on the wavy grass,
And let the pomp and pageant pass
Far from my sight; nor waste one hour
Of life and duty in thy bower.
The pillow mind, like fallow field,
May store crops of fairness yield;
And a wise Indolence may be
The mother of new industry:
So, Summer Shades, your worth I tell,
And woo you oft and love you well.

CHARLES MACKAY.

THE GOODWOOD PRIZE PLATES.

THE three racing prizes contested for during the past week are highly satisfactory specimens of the advancement made by English artists of late years in the modelling and execution of statuette groups in the precious metals. Their characteristic spirit and classic fidelity are indicative of a higher school than that from which emanated the racing "cups," of the last, and the first quarter of the present century. Now we have emblems of a better class than the mere insignia of modern jockeyism; in scenes and subjects from the antique age, or from the times of chivalry, the stirring sports, the elegant pastimes, the splendid services, and the pageant splendours of feudal life.

Two of this year's Goodwood Prizes have been designed and modelled by Mr. Alfred Brown, under the superintendence of Mr. Baily, R.A.; and manufactured by Messrs Hunt and Roskell, of Bond-street.

The first is a Silver Cup, three feet in height, richly decorated in the cinquecento style. On the body are two highly-finished bass reliefs of racing subjects, respectively the Saddling and the Race; figures of Victory forming the handles. The cover is surmounted with a spirited group of wild horses fighting and surrounding the foot of the Cup is a group of horses, a mare, and foal.

The second is a Silver Vase, of tazza form, 2 feet 6 inches high, embellished with Elizabethan ornament, and heads of the stag, the boar, and the wolf. On the base are three equestrian statuettes of hawking, hunting, and tilting, the early sports of the English nobility and yeomen, to which the improvement of the breed of horses in England may be attributed.

The third prize, designed and modelled by Mr. W. Spencer (the group by Mr. Cotterill), is from the establishment of Messrs Garrard, of the Haymarket, and is beautifully manufactured. The design is of the vase form, 31 inches in height, in the cinque-cento style, richly ornamented throughout. On the body and round the neck is a group representing the hunting of the Bison by the Sioux Indians in the wild prairies of North America, &c., a composition of remarkable vigour and characteristic beauty.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

A brilliant meeting at Goodwood has occupied nearly the whole of the current week, and has thrown every other description of sport into the shade. We shall next week have a host of provincial meetings, of which Brighton alone will offer any attraction to the metropolitan turfites: it looks well on paper and we have no doubt, from the new blood infused into the management, will repay the expense and trouble of a visit. The other meetings announced are Epsom, Beverley, Retford, Derby, Taunton, Worcester, Lincoln, Harlesdon, Chichester, and Ascot—which enough and something to spare. We do not anticipate any astounding results, but can promise plenty of sport.

The only metropolitan cricket matches of any interest will be at Kennington Oval, on Monday, between the County of Surrey and All England; on Thursday and Friday, at the same place, between East Surrey and North Kent, and on Tuesday, at Lord's, amongst the heroes of victualling. The All England match at Wandsworth, between eleven of All England and eighteen of the County of Surrey, commenced on Thursday.

The Volunteer Review (an attractive one to John Bull and his family) takes place on Sunday; Blackheath, Deptford, Stockton, and the Royal Southern Camp Reigates on Monday; Wimbledon, Tuesday; South Weald, Essex, and Clone, on Wednesday; Norwich and Worcester, on Thursday; and Poole and Bournemouth, on Friday.

Taking it altogether, it will be one of the busiest weeks of the season.

DOGBERTS COAT AND BADGE

This old annual contest, one of the most popular and attractive of the season, for the handsome and bridge bequeathed by Dogberts, the famous comedian, in honour of the succession of the family of her Majesty to the throne of Great Britain, took place on Wednesday. To the coat and badge for the winner, which has generally been the introduction to considerable advantages to the fortunate possessor, has been added £4 7s. 6d. for the second man, and £2 12s. 6d. for the third, the interest of £200 South Sea stock, the bequest of the late Sir W. Jolliffe. The race extends from the Swan at London-bridge, to the Swan at Chelsea, against the tide.

The weather was extremely fine; and as the time approached appointed for the start an immense number of boats moved towards the spot, and one of the Diamond steamers, which had been chartered for the occasion, was filled with company, whilst London Bridge, Bankside, Southwark, and Blackfriars, with the other bridges, and every point from which a view of any portion of the contest could be commanded, were crowded. The winners were placed as follows:—

Thomas Cole, Chelsea		1
James Arthur Messenger, Teddington		2
William Baths, Queenhithe		3

TOWER REGATTA.

This regatta, which ranks rather high in aquatic matches, was contended for on Tuesday, by six free waterman of the Tower stairs. A new skiff and other prizes were subscribed for by the gentry and tradesmen of the vicinity. The distance was from off Queen's-stairs, Tower, and round St. Katherine's Dock Buoy, opposite the entrance and Eel Chain to the place of starting; twice round each boat.

GRAND HEAT.

The winner of the third heat and the first man of the first and second heats contended for the grand heat.

RICHMOND TRADESMEN'S REGATTA.

This event came off on Tuesday, and afforded some very excellent sport. Eighteen competitors rowed in four heats for a pair of silver oars and other prizes, the gift of a gentleman who has distinguished himself as an aquatic amateur; and the contest passed off very agreeably, affording considerable gratification to the spectators.

YACHTING.—On the second day of the Waterford Harbour Regatta (Wednesday, July 25th), the Grand Challenge Cup Race one of the most singular specimens of naval architecture now afloat—the John Phipps, the property of Mr. Parsons, of Waterford, about 29 tons. Her great peculiarity lies in the shape of the bow and stern. She is of great length, which caused her to be long in tacking; but, when once under weigh, she passes through the water with great velocity, notwithstanding which the water is not thrown up before her, as is the case with a yacht of the old model. When under canvass, she has, in some positions, a very graceful appearance.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

Madame Sontag's brilliant career continues, and each night she improves in energy; although, appearing almost every night since her arrival, her strength has been taxed to the utmost. But for the moment her success has eclipsed the attraction of all the other great artists of the establishment, and to respond to the demand of the public for a time, she has devoted every moment either to studying new parts or to their performances. On Wednesday morning she presented herself in a new aspect, that of a concert singer; and success very she sang in four different languages which Madame Sontag pronounces she appeared to pronounce with equal ease; they seemed at all events equally correct to the ear of the audit ors. Not only did she do justice to this discrepancy, but it was most admirable to see how she gave to each composer the peculiar turn and the special value of his inspiration.

In singing the "Zingara," composed for her by Donizetti she was playful in the extreme. In her grand scena of "Freyschütz," there was dignity, power, and dramatic spirit; whilst the adjuration of Princess Isabel, in "Robert le Diable," was fraught with the sweetest sergument and the deepest pathos. The most novel part of the entertainment lounges

Dr. Whytehead, of Crayke, in Yorkshire, on receiving his midsummer rents, returned 10 per cent. to all tenants. The Rev. J. Hopton, of Canon Frome, near Ledbury, Gloucester, at his rent audit, on Wednesday, returned 10 per cent. to his tenants on the amount of their rents.

On Tuesday, a party of young men, nine or ten in number, were playing at cricket on a vacant piece of ground on Botany Wharf, near the Rob-buck Tavern, Chorley, when one of the players struck the ball with such force that the bat flew out of his hand, and hit a boy standing near, named Joseph Pendlebury, aged ten years, and killed him on the spot.

The interest of £1000 stock, made over to Eton College, in trust, by George Tomline, Esq., four years since, to be given annually to the best proficient among the scholars of the mathematical master (the Rev. Stephen Hawtrey), was awarded on Friday week, after a lengthened examination before Edmund R. P. Bochard, Esq., M.A., of Balliol College, Oxford, to Bosanquet. The assistant master's prize of books, of the value of ten pounds, was awarded to Longbourne; second prizeman, Martin.

Accounts received from the salt marshes in the Charente-Inférieure (France) state that the produce of salt is greater this year than at any former period. This fact is attributed to the unusually warm weather which prevailed in the month of June last.

At Charelles, in the department of the Rhone (France), immense damage has been caused lately by the overflowing of the river Sempsee. The streets were covered with water to the depth of twelve feet, and all the bridges were swept away. Fortunately, no lives were lost, but all the property in the shops was destroyed.

The Rev. Thomas Bacon has been appointed chaplain of the Royal Victoria Yacht Club, at Ryde.

The merchants, shipowners, captains of merchant-vessels, and colonists residing at Havre have presented a petition to the President of the French Republic, calling his attention to the present deplorable condition of Martinique and Guadaloupe. The petition states that the greatest anarchy now prevails in those islands, in consequence of the inconsiderate application of universal suffrage to the negro population, but just released from a state of slavery. After detailing the scenes of incendiarism, riot, and bloodshed which have taken place, the petition prays the withdrawal of the suffrage from the Negroes who thus abuse it.

A testimonial to the Duke of Richmond has been proposed by the recipients of the hardly-awarded war medals, as a suitable memorial for his Grace's energetic exertions in support of their claims upon the gratitude of the country. A committee has been formed, which comprises officers of every grade, both in the army and navy; and sub-committees are forming for Scotland, Ireland, and different parts of England, with the view of carrying the plan of subscription, and enabling every recipient of a medal to further the object in view, if so disposed. The subscriptions are strictly confined to the recipients of the medals, and are limited to £1 as the highest, and 5s. as the lowest amount for commissioned officers; while those for non-commissioned officers, privates in the army, and sailors, range as low as 1d.

The swimming-school games, which were established by the masters of Eton College, in 1843, for the purpose of awarding prizes to the most proficient, and for the election annually of the three professors of swimming, diving, and taking headers, took place at Athens, a retired spot on the Thames, about a mile above Windsor Bridge, on Friday week. The silver medal for the best swimmer in the school (the distance 300 yards) was won by Pearson, ma. The winner was elected Tachygnetic Professor.

The alterations in Bicester Church have now been completed. The gallery, which crossed the chancel, and obscured the east window, has been removed, and a more commodious one erected along the south aisle, by which about ninety sittings have been added to the former accommodation.

On Sunday morning, a sermon, on behalf of the funds of King's College Hospital, was preached at the church of St. George the Martyr, Queen-square, Bloomsbury, by the Rev. F. D. Maurice, M.A., Theological Professor, of King's College, &c., at the close of which a very liberal collection was made. It appears that the funds of the Institution were deficient last year by nearly £400; and the utmost endeavours are necessary to augment the number of annual subscribers to meet the present and future requirements of the hospital.

While the sexton of Crosthwaite church, Keswick, was digging the grave for the remains of the late Gideon Dare, he discovered an earthen ring, which on examination proved to be one which belonged to the deceased's former wife, and which was as perfect as on the day it was buried, although it had lain in the grave for upwards of forty-eight years.

Three cows, the property of Mr. Lancelot Steel, of Garnett House, Westmoreland, having recently died suddenly, the animals were opened, and evidence appeared that they had died from the deleterious effects of paint. The field had been manured from a receptacle into which the paint pots, &c. of a plumber and painter had been emptied, and this is supposed to be the origin of the mischief.

On Friday morning week, the foundry of Messrs. Rowan and Sons, Nottingham, Bleach, was discovered to be fire, and in a considerable time extensive offices of the firemen, a considerable portion of the fine building was completely gutted and property amounting to between £3000 and £4000 destroyed. A large number of men will be thrown out of employment for a considerable time in consequence of this unfortunate occurrence.

The German watering-place Ems is at this time crowded with all kind of celebrities. The Comtesse de Chambord, the Grand Duchesse Stephanie (of Baden), the Duke and Duchess of Montrose, the Marquis and Marchioness of Douglas, the Countess of Dunmore, Lady Sidney Clive, Mr. Bulwer Lytton, M.P., are already there; also, M. Montalembert and Jenny Lind.

J. R. Cookes, Esq., has resigned the office of Master of the Worcestershire foxhounds, which in the ensuing season will be hunted by that first-rate sportsman, Major Cowes.

At half-past eleven o'clock on Monday night, as Mr. Wade, of No. 22, Whitehall-street, Kennington, was passing through Lower Kennington-lane, he was stopped by two footpads, who knocked him down and robbed him of a half-sovereign, six half crowns, and eighteen shillings in other silver. Mr. Wade raised an alarm, but the fellows got clear away, what adds to the audacity of this robbery, is that it was committed within a stone's throw of the metropolitan police station for the district.

On Monday evening Edinburgh was favoured with a large party of visitors from London and other English towns, numbering considerably above a thousand, and much difficulty and inconvenience were experienced in getting accommodation at a late hour for so large a number.

At All Saints' Church, in Newcastle, on Sunday last, while the Rev. Mr. Jones was delivering an impressive sermon, his surplice caught the candles and was immediately in a blaze. In the confusion consequent upon the accident numerous persons rushed to the door of the church, ladies screamed and fainted, and all forgot the Rev. sufferer, until at last one gentleman, with more presence of mind than the rest, ascended the pulpit stairs, and aided Mr. Jones in extinguishing the flames, which they soon accomplished, without any injury being effected

The distribution of prizes to the pupils connected with the Spital-fields branch of the School of Design took place on Monday, in Crosby-hall, Bishop-gate-street. The Right Hon. the Earl Granville presided on the occasion, supported by the right hon. Lord Robert Grosvenor, Sir Edward North Buxton, Rev. Mr. Taylor, and other gentlemen.

On the arrival of the Manchester train at Blackburn, at half-past five on Tuesday, a porter, named Roger Slaughter, found in one of the carriages a small parcel lying on the seat, which he immediately took to the station-clerk: it contained £470 in gold and bank notes. About a quarter of an hour afterwards a claimant came and stated that he had left the train at Church, and, on finding his loss, made all haste to Blackburn to regain his charge, which, after proper inquiries, was handed over to him

A woman in the neighbourhood of Lanfechell (North Wales), while at work last week in her garden, fell asleep. On waking she found a large viper encircling her neck; she escaped unharmed except from fright.

A few days ago, a man of the name of Davies, of Foolow, near Eyam, in the Peak (Derbyshire), was engaged in removing some mining refuse at a mine called the Highstake, when the whole of the ground, to the extent of a long sward. The weapon being cleaned presented a very beautiful appearance, nearly the whole of the massively ornamented handle or hilt being silver, on which is the crown, surrounding a rose, Dieu soit qui mal y pense. It is supposed, natured that it was hidden there at the time of the Scottish rebellion, as many of the fugitives of the retreat are known to have passed through the locality.

At the Plymouth Great Western Docks, the contract work has been renewed, and several courses of stone have been laid during the past week. At the pier head some substantial masonry is erecting in place of the wall washed away in the spring of this year, and the warehouses on the eastern side of the harbour are being covered with new tar slating.

Mr. James Josiah Millard, of Cordwainers'-hall, one of the common council for the ward of Bread-street, has been appointed under-sheriff to Mr Alderman Lawrence, the senior sheriff of London and Middlesex for the ensuing year.

The Union Bank of London have given notice that in future they will allow 2 per cent on the minimum balance of accounts when they are not below £500, and 1 per cent. when they are not below £200, during the preceding six months; on balances below £200 no interest will be allowed.

By the recent death of Marshal Molitor the marshals of France are now reduced to five. Marshal Soult, Marshal under the empire, Mr. Gerard, lieutenant, Reille, and Oudinot de la Brancière, nominated under Louis Philippe. Marmont, who was also named by the Emperor, no longer figures in the list since 1830

The Queen has been pleased to approve of Mr. Thomas H. Crittenden, as Consul at Liverpool, and of Mr. Alfred Michell, as Consul for the United States of America.

COUNTRY NEWS.

THE BRITISH ARCHÆOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

The sixth annual congress of the British Archæological Association commenced its sittings in Chester, on Monday last. The chief objects of the society are to promote a personal intercourse between antiquaries and historical inquirers who reside in different parts of the country and abroad, and to afford a week's amusement and instruction by the reading and discussion of papers on antiquarian and historical subjects, and in visiting and examining together the antiquities of the locality, with a view of illustrating and preserving the ancient monuments, arts, manners, customs, and remains of past times.

The opening meeting took place at the Royal Hotel, on Monday evening, and was attended by the Bishop, Dean, Chancellor, Canon Residentiary, and other clergy; by many of the principal families of Chester, Cheshire, and the principality.

At 6 o'clock, Lord Albert Conyngham, the President, was introduced by the Bishop of Chester, who, in the course of a short address, stated that the ancient city of Chester contained many remarkable remains of the middle ages calculated to give new light, and impart new interest, to what was scarcely understood.

The noble President then proceeded to deliver an address, dwelling at some length upon the interest which attached to the study of archæology, and pointing out the various antiquities connected with the city of Chester.

The remainder of the evening was occupied with the reading of several interesting papers.

On Tuesday, the members of the congress assembled at ten o'clock in the Council Court of the County Hall, where the chair was taken by the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Chester, supported on his right by the Right Hon. Lord de Tabley, and on his left by the Worshipful the Mayor of Chester. Lord Albert Conyngham had been obliged to leave Chester early that morning, on account of the illness of his uncle (W. J. Denison, Esq., M.P. for West Surrey)

Mr. W. Black, Assistant Keeper of her Majesty's Records, delivered an elaborate and able lecture on the public records of the Palatinate of Chester.

Sir W. Betham, P.S.A., Ulster King at Arms, then read an interesting paper on palatinate jurisdictions and liberties in Ireland

After these lectures, the members of the congress devoted some time to a personal examination of the antiquities of Chester.

In the evening, lectures, illustrative of Chester Castle, were delivered by Mr. Ashpitel, F.S.A., and Mr. Bailly, F.S.A.; Mr. Smith, F.S.A., on the Roman remains of Chester; and by the Rev. J. C. Bruce, on the present state and original design of the Roman Wall which extends from the Tyne to the Solway.

On Wednesday morning Mr. A. Ashpitel and Mr. C. Baily illustrated their lectures during a promenade round the Cathedral.

At noon the association left Chester for Conway by a special train, calling on the way to inspect Flint Castle and Basingwerk Abbey.

On Thursday morning the association left Conway for Liverpool, where they met a most gratifying reception from the authorities, who gave them a soirée in the Town-hall.

Similar excursions were made on Friday, in the neighbourhood of Chester, and the proceedings terminated this (Saturday) morning by a public breakfast

"ELECTION SATURDAY" AT ETON COLLEGE.

The annual festival of "Election" was celebrated at Eton on Saturday, the interesting proceedings commencing at two o'clock, immediately upon the arrival of the Rev. H. G. Hand, the Vice-Provost of King's College, Cambridge, and the two Posers the Rev. R. A. F. Barrett and the Rev. W. Wells, of the same college, who were received by the collegiate authorities and a numerous party of noblity and gentry from the neighbourhood and distant parts of the kingdom, most of whom were "Old Etonians." The "oldest speech," in Latin (referring to the events of the past year in connexion with the college), having been delivered by Bradshaw, the Senior King's a holar, and the future captain of the school, the numerous party retired to the lodge, where a splendid entertainment was given by the Provost of Eton to his distinguished visitors, including Lord Llanelloe, Sir Thomas Fremantle, Lane Fox, Esq., Captain Keppel, Lord Powis, the Hon. Dawson Damer, &c.

In the evening, shortly after six o'clock, "absence" having been called by the head-master, the whole school proceeded to the Brocas, on the banks of the Thames, to celebrate the "Election Regatta." Many hundreds of persons, in carriages and on foot, were assembled in the Brocas. The banks on either side of the river were also crowded with spectators to witness the starting of the boats for Old Sarley, about two miles from Windsor. Shortly before seven o'clock, the boats, gaily decorated with flags, having been manned by their respective crews, the captains and cockswains attired in full naval uniform, and the crews in fancy costume, the whole were got under weigh, and proceeded to Surley, preceded by the band, in two large shallops, of the 2d Regiment of Life Guards, in attendance at Windsor.

Upon the arrival at Surley Hall, the crews and their friends partook of a cold collation, which was elegantly laid out in a spacious marquée on the Buckinghamshire side of the river. After drinking bumpers of champagne and claret to the health and long life of her Majesty, the Prince Consort, the Prince of Wales, and the other members of the Royal Family, the crews again embarked for Windsor, where they arrived shortly before nine o'clock. At eight o'clock they then took place from the eyot, in the centre of the Thames, the military band, and the drums and fifes stationed below the bridge, performing during the pyrotechnic exhibition.

On Monday the usual "Election" speeches were delivered by the students, in the presence of the Duke of Cambridge and a distinguished circle; and at three o'clock the Election Dinner, to which upwards of 60 guests were invited, took place in the College Hall.

The greater number of the pupils left, on vacation, in the evening.

BOSTON ELECTION.—The nomination of the candidates for the representation of this borough, vacant by the retirement of its late member, the Lord Mayor of London, took place on Wednesday. Mr Frankfield, the Conservative candidate, having resigned, there remained but two candidates—viz. Captain Pelham, who was proposed by Mr. W. Garfit, banker, of Boston, and seconded by Alderman Rawson; and Mr. D. W. Wire, who was proposed by Mr. G. Smith, and seconded by Mr. Slater. The show of hands being in favour of the latter gentleman, a poll was demanded for Captain Pelham. The poll commenced on Thursday morning at eight o'clock, and at its close, at four o'clock, P.M., the numbers were—Pelham, 426; Wire, 329: Majority, 97. Captain Pelham was accordingly declared duly elected.

YORKSHIRE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—The annual meeting of this society was held at Leeds, on Tuesday and Wednesday. The show of implements and stock was a great improvement on that of former years.

THE CROPS.—Nothing can be more indicative of an abundant harvest than the very promising and healthy appearance of the wheat and other crops throughout the country. Great apprehension was at one time entertained that the late severe storms, as prevalent during the last fortnight, would have laid down the heavy land crops. Happily that fear has proved groundless, the crops being, in many instances, improved, the rain having caused the grain to swell and increase in bulk. Barley, oats, peas, and beans are, in many instances, looking admirably well; in short, there never was a more favourable prospect of a plentiful harvest than at present.

EXTENSIVE LAND-SLIP ON THE SOUTH YORKSHIRE RAILWAY.—On Monday evening, an enormous quantity of earth and stone, upwards of 3000 tons weight, gave way in the north side of the cutting of the South Yorkshire Railway, about half a mile above Warmsworth Church. Fortunately, when the men were at work at the time. To the refore the accident was not attended by any loss of life. The piece which gave way is about 30 yards in length and 10 in breadth, and extends from the top to the bottom of the cutting. Upon which, it is to have been partly caused by the side of the gallery having been made too perpendicular, and partly occasioned by the late heavy rains—the water having percolated to a considerable depth, and loosened the stratum of clay on which the main weight of the stone depends. Besides the piece which has already given way, another large portion is also in a very critical situation, a large fissure having opened on the top of the cutting for nearly 50 yards further.

DARING INSTANCE OF PRESENCE OF MIND.—As the supervisor of inland revenue at Aberystwith Mr. J. Miller, his nephew, and two other natural gentlemen, geologists, were last week examining some strata of rock in the cliffs between Aberystwith and Llanbrystid, they proceeded along a narrow ledge of projecting stone on the face of the cliff, about 120 feet above the level of the sea, which they incautiously happened to be at full flow. In passing round a projecting angle, "which for ages has frowned on all below," the professors and the revenue officer had rounded the point, and were proceeding with the greatest caution, one after the other, breaking from under his feet, he was whirled round with his face towards the sea, and as he descended he seized with one hand the ledge beneath him, and with the other he extended the other hand to him, and it was firmly his uncle's feet, whilst he extended the other hand to him, and it was firmly grasped by the revenue officer, who held him suspended for full five minutes, during which time he with great difficulty maintained his position, there not being more than six inches to stand upon. At length a breathless pause ensued, whilst Mr. Miller stood on a rugged projection of rock about 90 feet below them, and on which he concluded the unfortunate youth was inevitably doomed to be dashed. But the uncle at length said, with all the calmness imaginable, "Tom, there is no help for it; I'll save you, or we will both perish together," and with a firm voice he commanded the young man to loose his hold of the rock, which was mechanically obeyed, with a faint reply, "Yes, uncle." At this awful moment Mr. Miller bounding upwards into the air, carrying the young man with him, and such was the force with which he leaped that the shock caused them to perform several somersets over each other as large pieces of rock rolled together. With the rapidity of flash of lightning they disappeared beneath the foaming billows, having cleared the craggy ledge, which projected more than six feet from the perpendicular of the point over which they descended. INTERIOR OF THE BYZANTINE CHURCH, AT WILTON, NEAR SALISBURY

THE ARCHÆOLOGICAL INSTITUTE AT SALISBURY

We briefly noticed this meeting in our Journal of last week.

On Friday morning a meeting of the historical section was held at the Council-room, at which papers were read by distinguished members; after which, on the invitation of the Right Hon Sidney Herbert, M.P., the President, the members and visitors proceeded on an excursion to Wilton House, the ancient seat of the Pem-

[illegible]rtly after three o[illegible] party had assembled in the c[illegible] the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert [illegible] of visitors, Lord [illegible] of Hereford; Dr [illegible], Dr. Buckland, &

Mr. Charles Newton then began a valuable and interesting lecture on the various marbles, busts, bas-reliefs, and antiquities of that celebrated collection

At the close of the lecture, the library was thrown open to the company, and a splendid collation was served to about two hundred guests. A further portion were accommodated in the dining-room, where the health of the Right Hon. Sidney Herbert was [illegible] Chatfield, and drunk with enthusiasm. [illegible] the noble grounds and park; after which [illegible] to the Byzantine church lately built at Wilton, which we have illustrated

[illegible] beautiful Church, erected for the Honourable Sidney Herbert, M.P., in 1843, is the finest example of church architecture in the Romanesque or Lombardic style in England; and to the [illegible] Wyatt and Brandon, the utmost praise is [illegible] art

[illegible] differs from the usual character of English ecclesiastical [illegible] that, instead of a spire attached to and rising from the [illegible] campanile rises lofty from the ground, and is connected with the Church by a cloister consisting of two double rows of enriched columns. The great west doorway is of the most ornate character, and its deeply receding and richly [illegible] doorway gives great effect to the front; and additional variety is obtained by the tints of the stone employed in two columns which stand in advance of the wall, differing from the other parts of the work, and the columns rest on the backs of two couchant lions of red sandstone, which are bedded on plinths of polished black marble. There is a fine wheel window over this sumptuous doorway.

The interior of the Church is alike remarkable for its beautiful proportions and enriched character, and to illustrate it fully would require very many engravings. From our large view of the interior, the general appearance of the Church may be inferred, and our readers must picture to themselves the various portions in all their glory of colour and decoration, as we are now about to describe them.

The roof is open timber-work, and is made of fir, stained to imitate oak; and the seats are open, of oak, and have carved elbows. The capitals of the large columns display great taste and variety of design, all differing from each other, and of two of them we give slight ideas under our large view. These capitals were, we believe, nearly all sculptured by local workmen. The font is of ancient Italian workmanship, the basin being of chocolate-coloured marble, the shaft of black marble inlaid with white, and black panels. The separation of the chancel from the nave is marked by four steps and three large arches, the full height and nearly the whole width of the nave and aisle respectively, supported on columns of black and gold marble, each in one block, with white marble bases and alabaster capitals.

The pulpit, placed on the northern side, near the chancel arch, is of the most superb description, being profusely decorated with elaborate mosaic-work, chiefly ancient; the black marble columns to support the pulpit have capitals and bases of white alabaster; the small twisted columns round the pulpit are of ancient mosaic. The friezes and other sculptural enrichments are of modern workmanship, and exquisitely designed. This pulpit forms the subject of one of our Illustrations. The brass eagle is of ancient workmanship; the stand is modern. The reading-desk is composed of pieces of old carving, probably of Spanish workmanship.

The chancel is most gorgeously decorated, the vaulted roof being painted blue, and studded with gold stars, the ribs being embellished with running patterns, in colours. The spaces are entirely covered with polychromic enrichments. The reredos of the altar has an arcade of semicircular arches, supported by twisted columns of red marble, with capitals and bases of alabaster. Above the arcade is a series of single-light windows, filled with the richest stained glass. The roof of the central apse has the sacred monogram within a circle on a field of the most gorgeous colours and gilding. There is a series of pierced arcades above the arches of the nave, producing the effect of a triforium; and above them is a range of clerestory windows. Most of the windows are filled with stained glass, partly ancient and partly modern, arranged and fitted in by Messrs. Ward and Nixon.

The organ is in the north aisle of the chancel; it formerly stood in Wilton House, and was presented to the Church by the Countess of Pembroke; it has, however, been much enlarged and renovated by Messrs. Bevington. There is a screen at the west end, separating the porches and gallery stairs from the Church, and forming a support to the gallery front, which is extremely enriched, the whole surface being carved in stone; and on the wall, between the columns, the charitable bequests to the parish are written in illuminated characters. Along the gallery front a text from Scripture is sculptured in pierced work, so as to form an enriched parapet to the gallery.

There are texts of Scripture painted over the chancel arches, the apse arches, and the vestry door. The door-case leading into the cloister is enriched by the introduction of two twisted columns of black marble, and four pilasters, with ancient mosaic panels inserted; and above this door, and forming a picturesque mass with it, is a monument of Elizabethan date, which was removed from the old church. Red marble columns support the arch of this monument, and thus carry colour with artistic effect upon the wall. The Church is paved with a tesselated pavement, by Singer, of Vauxhall; and the central apse is paved with a mosaic pavement: the three steps and their pedestals are of marble. The twisted mosaic columns which support the lamps in the chancel are of the same date and material as those in the pulpit and other parts of the chancel, they having originally formed part of a shrine in a church at Rome. They belonged to Horace Walpole, and were bought at the sale at Strawberry Hill.

In conclusion, we repeat, that this exquisite Church reflects the highest credit on its architects, and is an unique specimen of the decorative glories of the Romanesque style of architecture.

The officers and corps of Yeomen of the Guard assembled on Tuesday in the garden front of St. James's Palace, in full uniform, under arms, and were inspected by the Marquis of Donegall, G.C.H., Captain of the corps.

THE LATE JEEJEEBHOY DADABHOY, ESQ.

Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy, aged 63 years and 10 months, born in 1785, died, at his residence in Rampart-row, Bombay, on Saturday, the 12th May, 1849, after an illness of about a month.

He was a Parsee banker, merchant, agent, and broker, and had been in business upwards of forty years, during which period he was banker and broker to many European mercantile houses. His transactions at one time were extensive, and his name is well known in all the commercial towns of England, Scotland, France Germany, Austria, Egypt, India, China, Mauritius, &c. A few years ago he retired from the firm of Messrs. Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy, Sons, and Co., but left his name by associating his sons, who have since carried on the business, under the advice and experience of their father. Although Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy was no longer a partner, he nevertheless attended daily at the counting-house, and superintended the management. The firm ranks among the first Parsee commercial houses in India.

THE LATE JEEJEEBHOY DADABHOY, ESQ., OF BOMBAY.

Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy was one of the most active among the native capitalists in the establishment of the three banks in Bombay; and he served his time as director respectively in the Oriental and Commercial Banks. To him and to Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy the inhabitants of Western India are indebted for the introduction of steam navigation for commercial and passenger traffic—the steamer Sir James Rivett Carnac, the first, and by far the best-paying, of the Bombay steamers, having been built by them. Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy, the manager of this company, so judiciously conducted the business, that in the course of six years he divided profits amounting to nearly the outlay.

He shared, indeed, in every enterprise which promised to promote public advantage, however little his personal interests might be concerned. Among the commercial joint-stock companies, he was a large shareholder in the following:—The Railway Companies, Cotton Screw Companies, Steam Navigation Company, Colaba Land and Cotton Companies, most of the Bombay Marine and Life Insurance Companies, the Bengal India General Steam Navigation Company, several Calcutta Insurance Companies, &c. His capital was likewise engaged in advances on coffee, sugar, cocoa-nuts, and other plantation estates on the Malabar coast and Ceylon, and also in the island of Bencoolen.

Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy was for nearly twenty years a member of the Parsee Punchayet. This position frequently imposed important duties on him for the general benefit of the Parsee community. He was also constantly called upon to arbitrate and settle matters in dispute between members of his caste, frequently on subjects of family quarrels. His straightforward judgment invariably gained him the esteem and respect of all those who had to submit to his decisions; indeed, he made use of his high position to heal dissensions, soothe animosity, and put an end to misunderstanding and strife.

In matters of charity his purse was always open to the poor of his community. His name is likewise to be found in almost all the lists of public subscriptions and private charities, both European and native. He responded to every call in support of native education, and subscribed largely to the several public and private institutions. At the time of his death, forty-two schools, in various parts of the Bombay Presidency, were wholly supported by his bounty.

A temple, costing 50,000 rupees, or £6000, was, a few years ago, built entirely at his expense; and whereas in the island of Bombay a well could be dug to supply water to the poor, Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy assisted in the means for the same

He has left a widow, four sons, three daughters, twenty-one grandchildren, and six great-grandchildren, to whom he has bequeathed a large amount of wealth

Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy died at four o'clock in the afternoon of the 12th of May last, and was followed by the members of his family. The news of his death spread with astonishing rapidity and in no great degree of time around the Parsees were seen in numbers hastening towards the deceased's house. By five o'clock the crowd was so great, that not only the vast apartments were filled, but benches had to be placed in the street along and opposite to the house, for the accommodation of the visitors. The Parsee ministers (or priests) entered in great numbers, and prayers were said all night.

On Sunday morning, at half-past six o'clock, the funeral took place It is estimated that upwards of 4000 persons were present at the residence, and at the Temple of Silence. The procession was immense—the followers walking two by two, second only to the procession of the Queen. The remains having been deposited in the Temple of Silence, according to the rites of the Parsee religion, the sons present caused about £200 to be distributed in small sums to the poor During the whole day prayers were continued on and Sunday evening another large concourse of friends and acquaintances assembled in the deceased's house, when about 2000 pieces of mulls and lappets were distributed to the poor of their caste

On the third day (Monday), usually the grand ceremonial day, at half-past one, the friends and acquaintances commenced assembling, and by the appointed hour, three o'clock, the house and street were crowded, upwards of 3000 Parsees being present. The sacred fire having been brought from the temple, the religious service was performed. After the ceremony, the Secretary to the Parsee Punchayet announced to the persons present that, by his will, Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy left a sum of £21,380 (or £20,130), to be invested in Government securities in the names of eight trustees, four of whom being his sons, the interest of which amount is to be annually or half yearly divided in charities for the relief of the subscribers of his caste; Bomanjee Jeejeebhoy, the eldest son present, likewise announcing that the family have raised a small subscription of 12,880 rupees or (£1255), which they purpose adding to the above-named charitable fund.

At four o'clock the religious part of the ceremonies being terminated, visitors of other religions were received. The male portion of the family took their seats near the entrance door, and received the visits of many of the principal European merchants. The Hindoo, Mussulman, and other casts of native merchants, also attended in great numbers, to offer their visits of condolence. The reception lasted till seven o'clock, when prayers were resumed, which terminated by nine.

The following day, the usual custom of feeding the poorer Parsees was gone through. More than two thousand five hundred persons attended at their public place, and partook of the repast.

On the fifth day, the counting-house of Messrs Jeejeebhoy Dadabhoy, Sons, and Co., was again opened, and business resumed.

There was likewise a charitable distribution in the towns of Surat, Broach, &c., where Parsees reside.

THE CHURNET VALLEY LINE OF THE NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE RAILWAY.

THE communication between Manchester and Derby is now made complete, by the opening of the Churnet Valley line, from North Rode (Macclesfield) to Uttoxeter, with what is termed the Willington Deviation, between Burton and Derby. We understand it is intended to convey passengers the whole journey without change of carriage. The distance is about sixty miles.

Nothing can exceed the natural beauty of the country almost the entire distance. On leaving North Rode, Cloud Hall is in full view, and as the line enters the valley of the Dane, which it crosses by some lofty embankments. The same valley is intersected by the Macclesfield Canal, as it winds its sinuous way amongst the hills on a series of embankments almost equally elevated; and about a mile further still to the west it is likewise crossed by the magnificent Dane Viaduct, on the North Staffordshire main line, a view of which was given in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS of June 30. We question if three such legantic and costly works on any line of railway and the canal are to be found in such close neighbourhood in any other part of the kingdom. The three can be seen at once by the traveller along either, or from the Leek and Macclesfield old mail road.

The Rudyard Reservoir, which is the subject of our present illustration, occupies what would seem almost a natural basin amongst the hills between Rushton and Leek—the dam-head being comparatively insignificant in extent, though the reservoir is about two miles long, and 300 or 400 yards wide There is nothing artificial in its appearance, which is that of a very charming lake. The depth averages twenty to thirty feet. It is one of several reservoirs constructed for storing water for the service of the Trent and Mers. Canal (now the property of the North Staffordshire Company), and is filled by a feeder of four miles in length, from near the head of the river Dane, which pours down torrents of water after every heavy shower. The line skirts the side of the reservoir its entire length, as shown in our sketch, which was taken near the dam-head.

The town of Leek is approached through a tunnel, five hundred yards long. There are likewise tunnels at Cheddleton and Oakamoor of nearly equal length; and a shorter one between Leek and Rushton. The deep cutting north of that at Oakamoor, they are cut through the red sandstone rock, and arched with brick. That at Oakamoor go a through the clay and coal measures.

It is below Leek that the line first enters the valley from which its name is derived. A succession of beauties meets the eye the traveller as he proceeds, nature having scattered her charms of hill and dale, wood and water, sterile rock and flowery mead, in the richest profusion; and with attracting people to natural advantages, the hand of art has added many additional charms to the scene. This is especially the case in the vicinity of Alton Towers, the princely demesne of the Earl of Shrewsbury, where a new structure, in the style of the Rhenish castles, is perched on a rocky eminence on the right of the river at the Baddeley Edge station, which exhibits the taste and munificence of the noble owner. Alton Towers, where the line resides, is barely visible from the railway, the valley being narrow, and the sides of the hills abrupt and clothed with wood.

We ought to mention that, from Cheddleton to Froghall, the Chaldon Canal, the rail way, and the river Churnet run side by side down the valley, the railway sometimes crossing one, and then the other, in pursuit of the most eligible line. From Froghall to Uttoxeter the navigation is stopped; and what was the channel of the canal now serves the purposes of the railway

A abundance of excellent stone has been quarried during the construction of the line. Nearly all the bridges and the stations are consequently handsome buildings of stone—the latter being principally in the Tudor style

The Churnet Valley Line forms part of the contract of Messrs Fredwell; and the style and solidity of the works does the firm infinite credit

An excel ent traffic is expected to pass over the line, especially as it offers to tourists no only the sight of its own varied beauties, but easy access to that most interesting, but hitherto comparatively unknown district, the Staffordshire Moorlands

NORTH STAFFORDSHIRE.—July 30: Half-yearly meeting: Stoke-upon-Trent: Mr. J. L. Ricardo in the chair.—The report declared the advantageous [illegible] of the Railway and the Canal, whose receipts had increased. A dividend of three shillings per share was declared. The contract for making the line is satisfactory. A sum of £7000 to be laid aside as a depreciation fund. The expenditure for constructing the line had come within the estimate by £114,000. The report was adopted, and the recommendation to reduce the number of directors to be considered by the board.

READING, GUILDFORD, AND REIGATE.—August 2: Half-yearly Meeting: Mr. Alderman Salomons in the chair.—The report was presented, which stated that the works of the entire line the company was empowered to construct from Reading to Ash (20 miles), and from Shalford to Redhill (13½ miles), were completed, and ready for opening. A certain portion of the main [illegible] from Guildford to Godalming was under construction by the South-Western Company, and was to be completed within the month, thereby completing the line. The two extreme parts, from Reading to Farnborough, and from Redhill to Reigate, were open for the 4th of July last. The directors deprecate the extension of the Epsom line to Leatherhead (by the Brighton and Portsmouth Companies), as tending to divert the traffic of the Reading, Guildford, and Reigate line from its natural channel. After further payment for the Courts of Law will sanction such. a proceeding, [illegible] adopted, and the directors authorised to borrow £50,000 on debenture, to fulfil the engagements of the company. So soon as the line is opened, the proprietors will receive the guaranteed dividend from the South-Eastern Company.

NEWRY AND ENNISKILLEN RAILWAY.—August 2nd: Half-yearly Meeting: Lord Newry in the chair.—A report was presented, which stated that, until the line s opened to Portadown, that portion of it between Newry and Gorah must remain unproductive; but the direc ors felt assured that, as soon as that portion of the line was completed, they would be enabled to make arrangements for so disposing of the whole property as to admit of a considerable return being made to the proprietors. It also stated that three of the directors (who were also connected with the Newry and Rostrevor line) had retire'd, as it was supposed the Harbour Bill, in two successive sessions might possibly clash. The report was adopted, a number of shares forfeited, a new direction constituted, and a series of resolutions passed for the purpose of preventing any further expenditure on the line, which, it was understood, would materially be promoted by the Newry, Warrenpoint, and Rostrevor, or the Dublin and Belfast Junction Company, when it is calculated that a return of from £3 15s. to £4 per share may be made to the proprietors for the £7 per share paid. A vote of thanks was given to the late directors.

MONKLANDS.—July 25: General Meeting: Glasgow. Mr. A. S. Finlay in the chair.—The dividend declared by the report was at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and the directors expected to be shortly able to add to it. Collieries are in every way reducing their liabilities. The goods traffic has been lessened by the depressed state of the coal and mineral trade, but the passenger traffic is 5½ per cent. over the first half-year. The weight of the revenue are £20,137; expenditure, £11,353; balance, £8783. The report was adopted.

EDINBURGH AND NORTHERN.—July 25: Special Meeting: Edinburgh: Mr J Ba four in the chair.—Sanction was given for raising £250,000, by the creation of new shares, to be called up at the rate of £5 per cent. per annum for five years, and 5 per cent. in perpetuity. Two shares were to be allotted to every holder of a £20 share.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS FOR THE WEEK.

Continued sales of stock for money have exercised a depressing influence on English securities during the past week. To this cause may be added an indisposition to purchase on the part of capitalists, which is evidenced by the sums and prices of the floating debt. Consols opened on Monday at 93⅞ ⅞, receded to 93⅝, but afterwards sold, closing at 93⅞ ⅝. Opening on Tuesday at the last quotations, prices receded as the day advanced to 93⅝, but closed at 93⅞ for money and 93⅝ ⅞ for account. On Wednesday the opening prices were 93⅝ ⅞, declined afterwards to 93⅜, but rallied before the close to 93⅝ ⅞ for money and time Dullness and absence of speculative business prevailed on Thursday, Consols receding to 93⅜ ⅝ for money, Exchequer Bills quotable 45 to 50 premium. A further decline since transpired, but the tendency of the market is towards a decline, it being generally anticipated that, as the Continent becomes tranquil, a large amount of Stock will be sold, that has been purchased here for safety during the late disturbed state of Europe, the proceeds being required for the renewal of commercial enterprise At the close of the week prices were—For Bank Stock, 198½; Reduced, 92½; Consols, 93⅜; New Three Cent. Annuities, 93⅜; New Two and-a-Half per Cent. Annuities, expire Jan., 1860, 9⅞; India Bonds, £1000. 85 pm; Ditto, under £1000, 82 pm; South Sea New Annuit-s, 89½; Consols for Account, 93⅝; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 51 pm; £500, June, 51 pm; Small, June, 51 pm.

In the foreign funds operations have been to the usual extent, and the alteration in prices has been proportionately insignificant. Portuguese Four per Cents have receded from 30½-30 to 29-28¾ ex dividend. Mexican has also been flat, but without much variation. Spanish is lower, but the business done continues well support d. The closing quotations are, for Buenos Ayre Bonds, Account, 46; Grenada Bonds, 16⅜; Greek Bonds, 6; Mexican Five per Cent., 1846, 19½; Ditto, Account, 19⅜; Ditto, Deferred, 5; Peruvian Bonds, Six per Cent., 1840, 18½; Ditto, Passive, 3½; French, Three per Cent., 54f. 50c.; Exchange, 25. 40c.; Belgian Two and-a Half per Cent., 46½; Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cent., 57 5-16ths; Dutch Four per Cent. Certificates, 91¼.

The Share Market, although comparat vely inactive, has been tolerably firm: and as the meetings for declarations of dividends are now closely approaching, not much business in the papery lines can be expected until the several results are known. The following prices of shares last dealt in will best illustrate the state of business:—Caledonian, 24¾; Ditto, Quarter Shares, 6; Eastern Counties, 8¾; Edinburgh and Glasgow Bonds, 10; Edinburgh, Perth, and Dundee, 45½; Great Northern, 99; Ditto, Half, A, Deferred, 42; Ditto, Five per Cent Preference, 4; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 35¼; Great Western, 53¾; Lancashire and Yorkshire, Quarters, 18¼; Ditto, New, £17, 11; Hull and Selby, 92½; Lancashire and Yorksh re, Quarters, 18¼; Ditto, New, Guaranteed Six per Cent., 13¾ xi; Ditto (Preston and Wyre), 39½; Lancashire Union, 3¾; London and North-Western, 102½; Ditto, New, Quarters, 1⅞; London and South-Western, 39½; Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire, New, £10 Pref., 11½; Midland, 59½; Ditto, Quarters, 17½; Norfolk, 35; Ditto, New, £50, 23; North British, 13; Ditto, Preference, 6; Ditto, Deferred, Quarters, ex la; Reading, Guildford, and Reigate, 16½; Shrewsbury and Birm., 5; Ditto, New, Guaranteed, 10; Shropshire Union, 2½; South Eastern, 21½; Ditto, No. 3, 1½; Ditto, Somerset, and Dorset, 8½; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 24½; Ditto, Newcastle Extension, 13½; Ditto, Great Northern and Eastern, Preference, 3½; York and North Midland, 20½; Ditto, Preference, 7½; Eastern, 2½; Great Indian Peninsular, 2½; Ditto, New, Quarters, 2½ ex la

The amount of business transacted in Consols, on Friday, was small; in prices, however, no material alteration took place. The Three per Cents, Money, were done at 92½ ⅞; the Three per Cents, Reduced, 92½; Bank Stock, 198½; India Bonds, 84s to 85s, and Exchequer Bills, 48s to 51s premium. Foreign Bonds were flat. Dutch Two-and-a-Half per Cents, 58; Mexican, 27; Russian, Iron, Spanish Three per Cents, 34½; and the Fives, 18½. Railway Shares met a very dull inquiry.

COLLECTION OF EGYPTIAN ANIMALS,

IN THE GARDENS OF THE ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY, REGENT'S PARK PRESENTED BY HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS IBRAHIM PACHA.

The late Viceroy of Egypt, some months before his death, placed at the disposal of the Hon. Charles Murray, her Majesty's Consul-General, a collection of living animals which had been obtained by his Highness' command in Nubia, and which was destined as a mark of his favour to enrich the Zoological Society. His Highness during his visit to this country had frequent opportunities of observing the useful influence exercised by this institution, and readily lent himself towards increasing its means of instruction. The Council availed themselves of his Highness' liberal offer to maintain this collection in Cairo until the period had arrived which might appear most favourable for its transp.rt to England; and they accordingly despatched during the spring of the present year a trustworthy agent to receive and attend to the animals from the time of their delivery at Alexandria, whither they were conveyed at the cost and by the direction of its Highness' representative.

The collection is magnificent gift. The Hon. C. A. Murray succeeded in obtaining three Lions, a Cheetah, an enormous Baboon, Ostriches, Gazelles, Sultanas Fowls, Pelicans, and a Plum ego; besides a collection of living Reptiles, which accompanied to about 70 head, and included examples of 13 species of great interest and nove.ty.

It gives us great pleasure to congratulate the Society on the successful issue of Mr. Murray's exertions in this matter, and to say that the animals reach ed in the whole of this extensive consignment subscqu.nt to its being put on board the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Indus, in which it was conveyed to Southampton. The Cheetah, a most beautiful animal which Mr Landseer has selected for our illustration, attracted a curio s multitude of spectators during their disembarkation at Southampton, and during their passage from the Southern Railway to the gardens of the Society. This will be a most considerable an addition to the previously existing treasures of the society has att.acted a gradually increasing concourse of visitors to the Gardens, which we are satisfied has drawn many persons of limited means to enjoy gratifying from the sight of the beauty and endless variety of Nature. Mr Landseer has been guided in the composition by the desire of rep senting the entire gift of the Viceroy, as well as the most popularly interesting forms in the whole collection.

There are females rising to years old; they are in perfect health, and will doubtless maintain the stock which the Society have been so fortunate hitherto in rearing of this sougat-after beautiful animal. They are paced provisionally in the enlargement of the Giraffe House, in the same building wi the Rhinoceros.

The four ostriches, now in posse sion of the Society, are probably the first examples of this bird which have ever been seen in confinement. Two of them are placed in the large enclosure formerly occupied by the Aurochs, and exhibit an elasticity and rapidity in their paces which is indescribable.

The Egyptian Gazelle, which forms the subject of our group, are fine examples of the most esteemed breed in Lower Egypt; they were attended throughout the voyage by an Arab driver

The Sultanas Fowls are females rising two years old; they are in perfect health, and will doubtless maintain the stock which the Society have been so fortunate hitherto in rearing of this sougat-after beautiful animal. They are paced provisionally in the enlargement of the Giraffe House, in the same building wi the Rhinoceros.

The four ostriches, now in posse sion of the Society, are probably the first examples of this bird which have ever been seen in confinement. Two of them are placed in the large enclosure formerly occupied by the Aurochs, and exhibit an elasticity and rapidity in their paces which is indescribable.

The Egyptian Gazelle, which forms the subject of our group, are fine examples of the most esteemed breed in Lower Egypt; they were attended throughout the voyage by an Arab driver

The Cheetah, a most beautiful animal which Mr Landseer has easily distinguished by their long and graceful horns, are, perhaps, the most interesting species of all: equally remarkable for their elegant action, their delicacy of colouring, and their historic association with the most ancient dynasties of Egypt, they were non-lastly brought as tribute from the South, and have, therefore, a frequent place in the hieroglyphic monuments. Both of these animals are, unfortunately, females. They are placed in one of the large paddocks in the Park, where they have ample space to display their speed. Their stride is short, but very rapid: they trot with wonderful elasticity, and with a gadeur or action which reminds one of the Gnu. The Lonogrys is called by the Arabs "the Bull of the Desert."

The Addax (A. nasmaculatis) is distinguished by the white frontal band, which is common to both sexes, and by its spiral horns. A pair of these animals was received by the Society, but, unfortunately, in a bad state of health, from long confinement.

The Gazelle, which Mr Landseer has introduced are a male and a young female. The Society now p—sses a herd of seven or eight of these extremely beautiful little creatures, with some prospect of adding to their number.

The Flamingo and the Pelican, on the extreme right of the group, were obtained for the Society by the Hon C. A. Murray. The flamingo is now exhibited for the first time alive in this country, and will be found, with many other objects of the first interest, in the new Aviary, which we mentioned in our article upon the Bower Birds

The three Pelicans, which arrived with the Flamingo, are also of a species

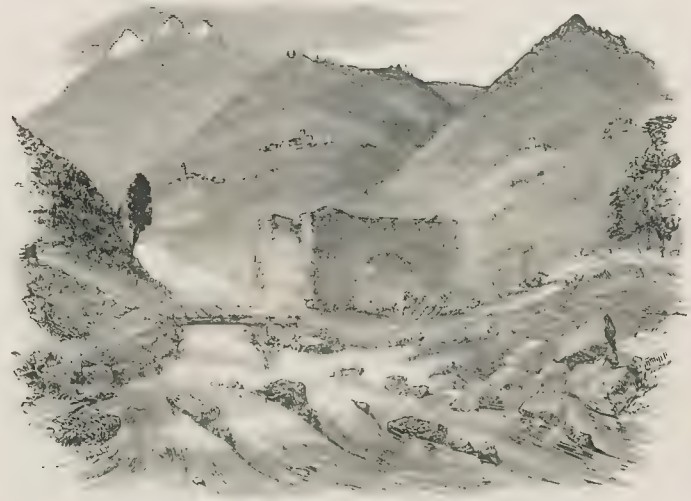
DESTRUCTION OF THE GREAT ROAD OVER THE SIMPLON.

[WE have been favoured by Mr. Albert Smith with the accompanying Sketch and details of this catastrophe, dated Milan, July 24.]

Those of your readers who have made the journey to Italy by this celebrated pass, and, indeed, the whole world, as admirers of the most colossal engineering work ever perfected, will hear with regret of the almost total demolition of the Simplon road, on the Italian side of the mountain, by the terrible storms which broke upon it at the end of last month. It suffered from similar causes in 1834 and 1839, and still bore traces of the devastation then caused by the mountain torrents; but now the injury sustained is so great as to be considered irreparable, the greater portion of the road having been broken up and carried away altogether, and the remainder rendered almost impassable for carriages of any description by the granite blocks and deep loose deposit left behind. The fact that a repetition of the injury may occur at any future time disheartens the Government from taking any steps to repair it, even slightly; a few men only are employed, here and there, moving the more intrusive blocks out of the way, along which the diligence toils with extra horses, deep in sand and grit, so that there is every chance should the route over the St. Gothard become the favourite one, which is most likely—of this wonder of the world gradually falling to decay, and being only now and then visited by curious travellers.

The scene of the greatest ruin is that selected for the Illustration—the bridge at the entrance of the valley of Dovedro, between Isella and Domo d'Ossola. A former bridge had been carried away in 1839, and the present one built on its site, of immense strength, to guard against a similar accident. The mountain torrents were, however, again the masters. The bridge bravely stood the shock, but the approaches on either side have been totally demolished. Blocks of inconceivable size were brought down from the heights, and thrown about like pebbles: the waters tore out new channels for themselves, forsaking their usual beds; and frightful desolation is the result. An immense tract of the famous and fertile valley of Ossola is covered up by granite rubbish for ever; so that the renowned first view of Italy from the Pont de Crevola has lost nearly all its beauty; and the traces of the havoc made in every direction are as terrible, as they are, to all appearances, beyond any engineering skill to counteract. Those who can recollect and speak of the once mighty Simplon, in its strength and glory, may now account themselves fortunate travellers.

Au reste, if such an accident was to occur, it has happened at a good time, for very few of the "travelling English" are on the foreign roads. The largest hotels are deserted, and the natives are everywhere complaining bitterly of lack of visitors.



DESTRUCTION OF THE GREAT ROAD OVER THE SIMPLON. FROM A SKETCH BY ALBERT SMITH.

THE LATE JOHN COTTINGHAM, ESQ.

THIS gentleman, the scion of a highly respectable Cheshire family, was called to the bar, by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn, the 12th June, 1818, and practised for many years with considerable success upon the Chester and northern circuits. He had the reputation of being a sound and able lawyer, and might had he continued in the profession, have attained the judicial bench. He was Recorder of Chester; and a few years back he accepted the appointment of a Metropolitan Police Magistrate, the duties of which he continued to perform with great efficiency until the period of his death.

Mr. Cottingham died of cholera on the 31st ult., after an illness of less than thirty hours

THE LATE MR. COTTINGHAM, THE POLICE MAGISTRATE.

DEATH OF MR. DENISON, M.P. FOR WEST SURREY.—We regret to have to announce the death of this gentleman, which occurred on Thursday morning, at No 90, Pall-mall. Mr. Denison was in the 81st year of his age.

DEATH OF MR. GODSON, M.P.—Richard Godson, Esq., M.P. for Kidderminster, died on Wednesday, at his residence, Springfield Hall, Lancaster, of disease of the heart.

VAN DIEMEN'S LAND COMPANY.—A special meeting of this company was held on Thursday, for the purpose of confirming the forfeiture of 310 shares; John Catchy, Esq., in the chair. The secretary having read the list of shares to be forfeited, a resolution for their forfeiture was carried unanimously. The chairman then gave the proprietors a full account of the position the company were in, of their lands, the rentals, the absolute value of their stock and property. He said there had been a call made; this call, if properly responded to, would produce £6000, £3000 of which they had to pay away immediately. Their contract for taking the produce from their tenants expired in March next. A long conversation ensued as to the policy of winding up the affairs of the company; but it was urged by the chairman, that, as honourable men, they were bound to wait till March next, when their contract expired, and then they could consider the best step to take after they had fulfilled all their engagements. Several interesting details were entered into, shewing the great good this company had been in furthering the civilization of this part of the globe, and a vote of thanks to the chairman and directors concluded the business.

The Fancy, Captain Davidson, the first of the South Sea Whale Fishery Company's vessels, left the West India Docks on Saturday last, for the Auckland Islands, carrying out Mr. Mackworth, the secretary, and a numerous body of artisans and settlers, the nucleus of the new colony forming by this enterprising and highly influential company.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

CEAD MILE FAILTE.

No. 384.—VOL. XV.] SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1849. TWO NUMBERS } ONE SHILLING.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

(From our own Correspondents.)

THE announcement that her Majesty intended to visit Ireland immediately after the prorogation of Parliament, created on the very first day that it was known across St. George's Channel the greatest satisfaction and delight in the minds of all classes of the people. A few, perhaps—whose tongues before and after, but not during, the recent outbreak that ended at Ballingarry, wagged rather more violently than was consistent with perfect sanity—ventured to throw doubts upon the reception that would be given to the Queen and her illustrious Consort; but the large majority of the citizens of Dublin, Cork, and Belfast, and the people of Ireland generally, gave expression to opinions which must have speedily convinced this little party that they had utterly miscalculated the temper of the public. Day by day after that time the popular enthusiasm continued to increase; and it soon became evident that Irish loyalty, exuberant as it was when George IV. visited Ireland, had suffered no diminution; but that, on the contrary, it had grown in fervour and extent. In every part of her dominions her Majesty is admired, respected, and beloved, both as a Sovereign and as a woman. Not only is public homage cheerfully and spontaneously rendered to her as the model of a Queen, but a warmer and more tender homage is no less spontaneously and universally offered to her at all the fire-sides and homes of the country, as an example to the daughters, wives, mothers, and gentlewomen of her nation, of the conduct they should pursue, to merit the esteem of the wise and the admiration of the virtuous. Ireland participates in these feelings, and the very humblest of the people give expression to them. Even in cases where political rancour might be supposed to rage, and the remembrance of recent melancholy events to rankle, the Irish, with exceptions too insignificant to require notice, separate the person and character of Queen Victoria from the occasions of public strife and difference of opinion that are, unhappily, too frequent, and yield to her, individually, the homage of their unaffected loyalty. Many persons now living witnessed and shared in the ceremonies and rejoicings that took place when George IV. visited Dublin. Those persons are unanimous in asserting that the enthusiasm of that day, great as it was, was a mere shadow of the loyalty and devotion expressed throughout society during the visit of a more deservedly popular Sovereign—QUEEN VICTORIA.

For at least ten days or a fortnight before her Majesty's arrival at Cove, the citizens of Cork, Dublin, and Belfast were up and stirring to do her honour. The "beautiful city of Cork," as its people call it (with a pardonable pride, and with an epithet well deserved), was especially busy, inasmuch as it had been arranged that her Majesty's first landing upon Irish ground should be within its precincts. As the village of Dunleary, near Dublin, had been named Kingstown in honour of George IV., it was suggested by some of the people of Cork, that Cove, the town that commands their magnificent harbour, should be named Queenstown, in honour of her Majesty. Some, with a more refined and graceful sense of a compliment, suggested that, if the name were altered at all, the town of Cove should henceforward be called "VICTORIA." These, however, were but the slightest of the many indications of a desire to show loyalty and affection which escaped from the warm-hearted citizens of Cork. Such a stir was never known in that "beautiful" place since it was founded; and for a short period previous to and during the Queen's Visit, the old prophecy of the Corkonians seemed on the point of being realised.—

> Limerick was, Dublin is, but Cork will be,
> The greatest city of the three.

In Dublin, the bustle was even more superbly restless. Its wide and splendid streets teemed with a busy population, whose only thought and sole subject of conversation was the Queen's Visit. For once, at least, Dublin looked as much like the veritable capital of a great and prosperous kingdom as the most ardent Repealer could desire. Equipages of all descriptions—but little inferior in brilliancy to any that grace Hyde Park in the height of the London season—rolled through Sackville-street, Dame-street, Dawson-street, Merrion-square and St. Stephen's-green. Architects, builders, gas-fitters, carpenters, painters, decorators, and others, found abundant occupation in making preparations for the forthcoming ceremonial and its after festivities. Portraits of the Queen and Prince Albert appeared in the print shops, to the almost total exclusion of other prints; whilst, for those who were too poor to indulge in the expensive luxury of line engravings, medals, in commemoration of the visit, were struck, and met a ready sale. Public buildings, and private dwellings also, put on a new face of cleanliness in anticipation of the blaze of light with which Dublin was to illuminate herself. Shops were newly painted and decorated; and the old city, even in its remotest recesses, washed and adorned itself in honour of the occasion. There was never such scrubbing, and rubbing, and beautifying—such running to and fro of busy men—and such a rapid currency of coin in Dublin, within the memory of that venerable myth, "the oldest inhabitant."

Even the statue of William III., in College Green, that permanent suggestor of strife and bitterness to the contending factions of Catholic and Protestant, received a new coat of paint for the occasion, and glittered, in the warm sunshine as splendidly as the most devoted lover of his "pious and immortal memory" could desire. Commodious platforms, commanding a view of the procession, were erected before the gates of Trinity College, the Post Office, the Bank of Ireland, the Nelson Column and various other public buildings. Triumphal arches were raised and adorned long before the Queen had left Osborne House; and the line of procession looked like a fair many days before her arrival in the harbour of Cove.

To the whole population felt the impetus. The shopkeepers put forth their richest display of goods. The Killarney arbutus, the tabinets or poplins and all the few articles that may in Ireland be considered as of native manufacture, were displayed to the best advantage in the windows to captivate the attention of strangers, especially of those who were expected to pour into Dublin from rich England laden with golden sovereigns, and having nothing to do but to spend them. The price of lodgings went up at an enormous rate; and seats at the windows of those housekeepers who were fortunate enough to be located in the exact line of procession, were offered for sums, which, if obtained, would have gone far towards paying the whole annual rental of the speculators. If all the gold of California had been expected in Dublin, prices could not have risen much higher.

The most respectable hotels, such as Morrison's and others, did not make any advances upon their usual prices, but others not quite so well attended and prosperous, whose designations we forbear to mention, put an import duty upon strangers, which, in some instances, was high enough to amount to a prohibition. The price of labour went up: carpenters (and gas-fitters more especially) were at a high premium. For once in the history of Ireland, the supply of labour was not equal to the demand. The streets swarmed with people. Dame-street and Sackville-street were almost as crowded as Cheapside and Cornhill; and not even the Boulevards of Paris, in those halcyon days before revolutions and émeutes had saddened the hearts of its citizens, by exiling their best customers, and draining their pockets, looked more cheerful than the wide-streeted and beautiful city of Dublin.

There was, it is true, an under-current of ill feeling. The Lord Mayor issued a proclamation, which the malcontents termed an ukase, calling upon all classes of the inhabitants to illuminate; but, as the proclamation was, after few days, superseded by another, merely requesting all who could afford to show their loyalty in that way to do so, and exonerating from the imputation of disloyalty all who might be too poor to spend money in tallow candles, the dissatisfaction gradually subsided.

The preparations made for the illumination showed that Dublin had her heart in the business; and, notwithstanding an occasional growl from a Young Irelander, satisfaction with the present, and bright anticipations for the future, were the orders of the day in Dublin for a full week before her Majesty's arrival. The shopkeeping interest is hardly keen, and the shopkeepers of Dublin had the common sense to put politics in abeyance, and to leave the jangle of party for occasions less unsuitable. There was in the capital, and some parts of the country, an inclination at first to thrust the distresses of the country prominently before our Majesty in addresses from the corporations and public bodies. And, on the part of the Young Irelanders, there was an inclination to insist that the cordiality of the Queen's welcome should depend upon the pardon of the men recently convicted of rebellion against her authority; but, as time wore on, and public opinion manifested itself, these subjects of contention were allowed to drop. It was felt that although the distresses of Ireland are great and manifold they were not to be remedied by howling over them, or by putting on a face of sorrow, especially upon the occasion of a visit undertaken with the patriotic motive, amongst many others equally laudable and good, of aiding the trade of the country by causing an expenditure of money. It was also felt that any thrusting forward of the names of men who had rendered themselves amenable to the laws was likely to defeat its purpose, and that they were not the true friends of the exiles, who vociferated about a pardon for them—rendering mercy impossible by the audacity with which it was demanded. Ultimately, therefore, these subjects ceased to occupy attention, and Dublin, on Saturday morning, when it was announced that the Queen had safely reached the harbour of Cove, contained a population almost unanimous in the desire to make her welcome in her Irish capital superior, in its cordiality, to and that she had ever received in any portion of her dominions.

The counties of Ireland were as enthusiastic as the cities; and most, if not the whole of them were convened in public meetings of the freeholders and inhabitants, to vote addresses of congratulation to her Majesty and the Prince. The most influential noblemen, landowners, clergy and professional men of each district attended; and the addresses, without a single exception that ever came to the knowledge of the public were as enthusiastically agreed to. All these documents breathed the same spirit of loyalty and affection, and were supported either by the personal presence and speeches of the leading clergymen, both Protestant and Roman Catholic, or by letters explaining their absence, and heartily concurring in the object of the meetings.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY AND PRINCE ALBERT AT CORK.

The Royal Squadron, which left Osborne at three o'clock on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 1st instant, met with favourable winds and fair weather. It had been arranged that the squadron, in the event of rough weather, should anchor on Wednesday night in the Portland Roads; but the night being beautifully calm and clear, there was no necessity for delay, and the squadron steamed onwards for the Irish coast, steering directly for Cork. To the surprise of the people of Cork, whose arrangements for the befitting reception of her Majesty were not completed, the Queen's arrival was telegraphed off Cove Lighthouse at six o'clock on Thursday evening.

It was about seven o'clock when the Fiend steamer, one of the Royal Squadron, entered the harbour, and communicated to the Admiral the approach of the Royal Yacht. At nine o'clock, accordingly, the Victoria and Albert made its appearance in the harbour, amidst the joyous excitement of the inhabitants of Cork, Cove, and the vicinity. The war-ships in the harbour and the batteries commenced cannonading. The surrounding hills reverberated the glad tidings. Bonfires were seen to blaze on all the neighbouring hills; and the merchant-ships; while the whole town was in perfect commotion with the bells—and rapidity with which the fireworks were sent forth. The unrivalled brilliancy of the scene in this glorious bay was beyond description. The magnificent appearance of the ships of war—their lofty masts, and rigging—at one moment in deep gloom, while at the next, almost in the twinkling of an eye, the whole were lit up in a flood of light, showing every portion of the vessels, with the polishing and outline to perfection, and with singularly picturesque effect. The Royal Yacht came alongside the Ganges, and there it lay for the night.

At ten o'clock on Friday morning, the county members, Edmund Burke Roche, Esq., and Dr. Power, with the others of the deputation, waited on her Majesty on board the Royal Yacht, when it was intimated to them that the Queen would probably land at Cove, and visit the Pavilion. Information had been previously conveyed to Sir George Grey that the Cove people were anxious that her Majesty should commemorate her truly auspicious visit by conferring on Cove the honour and distinction of being called "Queenstown;" when the secretary replied that her Majesty would feel happy in doing anything which might be deemed serviceable to their beautiful harbour and town. Accordingly, when the Royal party landed on the Quay, about two o'clock, the Queen and Prince Consort entered the Pavilion, where a splendid throne had been most tastefully erected for her Majesty, which, however, she did not occupy, but continued during the entire interview with the county members, who now formally laid before her Majesty the wishes of the inhabitants of Cove regarding the change of name so as to commemorate the Royal Visit. The Queen, in the most graceful, as well as gracious, manner, assented to the request, and Cove was, therefore, invested with all the distinctiveness and individuality to be found in the style and title of Queenstown. Long may it flourish, and receive the fruits of this baptismal benevolence!

Early in the forenoon, the Mayor, accompanied by W. Fagan, Esq., M.P., proceeded on board the Royal Yacht, and had an interview with her Majesty. The address presented on these private visits, in the period of the Royal visit to the City was intended for the afternoon, a delicate and respectful remonstrance was offered indirectly, and it was also suggested that the necessary arrangements were not completed for her Majesty's reception. They were informed, however, that her Majesty's arrangements had been made; that the Royal visit would take place in the afternoon, at four o'clock, when the Queen would pass through the principal streets, receive the deputations, and then return to Cove, when the Royal party would proceed on board the Royal Yacht, sleep there on the Bay that night, and on Saturday morning sail for Dublin.

The beautiful river never looked to greater advantage than whilst the Royal flotilla was sailing up from Monkstown. This pretty little waving-place, as well as Passage, had a very elegant appearance. The season of the year clothed every thing along the banks and on the neighbouring hills with an endless variety of tint; and the sun, which had just emerged from a thick veil of vapour for the last few hours, threw its golden brilliancy over the waters. The lively verdure, the beauty and repose, the whole appearance of the little island, seemed to have attracted the peculiar attention of her Majesty. At Blackrock, a Royal salute was fired from the Castle from four pieces of ordnance sent there by the General of the District, as also from a battery on one of the neighbouring heights. About half-past three o'clock the Fairy reached the Custom House Quay with its Royal freight, when his Worship the Mayor, the members of the council, the Right Rev. Dr. Denvir, the Venerable Archdeacon Kyle, and other clergymen, attended to receive her Majesty on her arrival. All the windows that were drawn up on this quay, and a squadron of horse was also in attendance as an escort. The gallery or platform was crowded with the rank and fashion amongst the ladies of both county and city, who, according to the opinion of all the Corkonians, never looked more lovely or interesting than on this great national occasion. The spectacle was imposing and impressive. The quays at both sides of the river were not only covered with thousands of loyal and anxious citizens, but everywhere were seen elevated platforms crowded with delighted spectators. The entire breadth of the river was taken up with steamers, barges, sloops, yachts, and vessels of every description, all crowded at every available point with living freight, but in a shipshape Royalty. The National Anthem was struck up by the band of the Cameronians, when "God save the Queen" was responded to by the ordnance in the Park, that woke the obedient echoes of the surrounding hills.

The deputations were received on board the Royal tender, on the quarter-deck of which her Majesty was seated, nearly encircled by the Prince Consort, the Secretary (Sir George Grey) and the Commander of the Victoria and Albert Yacht (Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence.) The various addresses were then read, to which the Queen seemed to pay the profoundest attention.

The following is a copy of the Corporation Address:—

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY. We, your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Mayor, Aldermen, and Councillors of the ancient city of Cork, humbly approach your Majesty to tender to you, on behalf of ourselves and our fellow-citizens at large, the homage of our profound loyalty, and of our deepest affection and attachment to your Majesty's sacred person and crown.

We gratefully beg to express our deep sense of the high honour and distinction conferred on this great city and county by your Majesty condescending to select our city as the place where you and your Royal and much-loved Consort pay your first visit to this portion of the kingdom; and we hail with the sincerest feeling of joy and exultation your august presence here, and ardently hope that your Majesty will be graciously pleased to receive and gladden us by frequently repeating visits, and to diffuse pleasure and happiness amongst us. We sincerely hope that your Majesty's gracious visit will be like those of the Angel of Mercy, which, in the Holy Writings, and that it is the harbinger of bright and better days for our country, which your Majesty must be aware is passing through a fearful ordeal.

We know that your Majesty deeply sympathises in the sufferings and privations which your people have and are still undergoing; though we are convinced that nothing would afford a higher gratification to your Royal breast than to mitigate and relieve those sufferings, and to raise the moral and social condition of your Majesty's much and long enduring, but patient and faithful Irish subjects.

We trust that your Royal advent here will lay the foundation of a better order of things than has heretofore existed, by the means of fully developing the great and natural resources of our beautiful and fertile country; and that its prosperity, and the consequent comfort, happiness, and contentment of its people, will be the glorious and blessed results of your auspicious visit.

That your Majesty may enjoy a long and prosperous reign over a united, happy, and contented people; and that you, your Royal Consort and family, may possess every happiness that this world can afford, is the ardent and sincere prayer of your loyal and attached subjects, the Council and Citizens of Cork.

Done under the Common Seal of the Borough of Cork, this 24th day of July, 1849, in the 13th year of her Majesty's reign.

As soon as this address had been read, the Mayor was desired by the Secretary to kneel down before the Queen, when her Majesty, graciously taking the sword which was presented to her for the purpose by Prince Albert, laid it on the shoulder of the first magistrate, and confirmed on him the honour of Knighthood. It was a proud moment for the worthy Mayor of Cork, particularly as the assembled citizens evinced unmistakeable indications of their gratification at the honour spontaneously bestowed upon him by his gracious Sovereign.

Among the addresses presented to her Majesty, was one from the Royal Cork Yacht Club, by a deputation, consisting of J. H. Smith Barry, Esq., Admiral; T. G. Freed, Esq., Vice-Admiral; the Lord of Mountcashel; and Doctor Meach, honorary secretary to the club. This club was founded in the year 1720. A copy of the original rules was presented to her Majesty.

After this ceremony the line of procession was formed by a troop of the 12th Lancers taking the front, followed by the officers of the Cork staff in their rich and elegant uniforms. The Lords-Lieutenant of the County, Lords Bandon, Desmond, and Carbery; the High Sheriff, Lord Viscount Kilworth; the Bishop, the Rev. W. W. Hedges; and Lieut. Leahy, D.L.; Captain Wallis, D.L.; the County and City Members, and other Deputy-Lieutenants came next in order. Then succeeded the carriage of the newly-made Knight, Sir William Lyons, Mayor, in which he sate himself, accompanied by the Treasurer and Town-Clerk in their respective robes of office.

The Royal carriage now appeared, in which sate her Majesty and Prince Albert, with two Ladies in Waiting. The carriage was escorted on the left by the High Sheriff of the city, on a splendid charger, and on the right by the General of the district, also on horseback, together with a party of the 12th Lancers. The Home Secretary's carriage came next, and then followed a few others belonging to the noblemen and gentlemen who, as equestrians, preceded her Majesty. The procession went slowly through the triumphal arch at Anglesey Bridge, and along the South Mall, which, particularly in the windows along the line, enthusiastically testified their feelings of loyalty and affection by the waving of handkerchiefs and scattering of flowers. Thus the Royal cortège passed along the Grand Parade, and through the splendid triumphal arch at Great George's-street, to the Western-road. When it had reached beside the beautiful towers of the new College, the attention of her Majesty seemed to have been called to the building which was to bear her Royal title, as she directed their advance to be stayed for some moments, during which she appeared to survey it very minutely. The statue of her Majesty, which had been presented to the Royal College by Sir Thomas Deane, was at this very moment elevated to its proper site on the nearest gable of the structure, under the direction of Sir Thomas himself, who attended in person to seize this very favourable and auspicious time for the ceremony.

The Dyke Promenade, down which the Royal cortège next passed, with its natural and umbrageous arcade, appeared to excite much of the Royal attention as the procession advanced slowly through it. Her Majesty then proceeded through Patrick-street, back again by the Grand Parade and Pall Mall to the Custom House, which was reached about half-past five o'clock, when the Royal pennant was unfolded at the mainmast of the Fairy, and the Queen, amidst the thunder of the signal-guns, went on board the Royal Yacht. Her Majesty and the Prince Consort repeatedly acknowledged the farewell greetings of the ladies and gentlemen on the Custom House Quay; when the Royal tender, accompanied by one of the war-steamers, sailed down the river, amidst the acclamations of the citizens who had crowded round the place of departure.

HER MAJESTY AND THE BLACKROCK FISHERMEN.—One of the most interesting scenes in her Majesty's passage up the river was her reception on passing Blackrock Castle, where the fishermen of Blackrock, twenty in number, appeared in procession in their boats with an address, and a fine salmon, ornamented with shamrocks and green ribbons, suspended from a decorated pole. Her Majesty, in a most kind and condescending manner, ordered the Royal Yacht to stop, and received the address and salmon on board. She conversed with Arthur Leary, one of the fishermen, praised the neat and cleanly appearance of the men, and thanked them for the fish. Through the kindness and courtesy of Colonel and Mrs. Chatterton, the men appeared in blue and white Guernsey frocks and straw hats, and looked remarkably neat. All the tenantry about Castle Mahon carried various flags, with "Long Live the Queen," "Welcome," &c., and right heartily cheered her Majesty.

THE QUEEN AND THE CORK EMBROIDERY SCHOOL.—Her Majesty condescended to accept some of the poor children's work from the Cork Embroidery School, and expressed herself much pleased with it, and gratified at the compliment paid her. The articles were a pocket-handkerchief of a very beautiful pattern, with figures worked in three corners, and surmounted by a Crown, in the fourth, trimmed with Brussels lace: and a frock for one of the Princesses, worked by a girl who could not hem when she entered the school, two years and a half ago. His Royal Highness Prince Albert also condescended to accept a beautifully worked shirt-front. The presents were forwarded, together with a suitable address, by Mrs. Scanlehill and Mrs. Paul M'Swiney, secretaries to the school. It is to be hoped that the patronage thus bestowed by her Majesty on this school will have its due effect, and that the fashionables of Cork will not now be ashamed to wear or purchase articles similar to those admitted into the Royal wardrobe.

DEPARTURE OF HER MAJESTY FROM COVE.

COVE, Saturday Morning.

Notwithstanding the dull hazy appearance of the morning, from an early hour thousands had assembled on the surrounding heights to witness the departure of her Majesty. The steep eminences of Camden and Carlisle forts were densely crowded with the peasantry of the surrounding districts. The military lined the shore. At nine o'clock signals were made for getting under weigh, and at half-past nine the ships forming the Royal squadron commenced to man the yards and fire a Royal salute. Before it was concluded her Majesty was fairly under weigh, preceded by two of the lighter steamers: a party of citizens of Cork, amongst whom the writer, accompanied the squadron. The Royal Yacht continued to gain on the leading boats, and by the time we were abreast of Ballycotton Bay, was far ahead of all save the Fairy, Banshee, Garland, and Viceroy merchant steam-ship, commanded by Capt. W. Stokes, to whose kindness I was indebted for an opportunity of coming sufficiently close to the vessels at Ballycotton Island to enable me to make the accompanying sketch. After passing Ballycotton, it became evident that her Majesty's ship found the sea somewhat rough, and steered her course under the shelter of the land. She still continued to gain on even the two ships of the fleet that accompanied her; and when off Ardmore Head made signals to them to approach. They did so, and were then signalled to return with orders to the other ships of the Royal squadron, by this time far behind. They again altered their course, and followed the Victoria and Albert, which was by this time close on the coast of Waterford, and to all appearance making direct for it; however, it shortly after became evident that Waterford was not the intended port, but Tramore Bay, where the Royal Yacht was seen to enter between two and three o'clock, blow off her steam, and lay to for the night. Immediately after the Banshee and Garland entered; but up to nightfall the remaining ships could not be discerned even with the aid of the ship's glass.

Tramore is a little bay or creek, close by Waterford, the fashionable watering-place of the good folk from the neighbouring counties of Waterford, Tipperary, and Kilkenny, and is not considered a very good harbour. It has neither trade nor commerce, and is seldom visited by vessels, save such as run in there for shelter during foul weather, as did her Majesty on Saturday. August the 4th was a memorable day in the annals of Tramore.

THE ROYAL FLEET AT WATERFORD HARBOUR.

WATERFORD, Sunday.

On the Royal Yacht reaching the head of Tramore Bay, she proceeded onward to the mouth of Waterford Harbour, and anchored at Passage, the Fairy attending her, and the rest of the fleet at a further distance down the bay. On bringing up here, the barge was lowered from the Royal Yacht, and soon after his Royal Highness Prince Albert came down the side, and put off for shore. He was accompanied by the Prince of Wales and the Prince Alfred. Colonel Phipps attended on his Royal Highness. It was understood that his Royal Highness took the Royal children a short way into the rather unromantic, but well-tilled country in the vicinity of Waterford. At eight o'clock on Sunday morning the Royal flotilla left Waterford, and between five and six o'clock the Royal Yacht and the other steamers rounded Bray Head, and proceeded under slow way to the head of the line formed by the steamers which had arrived previously. The four steamers which arrived first left Waterford, or rather the west end of Tramore Bay, at four o'clock on Sunday morning, whilst the Royal Yacht and the rest of the flotilla did not get under way till eight o'clock; thus the former, which are slow steamers, were enabled to reach the harbour of Kingstown at the same time as the Royal Yacht.

PREPARATIONS TO RECEIVE HER MAJESTY IN DUBLIN.

The announcement that her Majesty, with her customary celerity of motion, had dropped in upon the good people of Cork a day before she was expected, created some fluster in the Irish capital. At an early hour on Saturday morning the firing of guns by a vessel in the harbour—whether for sport and mischief, or in pursuance of orders, did not appear—caused the citizens from their beds before the time, and sent some of them on a wild-goose errand to Kingstown, in the expectation that the Queen had arrived. This was soon known to be a false alarm; but it gave an impetus to the preparations that were in progress throughout Dublin, and gave additional vigour to the arms of the carpenters, decorators, flag-makers, and gas-fitters employed in all the leading lines of thoroughfare. It was made known to the citizens, on due authority, in the course of the day, that, at whatever time her Majesty might arrive in the harbour of Kingstown, she would not make her entry into Dublin until ten o'clock on Monday morning—the time originally appointed. This was consolatory to most people, especially to those who had built platforms, gone to expense for illuminations, or who expected to make large profits by letting seats either at windows or on platforms.

Dublin filled rapidly on Saturday. People flocked into it from all parts of the country, and even from England, Wales, and Scotland. Apartments at the hotels were not to be obtained except at enormous prices, and at some of them, the bare accommodation of a small bed in an unfurnished and unclean attic was only procurable for gold, or its paper representative. Among the visitors, a tolerably large cargo of the Lord Mayor's all-ness made their appearance in the streets. Some of these elegant scoundrels—as gentlemanly in outward show as the trinket-maker, the hair-dresser, and the tailor could make them—managed to reap a pretty fair harvest on board of the steamboats before favouring the Irish with a proof of their quality. A knowledge of this circumstance, combined with a wholesome regard for the pockets of the natives, led to a notification from the police authorities that four hundred police constables in plain clothes would be stationed in various parts of the city during the Queen's visit. It is possible that this announcement led to a more cautious exercise of their vocation by the industrious fraternity; but it is very doubtful whether it materially lessened the amount of their gains.

On Sunday the weather was beautifully clear and warm, and the population of Dublin poured itself out by thousands towards Kingstown. The trains ran during the whole day, and a considerable portion of the night, at intervals of a quarter of an hour, conveying at every trip 500 or 600 passengers. The little steam-boats that ply from the Custom-house Quay to Kingstown also carried down their living cargoes to the point of attraction. Never did such brilliant multitudes flock into Kingstown as on the memorable 5th of August. It was computed that the railway company alone conveyed between 40,000 and 50,000 people to and fro during the day; and it is likely that steam-boats and private vehicles conveyed from 30,000 to 10,000 more. The beautiful pier, extending 2800 feet into the sea, was so crowded with expectant visitors that it was difficult to pass along it. The pier is one of the greatest public works in Ireland; and the prospect at its extreme end is exceedingly beautiful. Looking northward, the spectator beholds the Hill of Howth, keeping its ancient watch over the Bay of Dublin; and, eastward, the historical field of Clontarf, where Brian Boru defeated and routed the Danish invaders of his country, and sealed his victory with his blood. On the southern shore of the Bay he sees the pleasant environs of the capital—Sandymount, Merrion, Booterstown, Blackrock, and Monkstown. To the westward stretches out the open sea. In the land view are the Pillar erected to commemorate the visit of George IV. to Ireland in 1821, and the Lansdowne Terraces and marine villas of Kingstown. Beyond these, the view extends to Sandycove promontory, to Dalkey Island, the hills of Killiney, and the beautiful mountains of the county of Wicklow.

There was an expectation that the Royal squadron would enter Killiney Bay in the course of the forenoon, if it were only to give her Majesty a glimpse of one of the most beautiful scenes in Ireland. Thitherwards, accordingly, a vast crowd of people made their way, to bivouack upon the hill. Many of them were provided with telescopes to descry the squadron as soon as it rounded the point; and a still greater number were provided with the edibles and potables which it was morally certain were not to be found in sufficient quantity in the small village of Killiney, to administer to the craving of so numerous a multitude. The distance from Kingstown to Killiney Hill is somewhat less than three miles; and, either as a ride or a walk, is recommended to all strangers in Dublin. He who departs from the Irish capital without having traversed it, and stood upon the highest point of the road to look back upon the city and the bay of Dublin, deprives himself of enjoying a view unsurpassed in the British Isles for extent and for magnificence. It has, by many been compared to that of the Bay of Naples; but, although few will admit the Hill of Howth to be quite equal in beauty or grandeur to Mount Vesuvius, as few will deny the exceeding loveliness of the whole panorama that is spread beneath the gaze of him who stands on the ascent to Killiney Hill, and looks towards Howth and Dublin. Nor is the prospect from the cops of Killiney Hill, looking towards the sea, less beautiful, though its beauty is of different character. The Bay of Killiney makes a majestic curve into the shore; and the spectator who, from Killiney Castle, or from the top of the hill, looks down upon its dark blue waters—seeing, but not hearing, the dash of the waves, and traced them only by the white fringes of foam which they make upon the beach—and beholds, in the background, the Sugar-loaf Mountain, and others in the Wicklow range, lifting their bold summits on the horizon—will confess that he may travel far without finding so much of the grand and beautiful to admire and luxuriate in. On the present occasion, as already observed, great numbers of the people of Dublin made their way on Sunday; and from a comparatively early hour in the morning the hill was crowded with people, anxious to catch a first glance of the Royal Squadron as it turned the projecting headland of Bray-head, across the Bay of Killiney. The scene was highly animating. Between seven and four o'clock the look-out stationed here perceived, by the aid of the telescope, the leading vessels of the Royal squadron. These proved to be the Sphynx, the Stromboli, the Lucifer, and the Trident — which speedily approached, and lay to off Killiney Bay, to await the arrival of her Majesty's yacht, the Victoria and Albert, and the rest of the Royal squadron. At six o'clock the smoke from the funnel of the Victoria and Albert was discernible without the aid of the telescope. The tidings of the Queen's approach flew rapidly; and her Majesty's war-steamer, the Dragon, and two other steam-boats that had been cruising about all the morning, and that were on the look-out off Dalkey Island, got up their steam, hoisted their flags, and proceeded to meet the Royal squadron, and escort it into the harbour of Kingstown.

ARRIVAL OF HER MAJESTY IN KINGSTOWN HARBOUR.

It was a few minutes before seven o'clock in the evening, (Sunday) when the Victoria and Albert was observed from Kingstown pier to pass at the north side of Dalkey Island, followed by the Sphynx, the Fairy, the Vesuvius, the Racehorse, the Stromboli, the Trident, the Lucifer, the Dragon, and numerous yachts and other vessels. At twenty minutes past seven the fleet swept into the harbour, and dropped anchor amid the vociferous and enthusiastic cheers of the multitude that lined the piers and the quays, that filled the streets, and that stood on windows and housetops, and on every spot commanding a view of the magnificent scene. The yard-arms of the steamers and other vessels were manned, and decorated with flags. The Royal standard floated from the main of the Victoria and Albert. A Royal salute was fired as the squadron entered; and the sailors upon the yard-arms of the various war-steamers and other vessels gave three hearty and tremendous cheers; the crowd on shore re-echoed the rough and exhilirating music of their shouts, and only ceased the noisy expression of their delight when the guns took up the sound of welcome, and made, for awhile, a greater uproar than the voices of the people. A great number of small boats, crowded with well-dressed ladies and gentlemen, put off from the quays. There seemed, from the shore, to be scarcely room for them all to pass and repass in safety, but no accident occurred, and they continued to row around the Royal Yacht, at a respectful distance, to obtain a sight of the Queen of Great Britain, and testify to her the loyalty and affection of the Irish people. Her Majesty shortly afterwards appeared upon deck, wearing a large red plaid shawl folded tightly around her, and a plain straw bonnet. As soon as she was perceived the cheering was renewed; first by the spectators in the boats, who waved their hats and handkerchiefs, and stood up to give expression to their enthusiasm; and then by the immense multitude on shore, whose loud, if not sweet voices, must have convinced her Majesty that her welcome in Ireland was all that the most loyal could anticipate, or the most affectionately attached to her person could desire. Her Majesty bowed repeatedly in acknowledgment of the cheers, and, after remaining in sight for a few moments, retired to the deck or round-house cabin. Prince Albert almost immediately afterwards issued from it, and, coming upon deck, was received with cheers as loud as those which had just before greeted the Queen. The Prince appeared in a blue pilot coat, buttoned close, and, advancing to the side of the vessel, bowed several times to the persons in the boats and to the crowd on shore. His Royal Highness then retired; but, as the cheering was from time to time renewed, and the crowd of boats around the Royal yacht continued to increase, it was evident that the multitude did not consider that they had seen enough of their Sovereign and her illustrious Consort. After a short interval, these manifestations of public feeling still continuing to increase, her Majesty and Prince Albert once more appeared upon deck, and, passing to the larboard side of the vessel, where a great number of boats had congregated, bowed repeatedly to the assemblage in acknowledgment of their cheers. The illustrious pair then passed to the starboard side, facing the quay, when it was observed that her Majesty and the Prince were attended by a party of the Royal children. These were the Prince of Wales and the Princess Royal, the Prince Alfred, and the Princess Alice. Prince Albert held the hand of the Prince of Wales, and her Majesty led the Princess Royal and the other two children. The crowd understood, instinctively, that this touching scene was intended as the introduction of the Royal children to the Irish people, and raised a succession of shouts which outdid in cordiality and intensity the enthusiastic bursts that greeted her first appearance; though when these were first heard it was difficult to imagine that human beings, however multitudinous and earnest in their expression of good-will, could well surpass them. This was her Majesty's last appearance on deck. The illustrious family—including its youngest members—bowed gracefully to the immense crowds, repeating the acknowledgment from time to time with the greatest affability, and then withdrew. Almost immediately afterwards a signal was made up to the mast-head of the Royal Yacht, which was responded to by the Dragon, the Black Eagle, the Stromboli, and all the other vessels of the squadron in succession. The Royal Yacht struck her gay colours, with the exception of the Royal standard. The many-coloured flags of all the ships disappeared in a few moments, and the crowd understood that there was an end of the pageant until the morrow. By this time it was almost dark, and the cabin lights were lit up in the Victoria and Albert; preparatory, it was pre-sumed, to the dinner of the Royal party on board.

The town of Kingstown was partially illuminated during the evening. There had been some previous talk of a determination to light bonfires on the hills for many miles around, but this intention was not carried into effect. The illumination at Kingstown was not particularly splendid; but there needed no display of lights in windows to prove that her Majesty had received as earnest and cordial a welcome as ever she had received in any portion of her dominions.

The boats that swarmed around the Royal Yacht gradually withdrew, and the crowds of holiday-makers at Kingstown began to think as to the means of returning to Dublin. This, however, was a very matter. such multitudes pressed into the railway station, all eager to that they defeated their own purpose by their hurry. The squeezing and shrieking, the jostling and pressing that ensued, were painful to witness. Ultimately, however, by stringent regulations and good management on the part of the railway officials, and the punishment of long trains every quarter of an hour, the crowd was thinned by degrees; but it was not until very long after midnight that the last living cargo reached Dublin. No accident occurred during the day to mar the pleasure of the scene. This is a circumstance most agreeable, but somewhat surprising to record, when the immense confusion and crowding that took place, both in Dublin and in Kingstown, are considered.

THE LANDING OF HER MAJESTY.

DUBLIN, MONDAY, AUGUST 6th.

Never did a more glorious morning burst from the east than that appointed for the entrance of Queen Victoria into the metropolis of her kingdom of Ireland. The sun shone with great splendour. There was scarcely a cloud upon the sky; and man and nature seemed in harmony of joyousness.

At an early hour almost the whole population of Kingstown was in motion; and a large proportion of that of Dublin and the watering-places of the coast seemed to have been conveyed to the same point. The steps of all were directed to the jetty and piers of the harbour, where a scene of the most animated description presented itself. On their side of the magnificent basin, upon the surface of which not a ripple was observable, where drawn up in a line the Royal flotilla, and the other numerous steam-vessels present, all decked out in their gaudiest array of flags and streamers.

Shortly after eight o'clock the Royal Yacht slipped her moorings and came alongside the jetty, and at nine o'clock his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon arrived by special train from Dublin. Immediately their Excellencies proceeded on board, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, the Lord Chancellor, Sir Edward Blakeney, Commander of the Forces, the Duke of Leinster, the Lord Primate the Archbishop of Dublin, the Marquis of Ormonde, the Marquis of Worcester, the Earl of Erne, the Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, Sir William Somerville, the Master of the Rolls, &c., attended by a brilliant staff, where they were met by his Royal Highness Prince Albert, who cordially shook hands with his Excellency and Prince George.

On board the Royal Yacht were the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Marquis of Abercorn, the Earl Fortescue, Lord Jocelyn, Sir G. Grey, Sir James Clarke, Lord Adolphus Fitzclarence, Colonel Phipps and Colonel Gordon, Equerries in Waiting; Lady Jocelyn, Miss Jocelyn, Ladies in Waiting upon the Queen; and a numerous staff of the officers of the Royal Yacht. Besides these were perceived alongside on shore, the Earl of Charlemont, the Earl of Howth, the Marquis of Headfort, the Earl of Mayo, Lord St. Lawrence, Lord Brabazon, Lord Massareene, Colonel and Mrs White, Mr. D. C. Latouche, Mr. Henry Guinness, Mr. Mayne, chairman of the Kingstown Railway Company, and the treasurer, Mr. James Pim, Sir Philip Crampton, Col. Jones, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Mulvany, and a host of the gentry of the county and city of Dublin.

Shortly afterwards her Majesty made her appearance on the quarter-deck, and was received by the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, who introduced to their Excellencies the Royal children.

After a short interval, an intimation was conveyed to the High Sheriff of the county of Dublin that her Majesty was prepared to receive the address, when that functionary, accompanied by the deputation, consisting of the Earl of Charlemont, Viscount Bruxton, Earl of Howth, Viscount St. Lawrence, Viscount Monck, Hon. St. John Butler, Hon. Edward Prestor, Sir Robert Shaw, Bart., Edward Kennedy, Baron de Roebeck, James Hans Hamilton, M.P.; Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor, M.P., Hans H. Wood, Charles Bianconi, Esq., Chichester C. Domville; John Barlow, Esq., Christopher Palles, Q.C., A. C. Hutton, John Lentaigne, Esq., John Shaw; John Ennis, High Sheriff; and William Lane, Esq., proceeded on board, and presented the address to her Majesty, who returned a suitable reply.

As the hour fixed upon for the landing of her Majesty approached, the most intense anxiety manifested itself amongst the vast multitude assembled to witness the spectacle. For full twenty minutes before ten o'clock her Majesty and Prince Albert were observed ready for the great event of the day. Her Majesty and the Prince were repeatedly cheered by the immense crowd; but when, at about ten minutes to ten, the four Royal children, who were led forward to the side of the vessel by the Queen and Prince Albert, as upon the preceding evening, to be introduced to the multitude, the shouts that arose were positively deafening. The incident created an enthusiasm which it is difficult to describe, the ladies more particularly giving vent to their delight by almost frantic expressions of applause.

Her Majesty looked remarkably well, appeared in the highest spirits, and seemed especially proud of the fresh proof of loyalty and attachment manifested by her Irish subjects. She was attired in a French grey silk dress (lilac and white), and wore a light blue silk mantilla, trimmed with Limerick lace, across her shoulders; her bonnet was of white crape, with an ostrich feather in it.

The guard of honour (consisting of forty men from each of the regiments in garrison) was present, and a battery of horse artillery was stationed at the extremity of the pier.

Just at ten o'clock, all things being in readiness for her Majesty's landing, the Lord Primate, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Duke of Leinster, the Lord Chancellor, the Chief Justices of the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas, the Master of the Rolls, and Sir Edward Blakeney, came on the landing-place, under the grand pavilion leading from the jetty to the railway terminus; immediately after which his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant advanced, and, bowing to her Majesty, proceeded on the gangway, and was succeeded by her Majesty, leaning on Prince Albert, and followed by the Royal children, the Lords and Ladies in Waiting, and a numerous retinue.

The moment her Majesty set foot on Irish ground, Lieutenant Hutchinson, R.N., Harbour-Master at Kingstown, hoisted the Royal standard amidst reiterated cheers; and as her Majesty passed along the pavilion she curtsied in acknowledgment of the reception given her by repeatedly bowing at either side. The hoisting of the Royal standard, by Lieutenant Hutchinson, was the signal for a Royal salute from all the war-ships in the harbour; and between the booming of the cannon and the cheers of the multitude, her Majesty's reception at Kingstown was magnificent in the extreme. Her Majesty remained a few moments on the platform in front of the railway terminus, looking on and bowing to the crowd beneath and around her; after which his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, who walked before her Majesty along the gangway, conducted her into the waiting-room, from whence her Majesty proceeded down the steps to the railway train, and having got into the Royal carriage, the Royal party proceeded, at a rapid pace, to Sandymount Avenue.

The engine, the "Albert," was profusely decorated with evergreens and flowers.

The Royal carriage elicited the admiration of every one who beheld it. Mr. Haughton, the General Superintendent of the Railway Factory, was the person to whom was entrusted the construction and painting of this splendid vehicle; and Mr. Hector Melville, of Westland-row, was selected to furnish, embellish, and fit it up in a style worthy of the illustrious occupants. The exterior of the carriage was painted blue and white, and the French style of decoration furnished to Mr. Melville a very elegant model for the ornamental work. The windows are of plate glass, and command such an extensive view, that her Majesty was enabled to see all around her; and those who were fortunate enough to obtain positions at any place along the line, saw the Royal party without anything to obstruct them. At either side of the roof was a beautifully gilt fac simile of the Royal arms, and at each of the four corners was a crown placed upon a cushion. The interior of the carriage was divided into three compartments; the centre, in which her Majesty, the Prince, and the children sat, was eleven feet five inches in length. The draperies consisted of white damask, richly ornamented with gilt devices; the mirrors were of various shapes and sizes; a sofa of blue fabinet, four chairs, and five footstools, constituted what may be termed the essential furniture of this compartment; the ceiling was highly ornamented; and altogether this and every other part of the carriage presented an appearance of beauty and elegance seldom surpassed. The other two compartments, intended for the maids of honour and other attendants, were proportionately attractive, and fitted up in a manner that displayed the skill and taste of the designer. The heraldry was painted by Mr. Parke, of Thomas-street, the designs being those usual on such occasions, the Royal arms, Prince Albert's crest, the order of the Bath, Garter, St. Patrick, and the emblems illustrative of the union of the three countries.

Along the line of railway from King town every house was decorated, and every window occupied by crowds of fair occupants who waved handkerchiefs and banners in token of respect and salutation to the Queen; and on the terraces and promenades at either side of the railway were dense numbers of people were collected in groups of all of whom gave token, by some sign or other, of their loyalty.

SANDYMOUNT AVENUE.

At the point of the avenue where the railway crosses it, a platform was erected for her Majesty to cross over to the platform, which extended a considerable way [illegible] was covered with scarlet cloth, and was ascended from the road by three steps, covered with the same material. A raised floor, also covered with scarlet cloth, was constructed from the platform for some distance along the side of the avenue, by which her Majesty approached her carriage; and a tastefully executed awning overhung the length of the platform. At the end of it, and on the side the Royal carriage was stationed, was another extensive platform, occupied by a great number of ladies and gentlemen.

At the other [illegible] way there were other platforms, crowded with spectators; [illegible], the whole, as well as the hedgerows in the neighbourhood, being profusely decorated with festoons of evergreens and flowers, and interspersed with well selected shrubbery and parterres. The whole scene, at this point, was most interesting; and everything was done to give her Majesty a cordial and respectful welcome. Shortly before nine o'clock a troop of the 17th Lancers, commanded by Captain Brett, a troop of the Enniskillen Dragoons, under the command of Captain Shuttle, and a troop of the 8th [illegible] Prince [illegible]—the whole under the command of [illegible] those officers being senior in their respective ranks in their regiments, took up their position in the avenue, which they lined at either side, from the railway to the Rock-road. A party of the Metropolitan Police were also stationed at the end of the avenue, at the railway, under the command of Inspector Finnemore, and other bodies of the force were stationed along the line of route towards Baggot-street Bridge. At half-past nine o'clock the Royal carriages arrived, each drawn by four horses, with outriders and footmen in the Royal liveries. The vehicle intended for her Majesty drew up at the raised passage from the railway, and the other carriages were drawn to the other side, through an opening made in the platform for the purpose. A number of her Majesty's servants in scarlet liveries, and mounted, accompanied the carriages. The persons in the employment of the Railway Company, who were about the platform, were white ribbons and rosettes in their breasts; and some gentlemen belonging to the county who were present were distinguished by a blue scarf over the arm. The engines of the trains that passed along the line during the morning were profusely decked with evergreens and flowers, and those which passed immediately before that containing the Royal party, were densely crowded by persons anxious to be in town before the procession.

At about ten minutes before ten o'clock, a special train, which it was arranged should be despatched immediately preceding that by which her Majesty travelled, arrived at the Avenue, and it was announced that she would arrive in a few minutes. The Earl of Erne, the Baron de Robeck, Mr. Ennis (High Sheriff of the county), Mr. James Hans Hamilton, and several other gentlemen who had been at Kingstown to receive her Majesty, and present the address, arrived by this train, [illegible] desirous to join the county procession. Colonel Maunsell, Quartermaster-General, and several other superior officers, arrived at the Rock-road, to see that all the arrangements were made. In the meantime the cannon at Kingstown were now plainly heard, announcing the landing of the Royal party, and at shortly after half-past [illegible] looked-for train appeared in sight. Loud and enthusiastic cheers, accompanied with waving of handkerchiefs and other demonstrations of respect, heralded the arrival of her Majesty; and when the train stopped at the platform those manifestations of feeling were renewed again and again, and were continued after her Majesty was [illegible]. The state carriage having been drawn up close to the platform, her Majesty, with Prince Albert and the Princess Royal, [illegible] Prince Alfred and the Princess Alice.

On her Majesty's Royal consort and children, making their appearance, they were received with warm and repeated cheers, which he, Majesty and Prince Albert acknowledged with much grace and cordiality. These were, comparatively, but few persons on the platform at the time, as the arrival took place sooner than was expected; or persons were probably under the impression that they would not be permitted to occupy places at or around that particular locality. Her Majesty handed to her carriage by Prince Albert, who took a seat by her side, and the Princess Alice and the Prince Alfred occupied the next carriage was occupied by Lady Jocelyn, another lady, and some other Royal children; then followed a carriage with Lady Fortescue and Sir George Grey; and another, in which were the Lord-Lieutenant and the Marchioness of Londonderry. A fifth carriage contained some persons connected with the Royal suite, the carriage in which her Majesty and Prince Albert were seated was an open one; and while it remained during the completion of the arrangements for departure, they repeatedly acknowledged the cheering and other manifestations of loyalty and respect from those present, and seemed to be much pleased at their hearty reception by the Irish people.

The chairman, deputy chairman, treasurer, and all the members of the board of directors of the Kingstown Railway, came up in the train with the Royal party, and after it set out most of them proceeded to the city.

While the preparations being complete, the Royal cortège set out. It was preceded by her Majesty's servants in livery and the troop of Horse Guards, and followed by the other portion of the guard of honour.

From the end of Sandymount to the great triumphal arch at Upper Baggot-street—the entrance of the city, and the spot at which the jurisdiction of the Corporation commenced—there was scarcely a house from which a flag or banner of some kind had not been hung out, or at which a balcony or platform had not been erected. Windows and house-tops were all put in requisition for the accommodation of the people. The first arch in the line of procession was erected at the Merrion-gate, and was designed by Mr. Richard Turner, the proprietor, from the designs of Mr. Thomas Turner, architect, who designed the great Palm House at Kew Gardens, and is now erecting the monster roof, on his patent principle, over the Liverpool station of the London and North-Western Railway Company. The Royal cortège having passed through this arch, and along Upper Baggot-street, arrived, at 20 minutes to 11, at the great triumphal arch, where the ceremony of the presentation of the keys was arranged to be gone through. This great and very beautiful arch was designed by Mr. Thomas Turner, the son of the Mr. Turner already mentioned, and the iron-work was executed at the works of the latter gentleman. The arch was 127 feet in width, and 92 feet high, consisting of one great central arch and wings. The great gate on the centre was 20 feet wide and 35 feet high. It was constructed of wrought iron, and was of most tasteful style, bearing on the one compartment the letters "V. R.," and on the corresponding one "A. C.," the whole exquisitely decorated with roses and floral wreaths, and surmounted by an immense shamrock branch. Over this stood an architrave ornamented with artificial flowers and laurels supporting the Royal Arms, with the Arms of the City on either side. The whole was capped by an imperial crown of beautiful workmanship, 10 feet in diameter, with the usual national emblems, the shamrock, rose, and thistle, in their natural colours. The inscription on the face of the arch was the old Irish words of welcome,

The side arches were admirably decked with evergreens and heaths, interspersed with roses and the choicest flowers that could be procured.—(See the whole page Engraving, at page 104.)

On the approach of the Queen's carriage, the Royal standard of England was hoisted on a flag-staff, on the summit; and, from each point on the top flowing garlands waved gracefully in the breeze. Four city heralds occupied the pediments at each side, and were attired in the antique fashion familiar to the people of London, and to all who have ever visited the Tower, and seen the "beef-eaters."

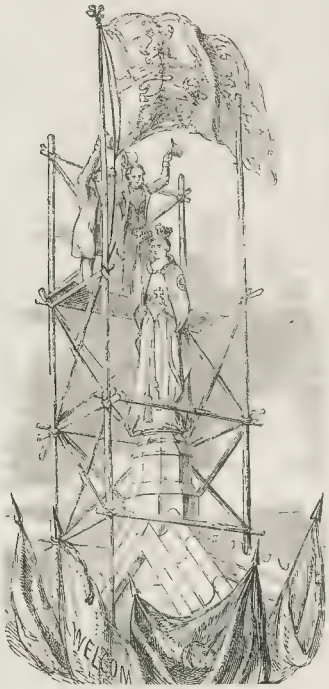
PRESENTATION OF THE KEYS.

Long before ten o'clock the carriage of the Right Hon. Timothy O'Brien, Esq., Lord Mayor of Dublin, arrived at the great triumphal arch in Baggot-street. His Lordship, in his full robes of office, descended into the street, and awaited, with the Aldermen, Councillors, the Recorder, and other municipal officers, the arrival of her Majesty. The scene at this point was peculiarly brilliant and striking. The gay appearance of numerous ladies at balconies, platforms, open windows, and house-tops—the glittering uniform of the dragoons that lined the streets on either side—the officers in command riding rapidly about from place to place—the officious but good-humoured policemen—the quaint group of municipal officers—the Lord Mayor, in red robes, with massive gold chain about his neck—the Aldermen, in similar robes—the Sword-bearer, with his antique cap of maintenance—the Mace-bearer, with a mace almost too big for him to carry—the City Marshal, in red coat riding fussily about, with the keys of the city dangling from his side—the learned Recorder, in wig and gown—and, amid all these, the ever-moving crowd on either side, formed altogether a very magnificent picture.

About half-past ten, a flourish of trumpets announced the approach of her Majesty. Far down the road, before the Queen's carriage was visible, from this station the waving of handkerchiefs could be seen

THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT LANDING AT THE CUSTOM HOUSE QUAY, CORK.

The shouting of the multitude gave additional evidence that the Queen was passing; and in a few minutes the City Marshal dismounted from his gallant steed (on which he appeared to us to have sat for a long time rather uncomfortably), and ran, with more celerity than dignity, to the gate, and unlock-d it amid the cheers of the crowd on the foot-pavement, not unmixed with laughter from the spectators on the platforms. The Lord Mayor, and the whole civic train, proceeded through the gate to the exterior of the city boundary, where her Majesty's carriage had stopped. An officer had been sent to his Lordship, to demand admittance for the Queen, and a command was conveyed that he should attend at the Royal carriage upon her Majesty.



INAUGURATION OF THE STATUE OF QUEEN VICTORIA ON THE ROYAL COLLEGE, CORK.

On reaching her Majesty's carriage the municipal officers knelt, presenting the mace and sword; and the city keys were then placed by the Lord Mayor on a magnificent silver salver, and presenting them to her Majesty, he addressed her as follows:—

"May it please your Majesty,—As chief magistrate of this, your ancient and loyal city of Dublin, I have, on the part of my fellow-citizens, most humbly and respectfully to congratulate your Majesty on your safe and happy arrival in this city. I beg respectfully to deliver the keys of the city to your Majesty, and would pray your Majesty's kind permission to conduct you through the city."

Her Majesty having re-delivered the keys, addressed his Lordship expressive of her great delight in arriving in Dublin, and the cortège was then formed in the following order:—

VIEW OF PASSAGE AND THE MONKSTOWN BATHS.—THE CORK STEAM-SHIP COMPANY'S VESSELS PASSING ROUND THE ROYAL SQUADRON.

The procession took its course from this point down Lower Baggot-street, Fitzwilliam-street, Merrion-square East, Merrion-square North, Clare-street, through the triumphal arch into Leinster-street, Nassau-street, Lower Grafton-street, by the College to Westmoreland-street, across Carlisle-bridge, Sackville-street, by the Rotunde, Cavendish-row, Rutland-square East, Gardiner's-row, Temple-street, Hardwicke-place, Eccles-street, Circular-road, through the Phœnix-park, to the Viceregal Lodge.

From the windows of the Rev. Mr. Dickinson, in Baggot-street, a purple banner emblazoned in gold, with the following stanza of a new version of the National Anthem, written by the Most Reverend Charles Dickinson, D.D., late Lord Bishop of Meath, was exhibited, and attracted great attention.

Oh! may thy cheerful smile
Long bless our native Isle!
Health to our Queen!

Firm round thy throne we'll stand,
True to thy just command,
Long in our happy land—
God save the Queen

The cavalcade proceeded rather rapidly down Fitzwilliam-street and by Merrion-square, into Nassau-street, where the third grand arch was erected in honour of her Majesty, by Mr. D. R. Boylan, of Adelaide-place, and Baggot-street, by order of the Mansion House Committee. This triumphal edifice consisted of eight pillars placed upon mouldings of Roman cement; at top were the crown and harp, with the flags of St. George, St. Andrew, St. Patrick, and the Union Jack. It was a handsome gate in the style of Roman architecture, with two round columns, in the centre of which stood an elegant vase filled with flowers, and further decorated by white marble figures of the God of Love. The carriage drive-way was 18 feet wide, the round columns were 2 feet 6 in. in diameter, the space between the two was 4 feet 6 in.—in these the Cupids were displayed. The pillars were of the Ionic order, with appropriate caps and vases, composed of Roman cement painted in imitation of white marble. The pedestals upon which the pillars stood were decorated with the four orders of knighthood. On the summit appeared the crown and harp; beneath these was a mimic shield, in the centre of which was an Irish harp, seven flags, the several designs of the three countries, with the Union Jack in the middle, floated from the gates. The interior and exterior of the building were painted in imitation of white marble. The shafts of the pillars were of Sienna, with white caps and bases. Nassau-street, being narrow, afforded a magnificent view of the entrée. The interior of the College railings were filled with persons, and the houses and balconies swarmed with masses of human beings.

Immediately opposite the Bank the band of the 40th Regiment struck up the National Anthem. The concourse of persons at this point exceeded anything that can be imagined; the human flood, having rolled in from all localities into this great reservoir, surpassed all conception. In front of the University, with a considerable number of persons of distinction, the fellows and students viewed the procession, and warmly cheered the successor of Elizabeth, by whom the institution was founded. At Carlisle-bridge the shipping was crowded from the topmast with sailors, anxious to give their hearty cheers for her whose flag so long has braved "the battle and the breeze." On clearing Westmoreland-street, her Majesty appeared to be much struck with the appearance of Messrs. Kinahan's establishment, the Carlisle Buildings. Every window in this extensive and splendid structure was filled with ladies, while from the roof floated the Union Jack, and a fine band struck up the National Anthem, and at intervals during the day performed several well-selected airs. The view from this point was very magnificent, and combined in one coup d'œil nearly all the great public buildings, shipping, quays, &c. of Dublin.

THE NORTH CITY.

At this side of the metropolis the preparations for the reception of her Majesty and her Royal Consort were upon the same scale of magnificence as elsewhere. Many hours before the time appointed for the procession to move, crowds of well-dressed persons, men, women, and children, thronged towards the points from which the pageant could be seen; and a vast number of fashionably attired ladies and gentlemen had taken their places upon elegant platforms erected along the route. The windows of all the houses, and in most instances the house-tops, were filled with eager spectators, and the streets through which the procession was to pass, together with many of those adjoining, were almost wholly impassable.

Having traversed the south city, the procession wended its way over Carlisle-bridge. As the Royal carriage slowly moved across this handsome thoroughfare, her Majesty and Prince Albert obtained a favourable view of the justly celebrated quays of Dublin, of several of the elegant bridges which span the Liffey, and of the principal public edifices distributed along its embankments. Looking westward, the Metal Bridge, with Essex Bridge, and Richmond Bridge, following one another at considerable intervals, and the imposing dome of the Four Courts in the distance, formed a panorama not unworthy of the Royal gaze. Then, taking a glance eastward, the Royal vision was enabled to catch the profile of our truly noble Custom House, an edifice which, in point of architectural beauty, has on all hands been admitted to be superior to that in London; and we are disposed to conjecture that a passing glimpse was obtained of a certain plain-looking building on Burgh quay, which, though likely to occupy a niche in history, has at present been given over to the dominion of dust and cobwebs. One other circumstance tended to heighten the picturesqueness of this scene. All the vessels in the river were gaily dressed out with flags, and manned to every topmast; while the quays on either side of the Liffey were with dense masses of human beings, as well also D'Olier-street, Moorefoland-street, and the other adjoining streets within view, thoroughfares kept the street and double-lined the entire length of this great line; even the Carlisle bridge to the North Wall, in order to secure a attendance to the procession. A number of the police were also in ways, who managed to preserve excellent order upon the dense into the se Royal cortège, with its attendant procession, advanced point flags the scene became one of immense excitement. At every and cordage brightest and most varied hues fluttered from window upon the plaist a profusion of evergreens were tastefully arranged pattway at e and balconies. Dense masses of people lined the circumstanced, de, who, as well as those who were more favourably obtained more than one emphatic column that graces the city, Within the wooden pall-sadingrance from the Royal travellers, latter the the boys of the Hibernian Service erected around the base of the their neat uniform were arranged school, Phœnix Park, dressed in its corners one of the seamen military order; while at each of tional flag and, on the flag-staff Dragon was displayed, small, but well disciplined band by the Royal train band, the National Anthem, and the bravo of the Hibernian Service struck up the most intense enthusiasm on the part of the Union Jack, and a

The cavalcade next advanced up Cavendish-row, where, as in the streets previously traversed, the windows and balconies were crowded with fair faces, smiling and animated. The residence of Sir John Kingston James formed an attractive object in his locality, being superbly decorated with silk flags, and ornamented with evergreens and flowering shrubs.

Having proceeded through Gardiner's-row and Great Denmark-street, where the Royal party were received in an equally gratifying manner, the procession wheeled into Upper Temple-street, at the northern extremity of which the carriage stopped for a few minutes, in order to allow her Majesty and Prince Albert leisure to inspect the beautiful church of St. George's parish, which has been so justly admired for its architectural elegance. The graceful and exquisitely proportioned steeple, towering aloft in the full blaze of the noon-day sun, justly excited the admiration of her Majesty and the Prince.

Immediately beyond the church at the foot of Temple-street, a massive-looking triumphal arch, of plain and chaste design, was the next feature deserving attention. This noble arch, built by Messrs. Williams, of Talbot-street, and erected by them at the owner's expense, as a mark of respect and a tribute of loyalty to Her Majesty, was executed in imitation of stone, and was surmounted by the Royal arms, which further were capped by a handsome chevaux de frise, formed of furled flags. Beneath was the appropriate inscription, from the 122d Psalm—

"Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy palaces," and immediately over the entrance the following:—

"Victoria and Albert, 1849."

ARCH IN ECCLES-STREET.

As her Majesty and the Prince passed under the arch, a very interesting occurrence took place. The Messrs. Williams having asked permission to present her Majesty with a dove at this arch, she graciously consented to accept this appropriate emblem in the following letter, which they received from the Lord Chamberlain:—

Stafford Hotel, August 8.

Lord Breadalbane presents his compliments to the Messrs. Williams and Sons, and in answer to their letter of the 4th inst. begs to inform them that he has taken the earliest opportunity of submitting their attention to the Queen, and that her Majesty has been graciously pleased to approve of it.

Messrs. A. Williams and Sons.

As the Royal carriage was about entering the triumphal arch, a beautiful fawn-coloured dove, ornamented with a white ribbon, was lowered to her Majesty by Mr. Robert Williams. Her Majesty received this suitable emblem of the effect which her Royal visit was calculated to produce with smiles, and most graciously acknowledged the simple but significant gift. The bird was held out by her Majesty to the Royal children, to whom it at once became an object of attraction. The Prince of Wales soon obtained possession of the bird, which seemed to absorb his attention.

The procession then advanced to Blacquiere-bridge, at which, and its immediate neighbourhood, a vast concourse of spectators had collected. Crossing the bridge, the Royal carriage passed beneath a very elegant arch, in imitation of stone, and in the form of the base of a column, which had been erected just at the commencement of Mabre-place.

The scene from this locality along the Circular-road, as far as the Park gate, though but little varied, was yet strikingly gay and picturesque. Flags and evergreens in profusion adorned the innumerable platforms, and the many pretty terraces upon both sides of the road, while eager thousands were clustered in groups along the hedges, and upon every available eminence from whence a view of the procession could be obtained. As the Royal carriage passed, the assembled myriads loudly cheered her Majesty and the Prince, who did not fail to acknowledge the compliment. The Royal party at length arrived at the gate of the Phœnix Park, where it parted company with the procession, and her Majesty, with the Royal Consort and children, were then driven at a rapid pace to the Viceregal Lodge.

VISIT OF HER MAJESTY AND THE ROYAL FAMILY TO THE BOTANIC GARDEN OF THE ROYAL DUBLIN SOCIETY.

Her Majesty the Queen visited the Royal Dublin Society's Botanic Garden on Monday afternoon, accompanied by his Excellency and the Countess of Clarendon. The Prince and his Excellency rode on horseback, and led the way after the outriders. The Countess of Clarendon was in the carriage along with her Majesty and the Ladies in Waiting. The carriage with the Royal children and two ladies immediately followed.

The intention of her Majesty to honour the Botanic Gardens with a visit was so little known, that very little preparation was made to receive her. Notwithstanding the unexpected honour, his Grace the Duke of Leinster, Lundy Foot, Esq., and Dr. Harrison, Hon. Secretaries R.D.S.; along with Sir T. Staples, H. Wynne, Esq., members of the botanic committee; P. Barry, Esq., architect, who erected the beautiful new range of conservatories; Dr. Collins, the chairman of the committee of Agriculture; and a considerable number of the members of the Royal Dublin Society, were in attendance to wait on her Majesty.

Mr. Moore, the Curator, was introduced by the Duke of Leinster, when he accompanied her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert round these beautiful gardens, pointing out the objects most worthy of attention. Her Majesty and the Prince appeared much delighted; and the latter, who is a distinguished Prince Albert appeared to possess accurate knowledge of the principal trees and shrubs, as well as the more scientific departments. His Grace the Duke of Leinster pointed out the more attractive objects to the Queen as she passed through the gardens. The ladies and gentlemen present received the Royal party with that enthusiastic welcome characteristic of the country, which, though not understanding the unexpected honour, was yet calculated to do so much good to an agricultural country like Ireland, augurs well indeed; and we trust the leading members of the Royal Dublin Society will mark their esteem of the honour thus paid, by getting the noble house lately built properly heated, and filled with the plants intended for it.

THE QUEEN'S COURT.

On Monday their Excellencies the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon caused invitations to be issued to the following party, to have the honour of meeting her Majesty the Queen and Prince at dinner, at the Viceregal Lodge:—His Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, Viscountess Jocelyn, the Lord Primate, the Lord Chancellor and Mrs. Brady, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Duke and Duchess of Leinster, the Marquis of Breadalbane, the Marquis of Headfort, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, Earl and Countess of Clancarty, the Earl of Charlemont, the Earl of Lucan, the Earl of Desart, the Hon. Miss Dawson, the Right Hon. Sir George Grey, Sir Edward and Lady Blakeney, the Chief Justice and Miss Blackburne, Colonel Phipps, Mr. Corry Connellan; Captain Bagot, A.D.C. in Waiting. In the evening the Marquis of Ormonde, Sir William Somerville, and all the members of the Viceregal household and staff joined the Royal party.

A notification from the Lord Chamberlain's office, Dublin Castle, was issued on Monday, stating that her Majesty had been pleased to desire that the following persons should have the entrée to the Castle:—The Primate, the Lord Chancellor, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Roman Catholic Primate, the Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, the Duke of Leinster, the Cabinet Ministers of her Majesty's Household, the Lord-Lieutenant's Household, the Lord Chief Justice of Queen's Bench, the Master of the Rolls, the Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, the Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant, the Chief Baron, the Attorney-General, the Commander of the Forces, the Paymaster of Civil Services, the Under-Secretary to the Lord-Lieutenant, the Solicitor-General, the Commander of the Garrison, the Adjutant-General, the Quarter-Master-General, and all who have the entrée at St. James's.

THE ILLUMINATIONS.

As a further proof of the loyal attachment of the people of Dublin to their Sovereign, the whole city was illuminated in a manner fully worthy of the occasion.

The north side of the city was brilliantly illuminated. Sackville-street was almost impassable, owing to the splendid fireworks and the exhibition of the electric light from Nelson's Pillar, and the many devices displayed from the various houses. The Post-office was finely illuminated. The front of the building displayed a large gas illumination extending across the pillars, and consisting of the letters V. and R., of a large size, including a harp, over which appeared a Crown, the entire flanked by stars; and upon the parts of the building at each side of the pillars the words "Victoria and Albert" appeared in large capitals produced by oil lamps. The side of the building adjoining Henry-street was adorned with a harp, Crown, and stars, formed by oil-lamps; and that on the side of Prince's-street with the letters V. and R. and a Crown, produced in the same manner.

The most attractive feature of the illuminations was the electric light, by Professor Hinkman, from the top of Nelson's Pillar. It was the most perfect and powerful display of this beautiful light that has ever been produced in Dublin, and much credit is due to the Professor for the time, labour, and money expended on its production to do honour to the auspicious occasion. The trustees of this national monument gave the Professor permission to exhibit the light, which he did by means of a galvanic battery consisting of one hundred and eighty-five cells of Callan's battery, in the most perfect working order.

The establishment of Mr. Thom, of Abbey-street, was tastefully decorated by the initials of the Queen and Prince Albert, and the Crown. From the roof of the Royal Hibernian Academy was suspended a flag, and the illuminations exhibited from it consisted of V. R. and a star. The manner in which the National School Institution, Marlborough-street, was lighted up, reflected much credit upon the taste of those by whom the display was designed. They were not more than of the ordinary character, but these were so neat and so effective as to attract general admiration. At the top of North Great George's-street a brilliant illumination at once caught the eye, and was particularly observable from being contrasted with the other houses, which, though exceedingly well lighted, did not present an object so striking. Mountjoy-square was presented a blaze of light, and the Custom House had a variety of variegated lamps, with other decorations. The view of the city from Blacquiere's Bridge was highly effective. The peacefulness of the waters of the canal, and the gloom of the night, imparted to the distant scene an aspect of much beauty. As the poet says, "'Tis distance lends enchantment to the view," and nothing could surpass the brilliant effect of the electric light as seen from Blacquiere's Bridge. The hum of the busy bustling population of the city was distinctly heard, and the scene could enjoy the illuminations from the retired resting-place of the bridge were not anxious to return to the fearful crush and commotion of the streets. The Carlisle Buildings, Messrs. Kinahan's establishment, was splendidly illuminated with gas. The devices were, on one side, the harp and crown, with the letters V. R.; on the other side, V. A. The effect was very striking. The entire of Westmoreland-street was splendidly lighted up, and fire-works on a superb scale were set off from the house of Messrs. Goodbody and Co. The illuminations from the shop of Marcus Moses were also very effective.

The illuminations in College-green and Dame-street (including, as they do, so many public buildings) were very attractive and varied. The College, with its fine front, offered numerous points of view; and the edges of which lines of flame were thrown out, giving a bold and pleasing effect. The side pediments were similarly decorated. On the entablature to the right of the centre pediment, the word "Victoria" was traced in immense characters of flame; on the other and corresponding entablature, "Albert" was similarly traced, and spiral wreaths of flame ran up along the pillars. On the Westmoreland-street side, the letters A. W. P. were traced, and above them the Prince of Wales's hat and feathers were marked out in flame. The National Bank had the motto, "Cead Mile Failte," in showy letters; and Anderson's Royal Hotel, the initials V. R. and a brilliant Crown. The Post-office, the Hibernian Gas Company, after supplying so much light to others, received a good supply for home purposes, and the mystic letters V. A., the star, and shamrock figured on the front of the building. R. Atkinson and Co., poplin manufacturers to the Queen, 31, College-green, had the initials V. A. and Crown brilliantly lighted with gas, surmounted by the Union Jack and two white poplin flags, with the fatal Irish and emphatic motto, "Cead Mile Failte." The Messrs. Browne and Co.'s establishment had the initials V. A. and star, and Mr. Parker a star; and the star at Mr. Gallie's threw a brilliant reflection across the street.

The Commercial Buildings had a crown and the letters V. A. in gas jets outside, while the mouldings of the windows all round were encircled with oil lamps of variegated colours. A handsome transparency at Waterhouse's, silversmiths to his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant, represented the universal empire of the Queen, an empire "on which the sun never sets," with four emblematical figures representing the inhabitants of the four quarters of the globe. The Messrs. Andrews' premises, in No. 22, Dame-street, were very conspicuous: the motto, "There's a Good Time Coming," in gas letters four feet high, extending the whole length of their premises in Dame-street (eighty feet), had a very striking effect. Gregory Kane, military portmanteau and camp furniture manufacturer, had the initials V. R., with handsome Crown and gas tubing, surmounting an iron balcony. A very brilliant star at Mrs. Kearney's, fruiterer to the Lord-Lieutenant, was also a very observable object. Dublin Castle, at its lower gate, was ornamented with the initials V. A. in very conspicuous letters, and a star; and at its upper gate a double range of lights crossed the arch, with the Royal Crown above. The Castle exchange was also remarkably well lighted; and the harp and Crown and other insignia of Royalty, thrown out in strong relief, could be seen for a considerable distance.

Mr. Joseph Comyns exhibited a very beautiful Irish harp, surmounted with the Crown, with wreath of shamrock, and V. R. formed with variegated lamps in oil. Comyn and Co., V. R. with Crown, harp, and shamrocks. Hibernian Bank, V. R. Mr. Shade, an Irish harp surmounted with Crown and wreath of shamrocks, and the letters V. R. with variegated lamps in oil.

THE QUAY—SOUTH SIDE.

The quays were magnificently illuminated at both sides from one end to the other, and presented one of the most superb panoramas of this description we have ever seen. Commencing at the south-eastern extremity, the subjoined emblems were most deserving of attention. The front of the shop of the Messrs. Lundy Foot and Co., at the corner of D'Olier-street and Westmoreland-street, was a conspicuous and justly-admired object, especially when viewed from Sackville-street. The letters V. A., surmounted with a Crown, with the inscription, "Cead Mile Failte," in Irish characters, forming an elegant arch above the Royal emblem and initials, constituted one of the most gorgeous and attractive features of the night. The establishment of Messrs. M'Birnie, Calles, and Co., in Aston's-quay, was prettily illuminated with the initials V. A. and the Crown; and that of Messrs. Higginbottom, Wellington-quay, was superbly ornamented with the Royal emblems, and the word "Hurrah" in gas. The great shop of Downes and Co., the Provincial Bank, and the Temperance of the Great Southern and Western Railway likewise attracted a large share of the general admiration. The illumination of the latter edifice in particular was extremely beautiful. In the centre was a large and handsome Crown, and on either side the letters V. and R. with great flourishes, the whole being executed with blue, red, and white lights placed immediately on the roof.

On Carmen-hill, Mr. Chew's establishment exhibited a very handsome transparency, extending the whole length of the premises bearing the words, in large ornamental letters, "The Freeman's London News"—a compliment to our journal for which we were certainly not prepared.

NORTH SIDE.

The first object calculated to attract particular notice on crossing the King's-bridge, was the brilliant appearance of the gateway of the Royal Phœnix Iron-Works, upon which the initials V. and A., with the Crown between, blazed out with a dazzling effulgence. Traversing the North Quay, we were struck with two handsome full-length transparencies of her Majesty and Prince Albert, in which the likenesses were pretty faithfully produced. The stationery warehouse of the Messrs. Chambers, at the corner of Essex-bridge and Capel street, was much admired for the elegance of its illumination; and the office of the Commercial Journal contained a large transparency, which, being well lit up inside, had a very beautiful effect. At top was a scroll—"Commercial Journal Office" being inscribed thereon in golden-hued letters. In the centre was an upright figure of Erin, standing on a verdant heath, with the ancient harp at her feet. In the background, to the right of the centre compartment, the Round Tower, with ecclesiastical ruins, was seen, with the mountains in the distance. On the left, the sun was rising over a distant hill. In its brilliant light the vision of a printing-press could be discerned, emblematic of the light of knowledge. The words "Fiat Lux" in bold relief, were inscribed above the figure and landscape. The compartment on the right bore a tablet with the words, "Science, late and reward native industry" inscribed thereon, the harp of Erin surmounting the inscription. A similar tablet on the left bore the words "Encourage and promote Irish manufacture," with a similar emblem surmounting the words.

The Custom House was eminently lighted up on two sides—that facing the North Wall and Beresford-place had the word "Victoria" in large characters of gas, and the three Graces—the shamrock, rose, and thistle—all letters V. and A., in variegated lamps, with stars in gas on that part occupied by the dial of the clock. The Northumberland Buildings were rendered exceedingly attractive by the splendid illumination of the Grahame-street approach with the shamrock, rose, and thistle, ation has injured the general fine effect of the room. In front of the book-cases stand pedestals, on which are placed busts of the great philosophers and men of letters of ancient and modern times. The number of volumes in this library is now considerably over 100,000, and every year there is an accession of beyond 3000.

The Manuscript Room: The collection is valuable in Irish, Icelandic and Persian.

Her Majesty was received by the Provost and senior fellows, and was conducted merely to the Library, not having time to visit the other departments of the College. She expressed her high admiration of its beauty and extent; and, on retiring, inscribed her name in the College Book—an example which was followed by his Royal Highness Prince Albert. Very few persons were present, it not being generally known that her Majesty intended to honour the University with a visit

After leaving Trinity College, the Royal party proceeded up Dame-street, then along the quays on the south side of the Liffey, across the King's Bridge to the Viceregal Lodge; and was every where received by the people with the same demonstrations of loyalty and affection. After partaking of luncheon, her Majesty again drove out in an open carriage, attended by the Countess of Clarendon, and followed by his Royal Highness Prince Albert and his Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant on horseback. It was about half-past five in the afternoon when her Majesty left the Viceregal Lodge; no escort of dragoons followed—no troops of any kind were seen—she trusted herself, almost alone, among the people; and this proof of entire confidence was well bestowed, and warmly repaid.

As the Queen's carriage drove through the principal streets, balconies were filled as if by magic—groups were formed instantaneously—and the waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and the loud huzzas that arose ever and anon, testified that at every new point of her progress there was a new burst of popular feeling.

In the rear of the Queen's carriage followed a motley throng of carriages—from the patrician vehicle, with its liveried and bewigged coachman, down to the humble hack car. There were at least twenty or thirty of the last-mentioned, rattling after the Queen with all the speed at their command. Such a sight was never before seen in Dublin, and such an escort never before attended a Sovereign, there or anywhere else. The Irish, above all people, are enthusiastic and grateful; and their delight at seeing her Majesty riding about among them in this simple and unostentatious manner, and evidently enjoying the cordiality of her reception, was expressed in a thousand ways, and by every class of society. The most bigoted Repealers were as enthusiastic as the rest; and the shouts that rent the air at every corner, although the most striking proofs of the triumph which her Majesty had achieved, were by no means the only ones. The praises of her affability and condescension were upon every tongue; and to such an extent did this feeling prevail, that the very journals which had done their best, before the Queen's arrival, to procure for her a cold and simply polite reception, became as warm in their loyalty as the people, and confessed that the "confidence with which she flung herself among the citizens of Dublin, unescorted save by her household, touched the hearts and captivated the affections of all."

The principal object of her Majesty's afternoon drive was possibly to show herself to the people; but the ostensible object was to visit the Royal Hospital, upon the site of the old Priory of Kilmainham.

The hospital owes its origin to the exertions of James Duke of Ormond. His representations prevailed upon Charles II. to assent by his Royal letter dated the 27th October, 1679 to the erection of "an hospital for such aged and maimed officers and soldiers as shall at any time be dismissed out of our army as unserviceable men, and for making provision for their future maintenance."

The site having been selected, the walls of the ancient priory were removed, and the present noble edifice erected at a cost of £23,000, after a design by Sir C. Wren. In form, it is a rectangle of 306 feet by 280 feet, presenting four fronts, which enclose an area 210 ft. square: three of these fronts are plain, massive, and uniform, built of brick, and consist of two stories, with a third lighted by dormant windows in the roof. In each front there is an arched gateway, faced with stone. The wooden entablatures over the gates are elaborately and beautifully sculptured: those on the east and west representing various military trophies and emblems; that on the south, festoons and flowers, and a lion's head. Three sides and a part of the fourth side, have a piazza thirteen feet wide, under which, in unfavourable weather, the inmates can walk. The north, or principal front, is built of rough stone, and its architecture differs from the other sides, presenting to the view twelve large, circular headed windows, with dormants on part of the roof. The east wing of the north front comprises the chapel; the west wing, the apartments of the master; and the centre, the great hall, or refectory. The middle of this front is ornamented by an angular pediment, supported by four Corinthian pilasters of hewn stone; and over it is the steeple, a square of plain masonry, with four Gothic windows supporting an Ionic entablature. Over this is a smaller tower, containing the clock, with four dial-plates; and the steeple terminates in an octagonal spire covered with copper, surmounted by a ball and weathercock. The door of the north front is of the Corinthian order, and over it are the arms of the Duke of Ormond, sculptured in stone.

The great hall or refectory, occupies the centre of the northern front; in length 100 feet, by 45 feet wide; lofty, the ceiling flat, and divided into several compartments; the centre is occupied by a curious clock dial, painted on its surface; the hall is wainscotted, the upper part plain plaster, and ornamented with twenty-two full-length portraits of those who were patrons of the Hospital, or who held high offices in the Government. A gallery runs along the south side of the hall, that communicates with the chapel and the Master's apartments; it is supported by carved brackets, representing angels.

The Infirmary, which is spacious, and commodiously fitted up, stands on the north-east part of the grounds, 400 yards distant from the Hospital, near the houses of the medical officers, and has a free circulation of air around. The establishment is capable of accommodating over 400 persons, but the allowed complement at present is 200.

The Royal party was received at the grand entrance of the Hospital by the Master-General, Sir Edward Blakeney; the Deputy-Masters, Colonels Cochrane and Mansell; the Registrar, Charles Pengelley, Esq; and by the Chamberlain, Captain George; and conducted into the hall, where their attention was directed to some of the principal portraits, including that of Charles II., by Sir Godfrey Kneller; and the Duke of Ormond, the founder of the Hospital.

From the hall her Majesty, the Prince, and suite proceeded to the chapel door, where they were met and conducted by the Chaplain, the Rev. John Connell. The beautiful ceiling, the great eastern window, and the unrivalled carved altar-piece, by Grinling Gibbons, with the various coats of arms in stained glass, attracted particular notice. Her Majesty next inspected the faithful veterans, who were drawn out, with their respective captains, to render her due honour; and passed along their ranks with a face radiant with smiles, to the great gratification of the old men.

The Queen signified her desire of visiting the soldiers' rooms, and, taking Prince Albert at once by the arm, proceeded to the nearest, attended by the Adjutant, Captain Hort. Having minutely looked it over, she addressed the following words to the men:—"I am glad indeed to see you all so very comfortable."

A brief visit to the Master's apartments, where her Majesty was received by Lady Blakeney, closed this interesting scene.

When the Royal cortège issued from the gate the Queen was greeted with the warmest cheers, and waving of hats and handkerchiefs; and her Majesty graciously acknowledged those expressions of loyal feeling. The cavalcade swept rapidly past, and proceeded towards town, followed by all the carriages and other vehicles which had previously occupied positions on the road, and by a crowd of pedestrians; and taking the direction of the southern line of quays, it proceeded along them as far as Essex-bridge, where it turned into Parliament-street, and thence into Dame-street, welcomed as it passed along by constant bursts of cheering. In Dame-street, handkerchiefs were waved from windows now occupied with spectators; whilst additions were made to the retinue of vehicles which attended the Royal party. The cortège drove through Nassau-street and Dawson-street into Stephen's-green, of which it made the circuit, beginning with the west side; then, turning into Merrion-row, it passed on through Merrion-street, and by the square, into Clare-street; and, passing under the triumphal arch erected there, on which the words "Welcome, Victoria" are inscribed, returned through Nassau-street into College-green: its appearance continuing to cause much excitement and displays of sincere loyalty. From Westmoreland-street the carriages crossed Carlisle-bridge, and, turning down by Bachelor's-walk, they proceeded along the quays on that side, and finally entered the Park gates, and drove back to the Viceregal Lodge.

The Freeman's Journal records an incident of the Royal progress, which we give on the authority of that journal. It states that, as the Queen passed through Parkgate street, Mr. James Nugent, one of the guardians of the North Union, approached the Royal carriage (which was moving rather slowly), and, addressing the Queen, said, "Mighty Monarch, pardon Smith O'Brien." Before, however, he had time to get an answer, or even to see how her Majesty received the application, Lord Clarendon rode up, and put him aside; and the cortège again set out at a dashing pace, which it maintained until it drew up opposite the Viceregal Lodge, in the Park.

An accredited correspondent states, that as the Queen's carriage approached the Circular-road, a countryman roared out at the top of his voice, "Arrah! Victoria, will you stand up, and let us have a look at you?" Her Majesty immediately rose, when the countryman again cried out, "God bless you for that, my darling." The Queen resumed her seat, and, with Prince Albert, laughed heartily at the incident.

THE PROCESSION PASSING THROUGH THE MARDYKE, CORK.

RENEWAL OF THE ILLUMINATIONS.

On Tuesday night Dublin once more presented a blaze of illuminations. This time there was no call from the Lord Mayor and authorities to light up the city; but all the principal buildings glowed as brilliantly with gas as on the preceding evening, and every tradesman who had gone to the expense of devices or transparencies, once more exhibited them, spontaneously and unasked, to the immense crowds that perambulated the streets.

"Cead Mile Failte!" was displayed in brilliant jets upon several buildings; "Welcome, Victoria!" was inscribed in magnificent flame upon more than one house front; while across the whole length of four houses in Dame-street, in letters of fire a yard and a half high, appeared the burden of the popular song by Charles Mackay, "There's a good Time coming"—a chorus of hopefulness which the ingenious illuminator thus turned to account in the expression of a feeling which, next to attachment to the person of the Queen, was uppermost in the minds of Irishmen on the occasion of her visit. Sackville-street, Westmoreland-street, and, indeed, all the principal streets of the city, presented a scene almost as gay and animated as on the preceding evening, although the crowds were not quite so dangerously dense as on the first occasion. The theatres and principal houses of public entertainment were crowded during the evening. At the Queen's Theatre the National Anthem was demanded, and sung by the whole audience; and at Anderson's splendid rooms, in College-green, as well as at other places of resort, her Majesty's health was proposed, and honoured with flowing bumpers.

HER MAJESTY'S LEVEE.

WEDNESDAY.

This day, at two o'clock, was appointed by her Majesty for holding the levee. Great interest was expressed in all quarters to be present on the occasion, and some little disappointment was felt by many who had been in the habit of attending the levees of the Lord-Lieutenant, that a previous presentation to his Excellency would not of itself be a qualification for presentation to the Queen. This feeling, however, soon wore off, as there was no lack of noblemen and gentlemen in Dublin who had previously been presented to her Majesty in London, to undertake the duty of presenting those Irish gentlemen and ladies who had not enjoyed that honour. Great was the harvest of the coach proprietors and car-drivers of Dublin on the memorable 8th of August. Eight guineas a day for a carriage and pair, and four guineas for a brougham and one horse, were the common prices asked, to the very great disgust of the strangers in Dublin, who were not fortunate enough to possess vehicles of their own.

Punctual to the moment, her Majesty, accompanied by Prince Albert and the members of the suite, arrived at the Castle. Her Majesty was attended by a guard of honour of the 7th Hussars; and as she passed at a round pace through the dense but orderly masses of her faithful subjects, was hailed with the most deafening vociferations of delight. Both sides of Parliament-street presented, from foundation-stone to the parapet, a living wall, as it were, of lovely and animated faces.

Previous to holding the general levee, a court was held for the purpose of receiving addresses of congratulation from the Corporation and the University. We subjoin a copy of the addresses of the former:—

TO HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN.

The humble and dutiful Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Dublin.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY.—We, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of your ancient and loyal city of Dublin, approach your Majesty with feelings of unmingled joy and gratification at your Majesty's arrival in this the second city of your Majesty's vast empire.

Afflicted by Providence with a heavy visitation, we entertain the hope that our day of trial is passing away, and that the auspicious visit of your Majesty may be the harbinger of happiness and prosperity to Ireland; and that a people faithful to a proverb, and conversant with your Majesty's kind feelings towards them, may long have an opportunity of admiring those exalted virtues, which alike shed lustre on your throne and adorn your private circle.

It is a further source of gratification to us, that your Majesty is on this occasion accompanied by your family; and we feel assured that your Majesty will find the minds of the Prince of Wales and your Royal children with those sentiments of affection and regard towards this country which your Majesty has always entertained.

That your Majesty may often repeat your visit; that your domestic circle, joyful and happy as it is, may long count one more, will be our anxious prayer; and feel assured, whether visited by disease and afflicted by famine, or living in the prospect of a more happy future, the Irish people (of a portion of whom we are the representatives) will ever cherish feelings of unbounded love, of ardent loyalty, and enthusiastic affection towards your Majesty's most sacred person and throne.

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS ALBERT, PRINCE CONSORT.

The Address of the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of the City of Dublin.

We, the Lord Mayor, Aldermen, and Burgesses of Dublin, beg permission to offer to your Royal Highness our sincere congratulations on the present auspicious occasion of your arrival in Ireland.

We have already tendered to your Royal Highness our assurance of the deep interest we have ever taken in your Royal Highness's happiness and welfare.

Always an object of essential regard, as the consort of our Most Gracious Sovereign, we have observed with feelings of pleasure the marked progress which your Royal Highness has made in the confidence and affection of all classes of her Majesty's subjects.

We are assured from all courses which would subject your Royal Highness' actions to cavil or misrepresentation you have at all times been the ready and judicious patron and promoter of every art, science, and undertaking tending to advance the prosperity, elevate the character, and enlarge the happiness of every class of the people.

In conclusion, and in the name of a warmhearted and loyal people, we humbly implore the Great Giver of all good, that He may endow with every blessing her Most Gracious Majesty, your Royal Highness, and the youthful members of the Royal family, and grant that the glorious event of her Majesty's visit may be the precursor of happier days and brighter prospects for our native land.

THE QUEEN'S REPLY.

It affords me sincere pleas ure to receive your address in my ancient and loyal city of Dublin; and I gladly avail myself of this occasion to express my grateful acknowledgments for the ardent affection and loyalty with which my arrival has been hailed.

It is a great gratification to me to have been accompanied by my children, as the scenes they have witnessed within the last few days cannot fail to impress them with sentiments of regard and attachment to the generous and warmhearted people by whom they have been received.

I glad ly share with you the hope that the heavy visitation with which Providence has recently visited large numbers of my people in this country is passing away. I have felt deeply for their sufferings, and it will be a source of heartfelt satisfaction to me if I am permitted to witness the future and lasting prosperity of this portion of the United Kingdom.

Whilst her Majesty was reading this answer, and at one of its most interesting portions, the band in the court-yard unexpectedly commenced to play "God save the Queen," which rendered her Majesty's voice inaudible. The Queen paused, ordered the music to be stopped, and this having been effected, after some minutes had elapsed, her Majesty again resumed the reading of her answer, and smiled at the momentary embarras caused by the sudden manifestation of loyalty.

The Lord Mayor then introduced Aldermen Keshan and William Reynolds, as the proposer and seconder of the address.

The Lord Mayor then handed the address to his Royal Highness Prince Albert, which he graciously acknowledged.

The Address from the University was read by the Lord Primate.

The Queen thanked the deputation for their loyal address; her Majesty adding, that the University which they represented occupied a distinguished position amongst the learned institutions upon earth; that its fame was to be found amongst the records of the dead, as well as amongst the works of the learned men of the present generation; that she trusted, by the manner in which they would continue to administer these high functions, they would promote the course of piety and learning. The deputation then, through Dr Singer, presented an address to Prince Albert, conferring on him an honorary degree, to which he made a suitable acknowledgment.

The Lord-Lieutenant then signified to the deputation that her Majesty requested that the members would consider themselves as severally presented without going through the formal mode of presentation. Dr. Wall and Dr. Singer were then presented by the Primate, and kissed her Majesty's hand. The deputation consisted of the Primate, as visitor, all the Fellows and Scholars, a considerable number of Doctors of Divinity, Law, Medicine, and Science, Lord Farnham, Mr. Hamilton, and Mr. Napier. They walked in procession from the College, and formed an interesting spectacle in their several academic robes.

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY,

We, the President and Members of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, most respectfully beg to present to your Majesty the expression of the humble sentiments of regard we entertain as of all the reigning arts and tastes of civilized life, we cannot but hail your Majesty's arrival upon our shores as an event auspicious of the future advancement in peace and prosperity of this portion of your Majesty's empire.

As members of a institution indebted for its charter of foundation and establishment to a Monarch of your Majesty's Royal and renowned race, and sustained by your Majesty's fostering goodness, we are bound to your Majesty's throne and person not only by the ordinary ties of loyalty which are common to all your Majesty's subjects, and which are more especially fixed in the hearts of the good and wise, but by the peculiar sentiments of regard we as professors and representatives of the peaceful and civilizing arts must naturally entertain towards a Royal patroness, who is exemplary amongst the nations as a Queen, and whose tastes, intellectual pursuits, and domestic virtues happily illustrate those principles of moral refinement which it is the wisdom of Sovereigns to inculcate and cherish amongst the peoples committed to their sway.

TO HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE ALBERT.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR ROYAL HIGHNESS,

We, the President and Members of the Royal Hibernian Academy of Painting, Sculpture, and Architecture, beg to present to your Loyal Highness the offering of cordial and respectful welcome due by us to the Consort of our illustrious Queen and patroness, on the arrival of your Royal Highness in Ireland.

As professors of the peaceful arts, whose cultivation is so essential to the stability and renown of a great nation, it is her right and natural that we should entertain sentiments of more than ordinary regard towards a Prince who, by the admirable qualities of his head and heart, has won the esteem and attachment of all classes of her Majesty's subjects—and what no less estimable as an example of the moral worth so indispensable to the lustre of exalted station, eminent as the friend and continual and untiring promoter of every pursuit and object calculated to advance the dignity, prosper ity, and happiness of her Majesty's empire.

Amongst such objects, it is our pride and gratification to know that, in common with her Majesty, your Royal Highness entertains, and what no less importance, the protection and advancement of the Fine Arts; and that, with our beloved Queen, by the successful study of those humanising sources of pleasure, you have tested their tranquillising and civilizing effects—and, combined, for the benefit of all classes, an example of mental culture for which the lovers and professors of fine arts must ever be grateful, and hold your Royal Highness's name in reverence and honour.

{ SEAL OF THE ACADEMY. }

Her Majesty was seated on the throne, with Prince Albert on her left. The Queen was attired in a green poplin dress, highly ornamented with gold shamrocks. She wore the ribbon and star of the Order of St. Patrick, and had on her head a brilliant crown of diamonds. Lord Clarendon, Lord Lansdowne, Lord Abercorn, Sir George Grey, &c., stood near the throne.

The list of presentations at the Levee amounted, at the close of the Chamberlain's inspection, to upwards of 1900.

After the addresses had been received, those having the privilege of the entree were admitted; and afterwards those who were to be presented to her Majesty, and who were, during this period, awaiting her Majesty's pleasure in the Picture Gallery.

THE ROYAL STEAM SQUADRON IN KILLINEY BAY

WATERFORD.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.)

WATERFORD, Aug. 7th, 1849.

SIR,—As you may not have had any party connected with your paper in attendance here to report her Majesty's visit, I will trouble you with the following short account of this truly acceptable event.

On Saturday evening, August 4th, her Majesty's tender Fairy suddenly arrived at our quay, and dropped anchor. The gig was instantly lowered, and, so unexpected was her arrival, that the appearance of his Royal Highness Prince Albert on deck, and descending into the boat, seemed a vision. However, within two moments of her coming to anchor, the beautiful and unrivalled quay, together with the shipping which lined it, were crowded with thousands, who—seeming to forget the bygone disturbances and rancorous feelings which have distracted our unhappy city—eagerly thronged to catch one glimpse of the yacht and the Royal Family. The gig immediately pulled off, and moved swiftly up the river. The sun shone beautifully: it was full tide, and everything was to be seen to the greatest advantage. In the gig with the Prince were Lord Fortescue, Sir George Grey, and two gentlemen, unknown here, together with Commander George A. Fraser (Commander of H. M. S. Sparrow, surveying off the coast, and who piloted the Royal Squadron into harbour). Passing under our noble bridge—which, by-the-bye, is considerably longer than London-bridge, and the river fully twenty fathoms deeper—the gig ran about a mile up the line. On passing the shipping, his Royal Highness remarked that the colours of a Russian vessel, now lying in the river, were the first hoisted; these were instantly succeeded by a display of British, French, Genoese, American, and the brilliant flags of an Austrian frigate (the Ida Kiss), now lying here together; with those of many smaller Austrian vessels, and the flag of our old Danish tower on the Mall. The joy bells now burst forth with their merry peal; and on the return of the gig, the Prince being at once recognised, the bridge was crowded by hundreds, and many a fair kerchief waved, and many a bold cheer of genuine loyalty rent the air as he re-passed our bridge. The gallant tars who filled the rigging of our merchant craft answered forth in such style as British sailors men can do; and one tiny little craft reached the Fairy's side, the whole line of quay, for feet wide and half a mile long, was thronged to excess. On reaching the yacht, his Royal Highness was welcomed on board by the two Princes (who accompanied him to the city). Our little river steamer, the Nora Creina, which had proceeded towards Cork, and returned with the squadron, now got under weigh, and the Royal tender ran down the river, accompanying her. On passing her, one well-known respected citizen, Capt. W. S. S. Doyle, headed a cheer, which the immense body of passengers on board the Nora unanimously responded to; and such an outburst of genuine loyalty never before "made the welkin ring" as did the thunder which burst forth, and which was warmly responded to by the young Princes. Both vessels being under way, nothing particular occurred until reaching Belview, about four miles down the river, when, after a short separation, the steamers joined company; and a few minutes after a heavy lighter, or barge, laden, and coming up the river, passed by the Fairy, when two poor, ragged fellows who manned her, in the truest spirit of Irish hospitality, sent their oars adrift, and, with their rude straw hats far above their heads, uttered three most deafening cheers; and, coming alongside, cried out, "Welcome! You're welcome, your honour!" The yacht quickly drifted past; and the Nora, immediately after, gave these gallant fellows a hurra thrice repeated, of which they were worthy. The Prince Consort and the young Princes acknowledging this with a bow, the Prince of Wales most enthusiastically waving his tiny hat.

His Royal Highness was pleased, subsequently, to express to Captain Fraser the pleasure not only afforded to him by the demonstrations of loyalty at our city, but, in a marked manner, the still greater pleasure he felt at the simple, but heartfelt, homage of these poor fellows. He also remarked, that he trusted ere long to rewit the scenes of these incidents, which afforded him so much proof that there still exists even here such a devoted attachment to Royalty.

On reaching Passage, we found at anchor the following steamers of the Royal squadron:—Victoria and Albert, Fairy, Black Eagle, Banshee, Vivid, Lucifer, Stromboli, and Sphinx.

The La Hogue and Arrogant lay off the harbour. On his Royal Highness and the Royal children reaching the Victoria and Albert, her Majesty appeared on deck, dressed in a green shawl and straw bonnet, with white ribbon; she was at once introduced to Lords Carew and Harrington, who were in waiting (by his Royal Highness Prince Albert). Then taking the Princesses by the hands, she approached the gangway, where Prince Albert stood with the two Princes. By this time the Nora had come alongside together with many hundred boats containing the elite of this locality. Three cheers, deafening, thundering cheers—the very outbursts of genuine unfeigned loyalty and joy—rent the air for miles around. Every hat was high in air, and before us stood our beloved Sovereign. So unexpected was the visit, that all seemed bewildered. Her Majesty looked uncommonly well, and bowed to the assembled thousands. The officers' gig of the 85th Regiment now came alongside, and their crack style of pull over was admired and commented on by her Majesty and the Prince. Night setting in, both Passage and Ballyhack (the latter now Queensferry) were brilliantly illuminated, and bonfires blazed from the surrounding hills; the lights of Hook Tower, Duncannon Fort, and the paddle lights of the squadron, illuminated our harbour. The river continued crowded with small craft till after midnight.

Early on Sunday morning the squadron got under weigh, and by half-past eight o'clock they were under the walls of Duncannon Fort, when, as previously on their arrival, the customary salute of twenty-one guns was fired, and the Royal standard hoisted.

The effect of the visit on the most disaffected is wonderful. All is now loyalty; and many a heartfelt wish was sent forth after the beautiful and gallant little flotilla and her Royal and beloved freight.

Trusting that these hastily scribbled lines may find a place in your columns, as they are perhaps the most concise, and yet perfect, account of this happy event yet written,

I am, Sir, as I have long been,

THE LAST ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

A few details of the visit of his Majesty George IV. may not prove unacceptable under present circumstances, when, after a lapse of twenty-eight years, the Royal niece of that Sovereign has followed the example of her predecessor, and gladdened the hearts of her Irish subjects by the sunshine of her presence.

His Majesty George IV. having determined, "by the advice of his Privy Council," to pay a visit to the sister kingdom, embarked on board the Lightning steam packet, commanded by Captain Skinner, R.N., at ten o'clock in the forenoon of Saturday, the 11th of August, 1821. The Lightning reached Howth pier at fourteen minutes before four P.M. The [illegible] to be a common cadge at the mast-head, and it was not, therefore, supposed to be freighted with Royalty. A gentleman on the pier, however, soon descried the unmistakeable person of his Sovereign, "every inch a King," and raised a cry of "There is the King! Huzza!" which was eagerly responded to by a chorus of loyal spectators, whose shouts, to quote the words of our record, literally rent the air. George IV. graciously acknowledged this gratifying demonstration of popular enthusiasm, and a few minutes afterwards his Majesty stood on Irish ground. The pressure of the crowd to the point of the pier now became so precipitate as to obstruct the passage of the King to the carriage in attendance. A lane was, however, soon made through the ranks of the populace, amid reiterated cheers, which his Majesty graciously acknowledged. As soon as he had taken his seat in the carriage, another awkward obstruction arose. It was found extremely difficult to close the door, the officious kindness of many prompting them to press forward to grasp the Royal hand. The King good-humouredly held out both his hands, and a cordial shake was substituted on the occasion for the cold and conventional ceremony prescribed by Court etiquette. The King smiled frequently during this inconvenient "reception," and appeared quite delighted with the exuberant loyalty of his Hibernian subjects. A signal gun on the Hill of Howth speedily indicated the arrival of his Majesty the King of Great Britain and Ireland, the report of which was re-echoed by the small craft cruising in the harbour. Not a single soldier was to be seen, either on the pier or in the road, throughout the entire day; but the firing on the coast was heard higher up the river, and before six o'clock the bells of the churches were jubilantly pealing their welcomes, and union-jacks were seen waving on all the steeples and towers. His Majesty reached the gate of the Phœnix-park, Dublin, at a quarter past six, and the multitude poured in through the private grounds in front of the Viceregal Lodge, without distinction of age, sex, or person. The King, on alighting, was received by his Excellency the then Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (Earl Talbot), and the official staff attached to the Castle. Silence having been momentarily obtained, George IV. addressed the people in the following set speech:—"My lords and gentlemen, and my good yeomanry,—I cannot express to you the gratification I feel at the kind and warm reception which I have met with on this day of my landing among my Irish subjects. I am obliged to you all. I am particularly obliged by your escorting me to my very door. I may not be able to express my feelings as I wish. I have travelled far. I have made a long sea-voyage; besides which, particular circumstances have occurred, known to you all, of which it is better at present not to speak. Upon those subjects I leave it to delicate and generous hearts to appreciate my feelings. This is one of the happiest days of my life. I have long wished to visit you. My heart has always been Irish. From the day it first beat I have loved Ireland! This day has shown me that I am beloved by my Irish subjects. Rank, station, and honours are nothing; but to feel that I live in the hearts of my Irish subjects is to me the most exalted happiness. I must once more thank you for your kindness, and bid you farewell. Go and do by me as I shall do by you—drink my health in a bumper. I shall drink all yours in a bumper of good Irish whiskey." His Majesty then retired for the night.

On Wednesday, Aug. 15, his Majesty held a private levee at the lodge in the Phœnix-park for the purpose of receiving the public authorities. On the 17th he made his triumphal entry into Dublin, between eleven and twelve o'clock, in an open carriage, drawn by eight beautiful horses, and attended by a numerous train of grooms and footmen in magnificent liveries. His Majesty was attired in a full military uniform, and wore the order and riband of St. Patrick. The procession passed through the North Circular-road, Eccles-street, Hardwicke-place, Temple-street, Gardiner's-row, and Cavendish-row, and at half-past two o'clock entered the precincts of the Castle, having occupied two hours and a half in moving from the Lodge to the Castle. The King soon afterwards appeared at the windows above the portico, between the Lord-Lieutenant and Viscount Sidmouth, and was loudly cheered. His Majesty bowed, and repeatedly placed his hand on his heart, as an acknowledgment of this loyal reception.

On Thursday, the 23rd, the Lord Mayor of Dublin gave a grand entertainment to his Majesty in the circular room adjoining the Mansion House. On the 24th, the King visited the Royal Dublin Society; and after inspecting the library and museum, was conducted by the select committee to the lawn facing Merrion-square, where preparations had been made for a splendid fête champêtre. George IV. frequently showed himself in the streets of Dublin, where he made friends with the populace, shook rough fellows by the hand and called them "Jack;" and rendered himself universally popular.

On Wednesday, the 5th of September, 1821, the King embarked at the harbour of Dunleary (now Kingstown), near Dublin. When on the point of embarking, hundreds of persons pressed forward to shake his Majesty by the hand; several clung to the stern of the barge, and afterwards swam back to the shore. The Royal squadron was compelled to put back by contrary winds. It sailed on the following Saturday, and arrived in Milford Haven on Sunday, the 9th of September, where it was again detained by the same cause until Monday night. An attempt to beat up Channel to Portsmouth was [illegible] which, on reaching, when the squadron was within thirty miles of Land's End, it was obliged to put back to Milford Haven, where it arrived on Wednesday afternoon, at four o'clock. At five o'clock next morning the King landed, amid the cheers of thousands of spectators, and soon afterwards drove off in his private carriage for the metropolis, attended by Earl Graves. His Majesty did not remain long in London, for on the 25th of September he embarked at Ramsgate for Calais, whence he proceeded, viâ the Netherlands, to pay a visit to his Hanoverian dominions.

IMPORTATIONS FROM IRELAND.—The collectors and comptrollers, and other principal officers of the Customs' department at the several ports a places throughout the United Kingdom have received directions from the Commissioners to prepare and transmit to the Inspector-General of Imports and Exports the following account with all practicable despatch; viz. an account of the imports into their respective ports of each sort of corn, meal, and flour, from Ireland, in each month for the years 1846, 1847, and 1848, respectively, and of the first half of the present year; the returns to correspond with the quarterly returns of imports.

A REWARD WELL BESTOWED.—The Paris journals related, a few days back, that a medical student, in paying a visit during the cholera to a poor family who had no flannel to make the necessary frictions, took off his flannel waistcoat, and gave it for the purpose. No one could at first say who the medical pupil was, and it was only after long investigations that his name became known, by his comrades mentioning it to the Mayor, who informed the Minister of Public Instruction that M. Thieux was the person. A letter arrived from the Minister, inviting the young man to dinner for the following Wednesday. On the day stated the Minister presented him to Mdme. de Falloux, who placed him near her at table, and paid him the utmost attention. Towards the end of the evening, M. de Falloux, taking him apart, announced to him that he had to present him, in the name of the University, with medical works to the value of 1000f.; and he added, "Do me the favour to accept, as a mark of my personal esteem, these two volumes; they contain a letter for you (it granted the young man a pension of 400f. for three years), and do not forget that we receive every Wednesday." M. Thieux withdrew, penetrated with gratitude.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRES.—On Wednesday morning, shortly after four o'clock, a very alarming fire broke out in the premises belonging to Mr. William Burls, patent-leather Japanner, &c., carrying on business at No. 2, Devonshire-street, Mile-end New Town. The flames originated in the boiling factory, from one of the coppers of varnish boiling over. The building in which the disaster occurred was burned out before the flames could be mastered.—Another fire broke out in the premises belonging to Messrs. J. C. and J. Hill, patent cork manufacturers, situate in Thomas-street, St. George-in-the-East. The firemen were unable to get the fire out until the premises and their contents were nearly destroyed.

CHLOROFORM A HELP TO THEFT.—On Sunday, July 29, while Mr. Swinnock and family, of Ashford, Kent, were at church, some villains entered his house, and violently pressed a handkerchief upon the mouth of an invalid lady, Miss Gotts, which being strongly impregnated with chloroform, soon rendered her insensible. Being alone in the house, they then took from her person a watch, some valuable rings, and her purse. The fright and ruffianly treatment, on a constitution already impaired by illness, have placed her life in imminent danger.

THE ROYAL LANDING PAVILION OPPOSITE THE RAILWAY TERMINUS

INTERIOR OF THE ROYAL RAILWAY CARRIAGE.

ARCH AT TURNER'S HAMMERSMITH ROAD, DUBLIN

THE ROYAL VISIT TO BELFAST.

On and near the spot where her Majesty will first set foot on the soil of Ulster, the preparations for giving her such a welcome as is due to a Sovereign so universally beloved, are highly creditable to the local authorities. A reception pavilion, triumphal arch, and various galleries for spectators have been erected.

The decorations of the Royal arch are conceived in the purest taste and their execution is equal to the design. The structure, which is o the Doric order, is peculiarly chaste. The arch itself is of the Roman shape, and corresponds with those of the pavilion. It is supported by massive buttresses, somewhat broader at the base than at the springing of the curve. On the faces of these are four panels, intended to be embellished, in gilt characters, with the ciphers of her Majesty and her Royal consort. Up to the cornice the fabric will have a close resemblance to a beautiful veined Sicilian marble, of a pea-green shade. The frieze and entablature are painted to imitate the purest architectural marble. The whole will be surmounted by appropriate flags. The Royal standard, St. George's cross, and union jack will be unfurled from a staff erected on the parapet facing towards the river; on the opposite side will float a banner bearing the Belfast arms, and also some other flags. The arch somewhat resembles the centre of Temple-bar, London It is a fitting substitute for the gates of a town which possesses none Here the ceremony of presenting her Majesty with the civic keys will take place.

The pavilion is in keeping with the other erection in exterior appearance; the interior, however, is fitted up in a style of suitable magnificence. Here her Majesty will be met by the civic bodies and other privileged persons, if she do not prefer receiving them on board the Royal tender or yacht. It is not yet known whether the various addresses (which will not be read) will be presented on board the yacht in the pavilion, or in the hall of the Queen's College. On the floor o the pavilion, and on the space between it and the river side, carpeting will be laid down. The entire interval between the pavilion and the arch, about 300 yards, will also be carpeted.

In front of the Harbour-office accommodation has been secured for the friends of the Commissioners, on a platform there. Two great galleries at Victoria-street are completely covered with white, blue ,unk, and yellow cotton cloth, arranged in alternate perpendicular stripes at the back. If fully occupied, the sum realised for seats, at 5s each, will be £1143 15s.

The Harbour Commissioners have made suitable arrangements within the limits of their peculiar domain. The Queen's Island, where fireworks, bonfires, batteries, &c. will be called into requisition, will be thrown open to the public at a very moderate charge, thus affording an opportunity of witnessing the Royal progress up the bay. One-half of the artillery from Charlemont will be stationed on the island; the rest, with their guns, on Queen's-quay, opposite to the landing-place.

The Linen-hall has been put in order for the Royal reception; the specimens of flax manufactures to be exhibited are likely to be very numerous and beautiful. Of damasks especially, several of the most magnificent productions of the Belfast loom are in preparation. Mr Coulson, of Lisburn, the oldest manufacturer in the kingdom, exhibited at Dublin a beautiful piece of damask to her Majesty and her Roya consort.

AUSTRALIAN WHEAT.—The vesse Llewellyn, arrived in the London Docks from Port Adelaide, has brought 3564 bags of wheat as a portion of her cargo; and the vessel Jane, also arrived in the docks from Port Adelaide, has brought 4248 bags of wheat as a portion of her cargo, the produce of tha important colony.

STATE OF IRELAND.

(To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS )

SIR,—Having recently travelled in Ireland for the purpose of examining the prospects and condition of the Sister Isle, I shall feel obliged to you to insert my views thereon, in the hope they may lead to some measures to alleviate and ultimately cure the dreadful evils in that country

The fact is undeniable, and is admitted by all parties, that the condition of Ireland has undergone, during the last three years, a considerable retrogradation; and every week adds to her misery. Her poverty can hardly be conceived by your English readers. In the whole district of the south and west of Ireland, not a corn-stack is to be seen: the people are worse fed and lodged than pigs are in England. I have myself seen the poor families' Sunday dinner consist of boiled nettles only. perhaps this may sometimes have an addition of one pennyworth of Indian meal; bread is never seen by these poor people. The consequence will be, the people will grow weaker and weaker both in strength of body and mind, which is now almost prostrate.

The country has the appearance which it might be supposed it would have, if the destroying angel had passed over it, blighting the food, the men, and destroying the dwellings of the people: thousands of houses are seen unroofed; the late inhabitants being either dead or having emigrated, or, what is more likely, taken shelter in the union workhouse: yet your readers will be surprised to hear, that in the face of all this is the most fertile land in the United Kingdom thrown out of cultivation and deserted.

The condition of these people is a disgrace to any civilised country, and I conceive England has a right to step forward and rescue the sufferers, who are fast descending into the lowest depths of misery and destitution. By the recent establishment of the Poor-law, relief was extended to the destitute; but, instead of this law really benefitting the poor, it is, in reality, desolating the land. Any poor-law, if enacted among a poverty-stricken people, who have no surplus food for themselves, only aggravates the evil. Seizures take place every day for poor-rates. The poor farmer, by this process, is unable to live himself; his land is thrown up, and he, too, is plunged into the vortex of poverty —the poor-house. It is my opinion this Poor-law must be abolished at all hazards, and a remedy found elsewhere. I would propose that, however unsatisfactory to some parties, England should step in with some new remedial measure. We are naturally responsible in some degree, having united Ireland to England.

The poor people of Ireland at present receiving relief of course could not be allowed to starve on the road-side—they must be maintained; but no other able-bodied men should be admitted to receive relief than those at present receiving it. I would propose that commissioners be appointed, and they be empowered to pay the expenses of all persons wishing to emigrate, as many would be glad to do if they could raise so small a sum as £3. The superintendence of the poor-houses should be taken out of the hands of the present managers, many of whom are utterly incapable of governing these unions.

It may be asked, Where are the funds to come from to maintain the poor people who may still continue a burden in the unions? That fund, during the time it was really required, I propose should be raised by a Land-tax of 2s. per acre, and a fixed duty on corn of 3s. per quarter, which would be more than sufficient. This tax would, I think, be cheerfully paid by all, to rescue so many thousands from starvation, and save Ireland, with her millions of inhabitants, from total ruin and destruction. If it was proclaimed that a Land-tax of 2s. per acre could not be exceeded in Ireland, English capitalists would at once step in and employ the people in cultivating the land. In throwing out these hints, I earnestly call the attention of Parliament to the present Poor-law, which they will find is working ruin among all classes.

I shall not enter into the many social grievances of the country; they are many, and the people must remedy these things themselves. The great selfishness of landlords—the pride, the distinction of classes—the want of disposition to work—the want of thrift—the extravagance of some of the higher classes (there is scarcely any middle class)—all these social evils must be operated upon by public opinion and a long course of teaching.

In conclusion, allow me to remind your English readers, that it is not only their duty, but their interest, to have Ireland a happy and prosperous nation. We find it in private life to be better to be allied to rich than to poor relations; and, as a nation, England should see "that her sister, Ireland, be made rich, prosperous, and happy. Ireland has all the capabilities of a great nation. She has the most fertile land in the world; she has a fine people, a healthy climate, and possesses within herself capabilities of producing everything that can tend to man's well-being on earth. I hope earnestly that not many month's will elapse before the whole subject is inquired into, as a fearful day of reckoning is at hand unless some effectual measure is taken.

The man who could save Ireland is SIR ROBERT PEEL. I bel3eve he will be the man. Let us urge upon him not to delay in giving out his real opinions on the social and political state of Ireland.

Yours, obediently,

London, July 31. AN ENGLISH TOUELST.

THE ISLAY ESTATES.—The princely estates of Campbell of Islay are this week to be exposed for sale. The Islay Tontine Life Association proposes to purchase the splendid properties, now returning £20,000 a year—a rental which is said to be totally disproportionate to the real value of the estate, which comprises 140,000 acres of good soil—by a capital of 12,000 £50 shares, each shareholder to nominate a life; the whole body of nominees to be assured on it of the rental, so as to return every subscriber's investment as his nominee lives; to divide the accumulated balance of rental among the surviving shareholders; to engraft on the assurance of the 12,000 nominees, for the benefit of the shareholders, a general life assurance business, having also the guarantee of the landed property, the last surviving shareholder to inherit the estates. The property is said to be very improvable, and the basis of the proposed Tontine and Life Office is affirmed to be sound and extensive enough to insure a large and legitimate success.

DISCOVERY OF OLDEN COINS.—A discovery of coins of much interest to antiquarians took place in Sandon churchyard, Essex, on Wednesday last. While the sexton was digging a grave, and when he had dug between five and six feet below the surface, his spade upon the long-deposited treasure, by which, from some pieces of broken pottery being turned up from the same grave, it is presumed had originally been deposited with an urn, and probably in a box, as they lay under a piece of red sandstone, was found in that district; and when this was broken with a crow-bar, the coins fell from the remnants, apparently of a wooden box or coffin. The coins are forty-six in number, all silver, and principally of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, of the dates of 1557, 1573, 15 75, and 1576; a groat of the reign of Mary, of the date of 1554; a small groat of Ed, and two very small silver coins, with a portcullis on one side, but not the head of any Sovereign, date, or letter of any kind.—

AN ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF TRUSTEES.—An Act was passed in the late session (12 and 13 Victoria, c. 74) for granting further relief to trustees. By the Act 10 and 11 Vic., c. 96, trustees were authorised to pay money in to the Court of Chancery in discharge of their trusts; and by the present statute it is enacted that, if, upon any petition presented to the Lord Chancellor or the Master of the Rolls, in the matter of the said Act, it shall appear that any monies, annuities, stocks, or securities, are vested in any persons as trustees, executors, or administrators, or otherwise upon trust, and that the major part of such persons are desirous of transferring, paying, or delivering the same to the Accountant-General, but that, for any reason, the concurrence of the other or others of them cannot be had, it shall be lawful to such Judge to order and direct such transfer, payment, or delivery to be made by the major part of such persons without the concurrence of the other or others of them. This Act supplies a manifest defect in the other, and enables the majority of trustees to act in their own relief without the concurrence of all the trustees.

THE IRISH POOR-LAWS.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SIR,—The public is much indebted to you for the graphic descriptions you have lately given of the beautiful scenery of Ireland and the destitute condition of her people. There is no country in Europe, nor, perhaps, there never was in the world, such a large mass of human beings, so completely deprived, and yet live on, or all that is necessary to a decent subsistence. Such, too, has unfortunately been their condition ever since I began to take an interest in public affairs, now not a short period, and every measure that has been adopted by the Legislature within that time has been followed by still further degradation of the people. Nobody can accuse our law-makers of designedly bringing this about. On the contrary, they have been actuated by the best motives, they have meant to serve the Irish; but, because they have been ignorant of the true condition of the people, or ignorant of the means to help them, the result has been a continued deterioration in their condition.

I am old enough to remember the promises of improvement which recommended Catholic Emancipation to the Parliament and people of England in 1829. I believe that it was an essential as well as a just measure; that, like the Free-trade measure of 1846, which saved England from sharing in the continental convulsions of 1848, it prevented a great calamity. But for that we should have had a rebellion in Ireland in 1830. Nevertheless, it carried no relief nor improvement to the mass of the Irish. From that time forth they were engaged in a continual series of political agitations, wasting their time and their money, their thoughts and their feelings, under the guidance of interested agitators, on impracticable objects, till the final and fitting close of such proceedings took place, in the childish and absurd rebellion of last year. I will remember, too, the magnificent promises of improvement which were made when the first Poor-law for Ireland was discussed in 1837, and passed in 1838. It was expressly intended "to relieve distress and lessen destitution." Zealously promoted by that amiable nobleman, the present Earl of Carlisle, then Lord Morpeth, and Secretary for Ireland, it was twice recommended in speeches from the Throne, was supported against much opposition, by the Whig Cabinet, and enacted for the very purpose of relieving the unhappy Irish. Your testimony, sir, in common with the testimony of other tourists, of numerous societies, of many public subscriptions, and of not a few subsidiary laws of the same genus, proves that the condition of the Irish in 1849 is more lamentable than it was in 18—.

I am aware, sir, that much of this terrible distress is the consequence of the potato rot; but it is plain that the Irish would have been taught self-reliance at an earlier period—would have been compelled to take more care of themselves, and would not have been so numerous in relation to the land and the food, if it had not been no Poor-law passed in 1838. That was a provision for the indigent; it at once promised support to the destitute in the name of the State, on which the Irish have been taught to depend, and it aggravated the calamities of 1846–47. Famines are not uncommon; even the Irish have frequently before suffered from visitations. A couple of ten years passed without as serious a loss of produce, in point of value, occurring in England as occurred in Ireland in 1846–47; but in Ireland, where the people were before in a wretched condition, dependent exclusively on the land and on potatoes, such a famine, ten years after the Poor-law had been in existence, brought misery on the people. The Irish have never been allowed nor accustomed to rely on themselves; and the Poor-law, by Lolding out relief, tended to annihilate all sense of duty as to providing against contingencies. Hence the increase of pauperism.

A regular and settled provision by the State for paupers has, for a long period, been objected to on principle. It has been said that, in proportion as the national funds are allocated to particular classes, men of that class will always be found in abundance. Any number of soldiers, sailors, or railway labourers, can be got at any time, or in a very short time, if provided to sustain them. The principle is precise, the same with paupers: they will always be in proportion to the means provided for their subsistence; and inasmuch as no workhouse or other test (as long as food is supplied) can equal the horrors of starvation, no such test can ever be effectual in keeping them down. Perhaps your readers generally are not aware that the experience in compulsory provision for the poor was established in Scotland in 1845, the number of poor there, and the amount of the rates, have both increased astonishingly. The rate is already within one-third as high as the rate in England; and the sum levied has increased from £144,503 in 1846 to £224,364 in 1848. In the whole of ten years passed without as serious a loss of produce, in point of value, occurring in England as occurred in Ireland in 1846–47; but in Ireland, where the people were before in a wretched condition, dependent exclusively on the land and on potatoes, such a famine, ten years after the Poor-law had been in existence, brought misery on the people. THE HUNGARIAN WAR.

THE accounts that have been permitted to reach Western Europe of the progress of the War of Independence in Hungary have been few, irregular, and little to be depended upon. But, if the bulletins of the Hungarians have been in some degree exaggerations, the details forwarded to Vienna in the interest of the Austrians have been little better, in most cases, than baseless fabrications. But time, that clears up most mysteries, has been busy during the last few weeks n sweeping away the mystifications that have been heaped around the progress of events in Hungary; and it now begins to be acknowledged, even by the most zealous organs of the Austrian Court, that the Hungarian Generals, backed by the enthusiasm of the Hungarian people, have been more than a match for the forces and Generals of the Emperor, though supported by immense aid from Russia, in men, money, and commanders. In this great struggle—which now appears immeasurably the most important in its proximate and remote consequences upon the peace and prosperity of Europe of all the events that have signalized this age of revolutions—the advantage is and has been almost wholly on the side of Hungary. There seems reason to believe that it will continue to be so; and that, as heretofore, the little defeats of the Magyars will only be remembered as the precursors of great victories; and that, ultimately, their cause will triumph over all the opposition that Russia and Austria can bring to bear against it. Their leading men have never once despaired of it. Difficulties seem but to have increased their energies. Like Napoleon, they have disbelieved in the existence of the impossible; and, in the midst of sufficient reasons for doubt, discouragement, and hesitation, the hopes of the people have been as buoyant, and their determination to succeed as resolute, as those of the able and indefatigable men to whom the conduct of the struggle has been entrusted. Supported by an enthusiasm like this, even inferior Generals might work wonders. No one, however, will venture to place such men as Bem, Dembinski, and Görgy in any other than the highest rank of soldiers and strategists; and few, after the triumphs they have achieved, will feel inclined to doubt their capacity to achieve still greater.

It is a mistake to suppose, as many otherwise well-informed people do, that this Hungarian struggle arose out of, or is in any way connected with, the French Revolution of February, 1848. Its roots lie far deeper. Its ramifications in Time and in History are far more extensive, remote, and important. It is no imitation, or temporary madness of the people. Had Louis Philippe consolidated his throne, and left a peaceful and assured inheritance to the Count de Paris and his great-grandchildren, the grievances of the Hungarians would have found vent at one time or another, and produced some such collision between the Magyars and the House of Hapsburg-Lorraine, as that which we now behold and lament. It is an old and often-renewed wrong that has to be righted; a wrong borne with dignity, though not without remonstrance, until endurance became impossible. Most certainly, the whole blame of the bloodshed that has taken place must lie upon the heads of the foolish or wicked statesmen who surrounded the persons of the last Emperor and his predecessor. It was their want of capacity to see what was right, or their want of honesty to do it, which has entailed upon the present Sovereign of Austria difficulties which no prudence or fortune can successfully surmount. The time has gone by. The Hungarians, who might at one period have been easily appeased, and transformed from discontented and aggrieved, into loyal and devoted subjects of the Austrian Crown, have been alienated for ever, and no concession can satisfy them. Six months ago, a compromise was possible; but the atrocities that have since been perpetrated, and the introduction of Russia into the quarrel, have made a breach that can never again be closed. To conquer the Hungarians, which seems the dearest wish of the Emperor and his advisers, will but open the way for new perils, of a kind far greater than ever befel Austria; while to be conquered by them, will be nothing less than the annihilation of the Empire. It is a lamentable spectacle, that so illustrious a state, endeared to our recollection as the inheritor of the Roman Empire, and the representative of the Cæsars, and which held so splendid a rank in Europe, should be placed in a predicament so fearful. It is not the interest of Europe that Austria should fall—but her doom seems to be written in characters that the whole world may read. Where can she look for security? The friendship of her Russian ally will be fatal to her, should she conquer; while the success of her Magyar children will go far to blot her out of the rank of nations. And all this evil might have been avoided, had Austria possessed one honest and competent statesman at any time since the peace of Waterloo.

Great Britain and France, though interested as free nations in the peace and freedom of all other nations, and possessing sympathies that must be excited in favour of so gallant a people as the Magyars, have no reason for watching the issue with such intense anxiety as Germany, Russia, and Turkey. To each of these states or nations the question of Hungarian liberty is a vital one. To Germany the independence of Hungary will become the signal for a new attempt to establish German unity, and to absorb Austria. To Russia the independence of Hungary will be still more important. The Poles only await that opportunity to assert their freedom and their nationality. Hungary will be their natural and their best ally; and the Russian Emperor will find work enough on his hands to meet two such antagonists, even should the other Sclavonian nations and tribes that now yield allegiance to Austria not make common cause against him. To Turkey the contest is the most important event that has occurred in her history since the days of the Empress Catherine. Her security and the aggrandisement of Russia are incompatible. Her strength lies in Russian weakness; and her best victories are the defeats and humiliations of the Czar. Russia is her ancient, her politic, her insatiable foe; and has patiently awaited for three generations the opportunity of securely establishing her seat of empire among the minarets of Constantinople, and of driving the Mussulmans from Europe. Turkey has been crippled and weakened by many untoward occurrences—and her best friends in theory have not always proved themselves so in practice. Her obvious interest is the independence of Hungary and Poland. In their discontent she has found her strongest barriers against the encroachments of her foe; and in their freedom those barriers will be strengthened. For all those reasons, we are inclined to believe that the other revolutions of Europe are far less important in every point of view than the revolution of Hungary. Its success or failure is equally pregnant with great results. In the meantime, this country can but look on with solicitude and sympathy.

HUNGARIAN OUTPOSTS.

In the picturesque group beneath, our Artist has depicted a group of Hungarian Hussars and armed peasants, with troops marching in the distance. The peasants wear the bunda cloak, the characteristic of their costume.

A recent letter from the seat of war in Hungary describes, in detail, the formidable auxiliaries the Magyar forces have found in the wild population scattered over the vast steppes and forests of the interior, parties of which the hussaresdo or lancers of the troops of whole divisions of the plains, the swineherds, and fishermen. The first-named of these are especially dreaded by Austrian troops, on account of the extraordinary weapon they carry, and use with deadly skill. It is simply the whip with which they solicit and catch any horse of the herd they wish to tame and dispose of. The application of it in war is quite a novelty. It has a handle not more than two feet in length, while the thong measures from fifteen to twenty. A leaden ball is fixed to the end of it, with smaller ones at different distances from it, like shot on a fishing line; when thrown, it acts like a lasso, curling round man or horse, or it strikes either to the earth with a crushing blow. The horsebirds (or chykosi) are so skilful in the use of this weapon, that at full gallop they will strike an enemy with unerring certainty on any part of the body they please. In skirmishes, any isolated foot soldier, if he flies his musket and misses, is lost before he can attempt to reload—the wild horseman rushes past, and with the sweep of his ball-loaded thong snatches him lifeless on the earth by a blow on the head. There are some thousands of these men in the Hungarian armies, and they are generally mixed with the light Hussars and sent ahead of the heavy Austrian cavalry. They often strike the officers from their horses with incredible dexterity, and the terror this weapon inflicts are described as frightful. Before it was known that these horsebirds were serving in the Hungarian ranks, a great number of carabiniers were brought into Pesth, wounded in a manner the military surgeons could not explain. The injury was neither a cut nor a puncture, nor a gun-shot wound, and the soldiers were for a long time ashamed to own that it was caused by so ignoble a weapon as a whip. Fortunately, it can only be used where the horseman has ample space; in anything like "close order," it would be as dangerous to friends as to foes. On of these men was lately taken prisoner at Wieselburg; and, probably to obtain an exact knowledge of the power of his arm, he was ordered to display his skill in the camp. A stuffed figure was set up, the Austrians reserving bridges to cut the parties we was to strike while in full career. Twice he did as directed; but the third time he placed a startling variation; swinging his whip in a wide circle, he dashed his horse at a point of the stuffed soldier nearest the place of retreat, broke through it, and was far on his way to the open fields in an instant, untouched by the volley of balls sent after him. The swineherds (or kanasi) are generally Servians; their weapon is a short axe, with a rather long handle, called fokosh, and they throw it with such dexterity that at eighty or a hundred paces they rare y miss a man, and the blow is almost always fatal, as the Austrian army surgeons can testify. The fishermen are armed with a peculiar description of boat-hook, in a manner, on a sort of pike, in a style which the Austrians at first ridiculed exceedingly; but, though rude, they were effective, and put together in a very short time, and have proved of the greatest use in the Hanarian operations. SYMPATHY WITH THE HUNGARIANS.

MEETING AT EDINBURGH.

A public meeting of the citizens of Edinburgh was held in the Music-hall, on Monday, for the purpose of "expressing sympathy with the Hungarian nation in their glorious struggle for constitutional freedom." On the platform were—Mr Cowan, M.P., the Lord Provost, Count Krasinski; the Rev. Drs. Alexander, Brown, and Hetherington: Sir Makgil Crighton, of Rankeillour; Bailie Stott, &c.

The Lord Provost was called upon to preside

The Lord Provost, on taking the chair, said they were met that day in the sacred cause of liberty; and he was delighted to see so large a meeting of his fellow-citizens assembled at a time when, as a friend near him had remarked, Edinburgh might be said to be out of town. At one time he entertained some doubts about the propriety of a meeting of this kind, lest it might have been found to d. evil rather than good; but, after the speech of Lord Palmerston in the House of Commons (applause), and the effect which that speech had already produced, all doubts had been removed from his mind, especially after hearing, as they must all do, that this was not the first time that Britain had interfered in the cause of Hungary, he thought they would be far blamed their predecessors were they not on this occasion to take some step for the benefit of that country, and to express towards them their cordial sympathy and goodwill. (Cheers.)

Letters of apology for inability to attend were announced from Lord Dudley Stuart, Dr. Candlish, the Provost of Leith, &c.

Mr. Cowan, M.P., proposed the first reso ution, viz.—

"That this meeting hearty sympathises with the Hungarian nation in the noble and determined efforts which they are making to maintain their constitutional independence, and to secure the permanent enjoyment of civil and religious liberty; which efforts, the meeting ardently hopes, may soon, by the blessing of God, be crowned with a glorious success."

The Rev. Dr Alexander, in seconding the resolution, observed that they were met to offer their sympathy to a free people struggling for th t which was the dearest possession both of nations and individuals, and, as far as they had the power, to aid them in bringing their struggle to a glorious and successful conclusion. (Renewed applause.) It was of great importance that they should have definitely before them the cause as it exactly stood which had brought them tog ther. They had on the one hand the case of constitutional liberty, and two great powers attempting to settle a quarrel between them by an appeal to arms, not of taking part with any body that had broken loose from former restraint, and was seeking to set apart from the legitimate authority; but they were met to look at the case of a free people—of a people who had always, in historical memory, been a free people—who were seeking nothing but what they had enjoyed in succession for centuries, and from whom a great power was seeking to wrest their ancient independence, and for this purpose had called in the aid of another, perhaps a greater, certainly a more despotic power, for other than their own right. Compacts under foot the treaties which many centuries had sanctioned, and might bring a dar bondage and slavery a people that had always called themselves free. From the time that the Crown of St. Stephen passed into the possession of the house of Hapsburg, at every demise of the crown, and every successive coronation, the independence and freedom of Hungary had always been secured in the most solemn and impressive manner. It was, therefore, in the face of everything that went to establish the freedom of the people, that Austria and Russia were now waging war on the p ains of Hungary; and they had, therefore, before them, in each successive and simple, what he could conceive of no man hesitating to give an expression of his sympathy towards the struggling party, resisting that aggression on his rights. If it was asked what right had they to interfere at all in the matter, he would say at once, it was the right of no right before. Russia had given them an unquestionable right. (Loud cheers.) If the representative of unmitigated despotism might interfere to fasten pinions on freedom, the representative of the liberty of the world might interfere to unloose and set it free. (Renewed applause.) And he (Dr. Alexander) appealed here, no to conventional arrangements, nor to politics, interests—he would not raise on what la was sometimes outlined to support what he considered was a sort of piratical violence of power.

He would go to higher and more impressive considerations. He would appeal to that law which was above all laws that law of which the great Roman orator and philosopher had said that "neither the vote of the Senate nor of the whole of the people, can set he absolved from its obligation"—that law which found a response in the bosom of every intelligent man the great law of moral rectitude —(hear, hear) and, appealing to that law, and to the influence of opinion, he trusted to be free, and that England was entitled to send her voice across the waters, and say to the despots, "She shall be free." (Loud cheers.)

The resolution having been agreed to,

The Rev. Dr Brown proposed the following resolution:—

"That this meeting deeply deplores the war waged by the Austrian authorities, and that with such barbarous cruelty, against the independence and liberty of Hungary, and deprecates the unnatural combination which has arisen between the house of Austria with the settlement of a question between the house of Hapsburg and the Hungarian nation, so unnatural and oppressive in itself, hostile to the rights of an independent people, perilous to the peace of Europe, and threatening even to endanger all nearly its civilisation and freedom."

"That, it is the opinion of the meeting, the Government of Great Britain should embrace every opportunity of pressing upon that of Austria the duty of abandoning the attempt which, under the influence of Russia, they are making on the independence of Hungary, and to overthrow that constitutional whic t the sovereigns of Austria have uniformly acknowledged and sworn to maintain, and of remonstrating with the Emperor of Russia, on his interference by force of arms in the internal affairs of another country."

"That a memorial be presented, in the name of this meeting, to her Majesty's Government, through the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, praying and urging them without delay to use their influence with Austria and Russia for putting a stop to the warfare and armed interference so much deprecated by this meeting; and, further, to employ their influence in the restoration of peace on a basis which shall secure, in a manner satisfactory to the people of Hungary, their religious and civ. liberties and rights."

It was also agreed to prepare a suitable address to the Hungarian nation, to be transmitted to Kossuth; and, after a vote of thanks to the Lord Provost, the meeting separated.

A meeting of the Westminster Reform Association was convened on Monday night, at their room at the York Hotel, Upper Washington street, Strand, for the purpose of considering in what manner sympathy or aid could be given to the Hungarians in their struggle against Austria and Russia. The following resolution was agreed to:—"That it is the opinion of this society that the emperor of Austria, as King of Hungary, has violated his compact with the Hungarian nation, and, in defiance of the laws, and the principles of decency and deep sympathy with that people, and in violation of the principles of humanity and horror at the cruelties committed by the Austrian troops on the Italian people, in Sicily, and the states adjacent thereto, has declared war against them, and sworn that interesting country, destroying its independence and liberties in cahots and slavery a brave people engaged in the holy cause of maintaining their civil and religious liberties." It was resolved to form a public meeting on the subject, and a committee was commenced with a view to that object.

A meeting of the parish of Kensington was held for the same purpose at the Prince's Head Tavern, Holborn, also on Monday evening. Among those present were Lord Dudley Stuart, M.P., Mr. J. M'Gahan, M.P., &c. A resolution was agreed to, expressive of the greatest admiration, respect, and sympathy at the noble determination of the Hungarian nation to maintain the just rights and the constitutional independence they had inherited from their fathers, against the tyrannical encroachments of Austrian despotism. It was also resolved,

"2d. That the meeting viewed with detestation and horror the barbarous manner in which the Austrian and Russian generals are prosecuting the war against the brave Hungarians, and considered the brutal and blood-thirsty proclamation of the first an indignant violation of all civilised nations."

3rd "That the meeting considers the military interference of Russia in the affairs of Hungary equally indefensible, and a gross violation of the law of nations, the independence of Hungary, and perilous to the peace, the freedom, and general welfare of Europe." Other resolutions were adopted, including one expressive of satisfaction and admiration at the protest of the Ottoman Porte, and its refusal to allow the Russian troops to pass through the Turkish territory. It was understood that this was in compliment to some members of the Turkish embassy, who were present

A meeting of a similar character was held on Friday week at Cardiff, which closed with subscriptions for the Magyar cause.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The financial statement made by the Minister, M. Passy, at the close of last week, in the Assembly, presents the National Exchequer in a very gloomy aspect. The deficit in the revenue, as compared with the public expenditure during the Monarchy, has been enormous. The budget of the Republic for 1848 and the public M. Passy sta ed that the Revolution of February had augmented the expend. bare of 1848 by 250,000,000f., and occasioned a diminution in the produce of the indirect taxes of 150,000,000f. The proceeds of the extraordinary tax of 45 centimes had not sufficed to cover the difference. The final deficit for 1849 was estimated at 91,000,000f. but he did not hesitate to extend it to 184,000,000f. The whole deficit on the list of January, 1850, would exceed 350,000,000f. The expenditure for 1850 was fixed at 1,091,000,000f., and the receipts being estimated at 1,270,000,000f., the deficit would amount to 320,000,000f To cover that difference the Minister asked to be authorised to negotiate a loan of 200,000,000f.; to sell forests to the amount of 50,000,000f.; to alienate the canals; and, in order to provide the means necessary for the construction of public works, to issue Treasury obligations, bearing interest to the amount required. The only hope for the restoration of the finances of the country was to be derived from the probability of the reduction of the enormous standing army which France at present maintains, and of the increased productiveness of the indirect taxes; both of which, however, could not be expected for some years.

The Councils-General have been summoned, by a decree of the President of the Republic, to open their session on the 27th inst., and to close it on the 10th of September, the period of their session, when a general election for the Assembly takes place. The deliberations of these provincial Parliaments are limited to what concerns the interests of the respective departments. The powers of Louis Napoleon's Presidency is mooted very generally throughout the departments.

Monday and Tuesday were occupied in the Legislative Assembly by a debate got up by the Opposition on the intervention at Rome. The Ministers De Tocqueville and De Falloux defended the conduct of the Cabinet, contending that their only objects were, in the first place, to maintain the just influence which it ought to exercise in the affairs of Rome; next, to restore the Pope to his former place; to prevent the effects of a violent reaction; and, lastly, to ensure the just reforms which were requisite for the Roman people: a course of policy from which they had not swerved, and would not.

On a div. ion, the Government had a majority of 428 to 176. There was a great deal of excitement created towards the termination of the debate, in consequence of M. de Falloux having, it was said, let upon him some personal reflections which he did not deserve. M. Fallouxreplied in a quiet but reproachful tone, which increased M. Favre's anger to absolute fury.

General Oudinot has been ordered home: the peaceful mission for which is, that the mission he was sent to perform having been accomplished, all further proceeding must be the work of diplomacy. The belief, however, is, that Gen. Oudinot has come to the end of his career as a servant of the Republic, for one of the ecclesiastical tribunals, which it had has given great offence to the Roman people.

A bill has been presented to the Legislative Assem bly by the Minister of the Interior to rel eve Paris from the state of siege. The Minister demands the adoption of the bill previous to the prorogation. He desires that the Government will, by the passage of the bill, be invested with sufficient powers to protect Paris against any criminal attack.

M. Dufaure, the Minister of the Interior, has granted permission to the members of the Peace Society to hold a congress in Paris in the course of the present month

La Presse first of the Republic has granted a full pardon to all the political convicts sentenced to the western departments to whom the decree during the year 1832. It is a remarkable fact, that the Duke de Bordeaux has always received such application made to him, no matter from what quarter, for any commutation of the sentence passed on those men. It is said that they are, for the most part, what is termed "peasants," who, allegiance to the Legitimist cause, refused to enter the military under the Orleans dynasty, and who fled from the pursuit of justice to the woods, where they committed acts of depredation on the landowners.

A letter from Perigueux states, that the breeding of silkworms has been introduced into the department of the Dordogne this year, and that it has been attended with complete success

HOLLAND.

From the Hague, under date the 6th inst., we learn what are the provisions of the spring Bill presented to the States-General by the Government of the Netherlands-General. The States of each province are composed of as many members as there are 5000 souls in each electoral district. Nether anders having resided one year on the commune in which they wish to vote, and having paid taxes to the amount of 20 florins per annum, are entitled to vote. The States deputies are to consist of four or five members, elected for six years. They receive a stipend of 2500 or 3000 florins per annum, one-third of which is paid in advance. The provincial governor is to be president, with the right of giving the casting vote.

SWITZERLAND

The Swiss Directory, on learning that the French Government was about to express from France a number of Poland and German refugees who had taken part in the late political movements, has demanded of the Federal Council to take measures to prevent their entrance into Switzerland; and the Government of Berne has already ordered the Prefects of the frontier districts of that canton to prevent the entry of refugees coming from France. The Federal Council has also requested the authorities of the different cantons not to give passports to refugees who may be residing there, for the purpose of removing into other cantons, unless they have previously come to an agreement with them, and also not to grant passports to refugees who may wish to return to their own countries, unless they can prove that they can do so in perfect security, or the order, arising that they intend to do so after own risk and peril.

General Dufour has issued the following order of the day on taking the command of the Swiss army. It is dated Head-quarters, Berne, Aug. 2:—

TO THE ARMY

"Soldiers of the Confederation!—The proceedings of the nation have confirmed the eventua. choice of the Commander-in-Chief I am proud at having been so called to fill that elevated position, and I come with happiness to range myself with you round the standard of the country, which we have sworn to defend as part of Switzerland. There is no longer any division among us, one idea, one sentiment alone animates us; we only wish to rival each other in zeal and devotedness to our common country. Soldiers! I owe you praise for the proceedings with which you have responded to the call of the authorities; and you merit it still more for your good conduct among yourselves and towards the inhabitants. At the present moment our task is confined to watching our frontiers; all that is required is vigilance and discipline in the service, and that I am persuaded we will display. But if circumstances should become more serious, if the former should present himself as an enemy, and violate our territory, you will step up with courage and energy in defence of the country; you will march from that sacrifice to preserve intact its honour and its independence, in a word, you will use every effort, that the world may say of you, the sons of free Helvetia have not degenerate from their ancestors."

RUSSIA.

The war in the Caucasus has been renewed with great activity by the Circassians since they became aware of the Russian invasion of Hungary. Dear Manouri, the chief of Schamyl, had assembled on the frontiers of the Circassian hos a considerable army, with which he advanced towards the Labs, in order to incite the tribes at peace with the Russians to join him. General Kowalewski had the command of infantry, 2000 Cossacks, and ten cannon in readiness to oppose this force. On the 16th ving Naib Tulgin was at the head of a strong band, and on the 17th of June repulsed an incursion over the Aigun on a detachment of Cossacks under Colonel Schuff

Russian pilgrims, who had arrived at Trebizond, on their way to Mecca, stated that several of the extensive works for fortifications constructed at Caralais in the Caucasus and in the passes into the lands of the Circassians had been destroyed. They instanced, particularly, the batteries lately erected between Chedanakan and Tersoph, which were completely razed by the Circassians of Chedanakan and Hay. They also affirmed that the fortress of Aeeli, which the Russians had conquered in the past year, was now again in the hands of Schamyl.

SPAIN

Madrid to the 1st inst. mentions as that the Spanish Government has completed the equipment of an army of 30,000 men to be got ready, for the purpose of taking the field of Melilla and driving away the Moors from that spot. If the army prove insufficient, and the Emperor of Morocco provides a war in reference to arms, the Spanish Government is determined to carry the war into the country, reinforced by troops from Catalonia, will proceed to Africa under the command of General Concha, while the squadron, now stationed off the Italian coast will make an attack upon

A company of Chinese actors shortly arrived at Barcelona, whence they will go into the Paris and Lorient. The latest of forced Celestial artists to remains still trembling in the balance. The latest intelligence, which comes via Paris, is, however, favourable to the maintenance of peace. According to an account, the French Government has received a telegraphic despatch announcing that the Sardinian Plenipotentiaries at Milan have received instructions from Turin to sign the treaty of peace with Austria, the Austrian Government having agreed to grant the required amnesty to the Lombards, with a few exceptions

ROME.—Matters remain pretty much in statu quo at the Eternal City. A commission to carry on the Government until the return of the Pope is mentioned as having been established. It is composed of three cardinals, viz. Vannicelli, Altieri, and Della Genga. General Oudinot has directed that, according to the desire of the Roman Municipal Commission, the French Engineers are to be charged with all the works necessary to re-establish communications within and with in the town. He has also named a special commission for works of beneficence, composed of MM Brossard, Pari, Palazzi, Blanchini, Massoni, and Bonddini. Count Mamiani, who had been Minister before the proclamation of the Republic, and who had given expression lately to his known hostility to the temporal power of the Pope, had been requested, and had thought it prudent, to withdraw from Rome. He has gone to France; but his friend, Dr. Pantaleone, had remained, notwithstanding the strong hints given to him of the hostile intentions of the Papal Government towards him. The sanitary state of the French army in Rome was very satisfactory. The city was perfectly quiet, and the greatest order prevailed, owing to the admirable conduct of the French troops and the mild demeanour of the inhabitants.

TUSCANY.—The Grand Duke and his family made their triumphal entry into Florence on the 28th ult., in great state. The great Pitti square was thronged with people, who saluted their Sovereign with cries of joy. The exclamations became more enthusiastic when the Grand Duke and his family appeared on the balcony of his palace to thank the people for their affectionate demonstration.

A report, which has since been confirmed, was current in Florence that Garibaldi had defeated a large Austrian corps which had attempted to arrest his progress. He had after words marched slowly off the field whilst the Austrians were occupied in burying their dead. He is still in the neighbourhood of the heights of Cast glione, with 5000 infantry and 500 cavalry

PIEDMONT.—Venice has determined to hold Peschiera at all extort for freedom. Intelligence of the 25th ult. mentions that the Assembly had decreed, by a considerable majority, the levy of 60 seamen, from 18 to 30 years of age, and of 6000 rifle guards, between 20 and 30. The greatest tranquility prevailed in the city

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

According to the intelligence this week from the seat of hostilities, the tide of war rolls adversely for the Magyars. The latest accounts have come through Prussia and Austria, and they state that the Imperial troops had taken Szegedin, and that Comorn was closely invested on all sides, after an obstinate resistance. A Hungarian detachment had been forced to seek refuge in the Turkish territory, where 900 men had given their arms. The victors took 1000 prisoners, 4 flags, 20 guns. Maniscar and Horcsony, towns also in possession of the Imperial army, and it was reported that the Russian troops entered Baja on the 29th inst. Dembinski, it is said, was defeated in a battle on the 30th inst., on the banks of the Theiss, and lost 30 guns. Manisca and Horcsony, towns also in possession of Szegedin; but admit that Gen. Haynau was preparing to attack that place on the 31st ult. 10,000 more Russian troops have entered Galicia.

A notification has been made to the public, in the Government official journal, that in consequence of the thinning of the ranks of the reserve battalions by the war in Hungary, a fresh levy of troops will be made, to the extent of about fifteen recruits from every 10,000 inhabitants of Austria.

THE GRAND STATES

The Central Government at Frankfort has entered into all the Governments of Germany, except Prussia, a circular, disapproving of the arm stice with Denmark concluded by the Cabinet of Berlin

The King of Prussia has addressed a proclamation to his army in Baden, in which he thanks them for maintaining the glory of the Prussian arms, and for securing the sacred soil of the Fatherland from the infection of perjured rebels. The proclamation is dated from Carlsruhe, the 26th July.

UNITED STATES

Advices to the 25th ult., from New York, have been received by the Niagara. The domestic intelligence from the States is very meagr

The question of the abolition or modification of the institution of slavery is occupying great attention. During the last week the journals are filled with speeches and letters of the leading political men respecting its extension to the new acquired territories of the States—the majority being in favour of the restriction to the line Missouri Compromise.

The war in Hungary also occupies public attention to a very great extent. Application from the New York meeting to the United States Government, praying for the prompt recognition of the Hungarian nation, have been replied to by the President of the United States—through John M. Clayton, Secretary of State, in an official letter addressed to L. R. Breisach, chief officer of the New York Hungarian Association. The letter is as follows:—

Department of State, Washington, June 25, 1849

Sir—I am requested by the President to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to him of the 8th instant, and the printed account of the proceedings of the meeting of the Hungarians and their friends in the city of New York, which accompanied it.

The Government and the people of this country are profoundly interested in the events which are now passing in Hungary. An unfortunate contest appears to have arisen between that country and Austria and Russia cannot fail to be watched with deep anxiety by the friends of liberty and humanity throughout the world. But the Government would be most happy, in that event, to enter into such relations with the people of Hungary as independent citizens.

I am, Sir, respectfully, your obedient servant, JOHN M. CLAYTON

The cholera was making most destructive progress in all the large towns and towns throughout the United States. The mortality had increased after four or five hours' illness. Emigrants recently arrived from Europe are amongst the most numerous victims. Out of 450 passengers, chiefly emigrants, on board the steamer Sidonia, 100 had died of cholera. Out of 1000 on board the Swanton, 300 died. At times the water of the Mississippi, Ohio, &c.—the only water drunk on the steam-boats—generally produces dysentery or diarrhœa among strangers. In one month, from April 26 to May 26, there were 36.5 deaths in Cincinnati, being an average of 1.7 per day. Where the cholera has ceased, or nearly so, bilious dysentery, malignant diarrhœa, common cholera, and inflammation of the bowels prevail to a alarming extent, and in many districts these latter have proved nearly as fatal as the dreaded Asiatic. Many persons die of fright.

CALIFORNIA.

Accounts to the 21st of May have been received. They represent that the excess of goods beyond the demand is great, and that labour is still scarce and high.

A rumour had reached California that Congress had estab lished a territorial government, in an amendment to the Civil and Diplomatic Bill. Great embarrassment ensued, and much excitement in consequence, if it should turn out that the rumour was false, and that Congress had failed to legislate on the subject

San Francisco was full of people. Twenty and thirty individuals occupy one small apartment; and the tents about the town, Indian-like, were equally crowded. Rooms twenty feet square let for 600 dollars per month. Building lots, worth five years since 500 dollars, exchanged hands for 50,000 dollars. Land is not dog cheap either, being in the whole state of the opinion that no doubt was entertained that more would be obtained than last year, as the labourers exceeded this season those of the previous. At the time, many fights were going on, but they were not so bad as that one long there would be in remembered between the Americans and the Mexicans some 600 of the latter lately arrived in the country, having evinced a most turbulent disposition. Six days in twenty days, near Sonora River, had procured 60,000 dollars in gold dust.

Immense quantities of gold had been sent from San Francisco. No less than a million sterling had been shipped in the two first days, marked, assayed, and stamped from the mint.

CANADA

Hitherto the accounts we have received of the prevalence of cholera in Montreal and Quebec were very favourable. Those which we have this week before us, dated June 30, were very few cases indeed, while other accounts maintained that the cases would be fatal. In both cities. At Quebec the deaths were from 20 to 30 per day. At Montreal, in Canada it was very great. In Quebec they had at first to 10 to 20 per day In Montreal the mortality was even great

The British American League assembled on the 25th ult. at Kingston, Canada West.

As the leading cause of the schemes which are likely to be discussed by that body, we take the following extract from a published address to his constituents of Mr. Dec. Wilson, of Quebec, a candidate for representation at Kingston the branch league of Quebec

Various causes have been suggested, for adopt on by which we should more readily secure the extraordinary rapid ation of the Imperial and Colonial Governments. First, a separation of Eastern from Western Canada, with an alteration in the former line of division. Next, a legislative union of the British American provinces, with a corresponding change in the constitution of the Government. Third, that we should endeavour to attain our independence. And, lastly, that we should seek a separation from Great Britain, with the view to annexation to the United States.

The feeling is growing up on the frontiers both of the United States and the English possessions, in favour of making the St. Lawrence river and the lakes a common highway, unshackled by any restrictions between the United States and the Atlantic cities

A large Conservative demonstration took place at Montreal, which exhibited signs

In the House of Commons, on the 2nd inst., Sir Charles Grey, addressed the House, urging on the Government the necessity of some proceeding with the business of the colony, and of the following party difficulties ences to retard it. The speech hinted slightly at the necessity of retrenchment, but disapproved of its being unfairly carried out. His Excellency likewise intimated that he had received from the Home Government certain despatches, which would be speedily laid before the Assembly. The Assembly made a short and respectful reply, expressing their readiness and desire to commence and proceed with the business of the colony, but at the same time stating that the measure of retrenchment would have precedence of all others. The House abstained from doing any business until the despatches referred to by his Excellency were laid before them. Two days after the meeting the documents in question were laid before the House. The first despatch had reference principally to the votes of the Assembly in the preceding session, disapproving of the partial stoppage of the supplies. It at the same time intimated that all responsibility resulting from the conduct of the Assembly would rest upon themselves. The despatch contained some remarks respecting the form of government of the island, and expressed the probable willingness of her Majesty's Government to consent to its being changed for the Canadian form, should it be acceptable to the people of Jamaica. The second despatch simply approved of the Council's conduct in rejecting the Retrenchment Bill. Both despatches were referred to a committee, who drew up a reply, which was laid before the Governor.

A motion was made in the House by one of the members for St. Andrew's, and of the King's House or Government party, to proceed with the unfinished business of the several prorogued sessions. This was opposed by the country party, and the following amendment was carried by 19 to 11:—

That, as there seems to be no disposition on the part of her Majesty's Government to afford the redress so urgently prayed for and demanded by this House and the people, as set forth in various memorials and petitions, but, on the contrary, every desire has been evinced to continue the present extravagant expenditure which the impoverished condition of the inhabitants renders it impossible longer to sustain, the House considers that it will best consult the rights and interests of their constituency by abstaining from any attempt at the further exercise of legislative functions until the people shall have expressed their decision on the course which has been hitherto pursued by the House.

This resolution was sent over to the Governor by a committee on the 7th of July. Immediately after, his Excellency commanded the attendance of the House in the Council Chamber, when, having addressed both branches, he forthwith dissolved the Assembly. This event was anxiously looked for by the country party, who are sanguine that in the next Assembly their numbers will be greatly increased.

The days had been named for the elections, and all the writs were returnable by the 2nd of September.

In St. Lucia some frauds had been detected in the Treasury, and defalcations to the extent of nearly £10,000 in the chest had been discovered by the Commissioners appointed to examine into and report upon the state of the Colonial Treasury. Two clerks were instantly dismissed by Lieutenant-Governor Darling, and the resignation of a gentleman holding the joint office of secretary and treasurer was accepted. Subsequently these three persons were arrested, and held to bail for their appearance at the next assizes. In consequence of the peculence of smallpox in St. Lucia, a quarantine was to be imposed at Barbadoes upon ships arriving therefrom.

In the French islands of Martinique and Guadaloupe, serious riots, attended with loss of life, had taken place. The result of the recent elections of members to serve in the French Legislative Assembly was said to be the cause of the outbreak.

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

MEETINGS.

WATERFORD, WEXFORD, WICKLOW, AND DUBLIN.—August 3: Half-yearly meeting: West Strand: the Earl of Courtown in the chair.—The report recommended the line should only be carried on to Wicklow. A sum of £59,192 had been expended, and £354,749 would have to be provided. The capital is to be reduced to £300,000, of 50,000 shares, at £10 instead of £20 per share. There are at present 18,187 shares on which £5 has been paid; 7941 shares on which £2 has been paid; and 49,105 shares on which 30s. has been paid. All the officers' salaries are to be reduced. Mr. Nash objected to the report. The shareholders would advance no more capital. He moved for a committee of investigation. After much discussion, the report was declared to have been adopted; but Mr. Nash, on intimating that the proceedings were illegal, delivered a writ to the chairman, which was handed to the solicitor of the company.

NEWRY, WARRENPOINT, AND ROSSTREVOR.—August 3: Half-yearly meeting: Moorgate-street: Lord Newry in the chair. The report declared that the line from Newry to Warrenpoint was open on 26th May. The traffic for the 170 shares was announced. The working account showed a balance of £66 remaining in hand. The report was received but not adopted, as a committee of investigation was appointed to inquire into the affairs of the company, and to report for consideration.

The attendance of shareholders of the CORK AND WATERFORD being insufficient on the 3rd instant, the meeting was adjourned sine die.

CLERKENWELL AND WORMWOOD-SCRUBS.—July 31: Half-yearly meeting: Gresham-street: Mr. J. W. Fetcher in the chair. The report declared that there was an increase in goods traffic, but the passenger receipts had decreased. The working expenses have been reduced, and a dividend of 2s. 6d. per share, clear of income-tax, was announced. The report thought the prospects of the line were good, and said the directors would further reduce the working expenses. The report was adopted, and the subject of return day tickets was recommended for consideration.

LIVERPOOL, CROSBY, AND SOUTHPORT.—August 2: Half-yearly meeting: Liverpool: Mr. Roberts in the chair.—The report showed a nett balance of £2833 receipts over the traffic account. A dividend at the rate of 2½ per cent was declared. It is intended to forfeit 965 shares. The negotiations with Lord Derby, for the land required for the extension of the line to Liverpool, are satisfactorily progressing

KENDAL AND WINDERMERE.—July 31: Half-yearly meeting: Kendal: Mr. J. Wilson in the chair.—The report stated that a saving of £238 had been effected in the working expenses. There had been an increase of £30 for rates and taxes. The progressive increase of traffic would ere long admit of a dividend on the original shares. The report was adopted.

The half-yearly meeting of the BIRMINGHAM, WOLVERHAMPTON, AND STOUR VALLEY was adjourned on the 7th inst., from there not being a due attendance of proprietors to constitute a meeting. The complaint about the abandonment of the intended branch line from Oldbury to Dudley has been forwarded to the London and North-Western, who are interested in the South Staffordshire, with which this branch would have been connected.

ANGLO-ITALIAN.—August 9: Annual Meeting: London: Mr. W. Jackson in the Chair.—A report was presented, which stated that, owing to the Revolution in Tuscany, the company had been prevented obtaining the sanction of four per cent. upon the line to Pistoja, which was expected at the last meeting, but recent events rendered it more than probable that it would be almost immediately obtained. The first division of the Maria Antonia Railway (into which company this company has been merged), from Florence to Prato (about 11 English miles), was opened on the 3rd Feb 1848; and, notwithstanding the stagnation in business consequent on the revolution, the net receipts for the first year, after deducting 4s. per mile, had amounted to £3499 2s. The report then went on to recommend the completion of the line from Prato to Pistoja, a further eleven miles, which, with a short line to be constructed by the Government, would open up a communication from Florence to Lucca and Pisa. The estimated amount of completing the Maria Antonia line (including that already expended) was £313,489; but as there had been a large number of shares forfeited, the actual amount to the shareholders would still be within the original estimate of £266,000, on which it was proposed to get the guarantee of four per cent. The debts of the company, owing to the non-payment of calls, was about £30,000, and it was proposed to make a call of £1 per share, partly to pay the debts, leaving only 13s. 4d. per share to make up the sum of £6 13s. 4d per share, the amount of Maria Antonia shares, beyond which the shareholders would not be liable. Estimating that the remaining call would produce £20,000, £88,000 would be requisite to complete the line, which it was proposed to raise on debentures. After some conversation, the report was received and adopted, and a series of resolutions carried, to the effect that the directors should make the earliest arrangements for converting the Anglo-Italian shares into paid-up shares of the Maria Antonio Company, and for completing the line to Pistoja; for endeavouring to obtain a minimum rate of interest from the Tuscan Government; to urge the Government to complete the line on to Peschiera; and for the Maria Antonio Company working the entire line from Florence to Leghorn and Pisa, when finished. It was also resolved to make a call of 10s. per share, payable in two instalments of 5s. each, and allow parties in arrear of not more than £1 upon their shares to have them reinstated on condition that such arrears and a call of 10s per share were paid prior to the 30th inst.

MOLD.—Aug. 9: Adjourned Special Meeting: London.—The retiring directors were re-elected, and the forfeiture of 3156 shares in arrear of call confirmed

IRELAND

THE LATE ORANGE AFFRAY AT DOLLY'S BRAE, IN THE COUNTY OF DOWN.

Mr Berwick, Q.C., who has been appointed Government Commissioner to investigate the circumstances connected with this lamentable affair, has opened his court at Castlewellan, in the immediate neighbourhood of the scene of conflict. The evidence given on Monday discloses a frightful state of society. In which country gentlemen and men entrusted with the commission of the peace can countenance the atrocities described. We give some extracts from the evidence.

William Beers, Esq., sworn and examined by the Commissioner: I am Grand Master of Orangemen of the county Down. I am also a magistrate of the county. A dinner was given to me in Downpatrick lately, on the 19th July, though I was invited to it in May last. No one made allusion to the transaction of the 12th but myself. The High Sheriff of the county presided. I made use of the words "little blot." I did not intend by that to make use of any words of exultation.

The Commissioner: What do you mean by a "little blot."?—Witness: A blot upon the convival ty of the day.

Cor. Ashmer: Did you not know that a boy had been shot, that houses had been burned, and a poor woman murdered?—Witness: I knew nothing whatever of the transaction. I had read the report of it, but could not tell whether it was true or not.

Would you use the word's "little blot" again?—I do not know.

Are you sure you would not? I do not think I would.

The Commissioner: I should be surprised if any gentleman would call murder a little blot. Did you know that the hill was christened King William's Hill?—

Witness: Only by mere rumour

Do you mean to tell me that you did not know on the 19th that lives had been lost?—Witness: Oh, I did; but I was not in the way of having accurate knowledge on the point.

* * * * * I left home immediately after the 12th, and stayed at Mr. Keon's, the High Sheriff, for a few days.

Commissioner: And is it possible that at the residence of the High Sheriff the circumstances of this lamentable affair were not talked of?—Witness: Oh, they were. There was a newspaper at the High Sheriff's. I had not the curiosity to look at the details. The reports were quite enough for me. I heard that old women were killed and houses burned. I saw in one of the papers that old women were rescued out of the flames. I heard that an idiot was murdered, and I think I heard they were all Roman Catholics.

Mr. M'Gee: And that is what you call a blot! I am done with you.

George Curtis (of the Downpatrick Recorder): Mr. Curtis, previous to his being sworn, informed the commissioner would not ask him about anything that occurred at the dinner, as he attended there merely in his professional capacity.

The Commissioner: I shall only ask you as to the general correctness of this report. Are you a good reporter?—Witness: No, sir, I am not.

Commissioner: Then I am sorry I asked you the question. Do you consider this a faithful report of what took place, and of Mr. Beers's speech? I think it is generally correct, but not a full report. We had not room for a full report.

Have you any doubt that these words, "A blot, if blot it could be called," were used by Mr. Beers?—I have no doubt they were. Mr. Beers has himself already admitted the general accuracy of the report.

On Saturday last, the following was among the evidence:—

Mr. F. C. Beers, J.P., was recalled: If I had been at home a sufficient time before the 17th of March to be apprised that the Ribbonmen were to pass through Moneyslan, I would have sworn informations that there would be danger to the public peace if they were allowed to walk that way. The Protestants in that place were considerably excited. It is peculiarly a Protestant district. It was merely from report that I knew they were to pass that way. If I could have got any one to swear informations to me about the Orangemen passing through Dolly's Brae, I would have followed precisely the same course with them as with the others.

Mr. Rae: Do you believe there would have been a conflict with her Majesty's troops, in case they opposed the Orangemen passing Dolly's Brae?—Witness: I do.

Mr. Rae: The loyal Orangemen? Witness: I have stated before that I do not believe there was any intentional firing on the police on the 12th, because there was an alliance between the two; and I think the only mistake was, that the Sheriff was not there to embody the Orangemen as his posse comitatus; for then, I think, and there is no doubt, that all they did would have been perfectly legal. (Laughter.)

James Hanna, examined by Mr. Rae: I am a powder seller. I got my last supply about a fortnight before the 12th. I got a quarter-cask, and it was all sold before the 12th. I got another quarter-cask, which I ordered on the 9th, was stolen from the car. I cannot discriminate whether I sold more powder to Catholics or Protestants; but I heard that my boy sold more than a pound to two persons on Billy'smen—not a very Protestant county.

Mr. Rae: There now, that will do. (Laughter)

Constable Scanlan to Mr. Ruthven: I saw the Orangemen passing home by Dolly's Brae on the 12th. I counted there were 428 standing among them. The Castlewellan party were with them at the time. I cannot say how many arms they had with them

Mr. Rae: And this is peace and peaceable Ulster! (Laughter.)

Sub-constable Walsh: I was under the command of Mr. Hill.

To Mr Rae: I saw four or five Orangemen fire at he Ribbonmen. They were 20 yards off me then. I saw one policeman fire at the people. They were in rear about ten minutes before he fired the shot. I fired none myself. It was immediately after he got into the field that he fired. I saw the ball tear up the ground beside a man, about 50 yards off

Patrick Kelly, examined by Mr. Rae: Our house was wrecked. It is the long house near the cross roads at Maghermayo. When the disturbance began I saw Mr. F. Beers, and heard him say, "Come, boys, you are into Mr. Mann's land, ——, your souls! blow them, man, woman, and child, out of the house." He said that to had badges on them, and I supposed them to be Orangemen I heard the firing commence. This was said by Mr. Beers about half a quarter of an hour after the first shots began. Mr. Beers had nothing in his hand, barring a rod or walking-stick, and a "guy" thick staff it was. I did not wait to see which way he went after that, for I took in through a corn-field to James Boyd's house. It was on fire, and I was down in a field beside it. Mr. Beers was on the roadside at the time, and so was I. Arthur Trainor's house and our house were on fire at the time. I did not know the parties who did the work. The police were running up Magheramaglish-hill at the time. I did not see Murphy's house set on fire. There was a true bree between me and it.

Mr. Beers to Mr. Moore: I declare to Almighty God that what this woman has stated is a falsehood

Mr. Quinn, J.P.: here stated that the girl was commencing to make a statement, and that the coroner stopped her making her statement, saying it was irrelevant He added, that he heard her making use of some of the words she had now used at the inquest.

Elizabeth M'Poland examined: I saw Mr. Francis Beers on the 12th, about a quarter of an hour after the firing began. I saw him a few perches from the cross-house. He was in the field when I heard him ordering them (I suppose to his own party) "Fire, and kill on." When I heard these words I ran away to my own field, and one of the party fired a gun at me, and the ball went through the sleeve of my gown and my shift. [The witness showed a rent in the sleeve, as if made by a bullet; but there was no corresponding hole to show what direction the bullet took.] The bullet did not touch my skin. I could not say who fired at me.

Mr. Beers was then recalled. I declare, in the most solemn manner, to God, I never expressed the words attributed to me by the witness—Witness: Well, I still told you the truth.

To Mr. Reilly: I came here along with the neighbours to tell what I knew. I warrant you I told this story before. To be sure I was shot at

Mr. Berwick: Mr. F. W. Beers is ensign to go away, having an engagement in Dublin, and I now wish to know whether you, Mr. Rae, or any of the other gentlemen wish to examine him?

Mr. Rae: I do not want to interfere with Mr Beers' journey to Dublin, but I think Mr. Ruthven, the Crown solicitor, should tender informations, and have Mr. Beers arrested, as would be done to a person in an humbler sphere of life.

Mr. Berwick: I do not know but I may have informations sworn, and both sides It would be highly improper for me to say what I intended to do. The matter has only been put in a train of investigation.

Margaret Taylor examined: When the work commenced I was in our own land, coming down to see the soldiers that were riding. When I was coming down in our own field I heard the first shot on the road I saw the smoke. I will not say whether it was a squib or not. I had not time to say a word until I heard many I ran up my own field, and lay in the "shough," and a man with a sash on him came up and said, "—— your souls, boys, here is a Popish ——, and I'll smother her." He had no gun, but he lifted a stone and threw it at me. I ran up the field. Saw Mr Beers, and he said, "—— your souls, stop her." I then ran on, and took a side direction from them, and heard two shots passing by my head, and I saw no more. I saw no police there. I could not for the ditch. There was not a soldier there at the time I saw Mr Beers was doing nothing; he was only walking. He had no gun or blunderbuss with him He had no staff that I saw.

Mr F. W. Beers then came forward and said. What this witness has stated is false, on my solemn oath.

Margaret King examined: I was in my own house when the door was broken open, and my uncle, Patrick King, killed. The house was filled with Orangemen, and he came and begged his life; and one of the Orangemen, with a stone in his hand, struck him on the head, and three of them pulled him down the room. I made my escape then, and one of the Orangemen, with a gun in his hand, fired a shot, and cut her arms, and then lifted a chair and smashed it on her forehead. The chair is there to be seen yet

These gentlemen were not carrying Bibles that had the stones? No, they were not.

James M'Grady examined: I was on the brae after the Orangemen. I heard the shooting commence I went and hid, and heard Murphy's house broken into. I saw two of the Orangemen charging their guns, and fire up the mountain, shouting "No Pope." They charged again, and one of them, as he fired, shouted always "No Pope." One of them shot the goat. A man on horseback said, "For God's sake, boys, come away." They then got mixed, and one of them said, "Who the —— shot the goat?" Another said, "By heavens, it was me." I then went on, and saw Sweeney dead. I know the parties whom I saw on the road at the time. I lived with one of them

The Rev John Mooney examined: I was with Mr Morgan [illegible] unnecessary for me to repeat what he has said. When I [illegible] hill I did all in my power with the people, begging them to [illegible] peace, and let the Orangemen pass quietly, and they promised they would. The Orangemen did not pass quietly, for some of them were shouting, "To hell with the Pope!" "There is the priest—pop him."

At the close of the day's proceedings, Mr Rae read and handed in to the commissioner the following protest against the investigation being brought to a close that evening:—

"Courthouse, Castlewellan, July 31.

"To Walter Berwick, Esq., Q.C., the Commissioner.

"Sir, As attorney acting for the Roman Catholics, whose houses were burned, and whose relatives were murdered on the 12th of July last, in Drumgoole parish—though perfectly conscious of the courtesy, patience, and impartiality with which you have conducted this inquiry—I beg leave respectfully to protest against the investigation being brought to a conclusion this day, and to request the adjournment to Monday, the 20th of August instant, or any other convenient day thereafter, for the following reasons:

"1. That no notice of the time of holding the inquiry, or the nature thereof, was published in the Dublin Gazette, nor any proclamation posted in the neighbourhood, nor advertisement inserted in the local newspapers.

"2. That none of my clients, who are the persons chiefly interested in the result, nor the Rev. Mr. Morgan, whose chapel was wrecked and fired into), nor any of his assistants, received any intimation of a similar character, to enable them to have themselves and their parishioners prepared for the inquiry.

"3. That, in consequence of this, I was on Monday one, called to enter upon the investigation, without the slightest preparation to enable me either effectually to cross-examine adverse witnesses, or to produce others to support the case, which I hope to be able to establish, especially against the local magistrates, and the other persons aiding and forming part of the unlawful assembly, in furtherance of the object of which the felonies were committed.

"4. That after being occupied in court from ten till five o'clock for six days examining witnesses, it is only reasonable that I should be allowed an interval during which personally to make arrangements to strengthen the case established against the local magistrates, by their own testimony, and to implicate others, at present unknown, or apparently guiltless.

"5. That, from the importance of this inquiry, the forgetful character of the outrages, and the state of public feeling on the subject, I declare it to be my firm conviction, not only as a professional man, but as a member of the community, that for these and other reasons it is necessary, to enable me to do my duty to my clients and the public, that the very short time requested for preparation should be granted previous to the termination of the inquiry

"I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

"JOHN RAE."

"County of Down, } I, John Rae, of Belfast, in the county of Antrim, gentle-
To wit. } man, attorney, do swear that the statement of facts and opinions contained in the foregoing letter are true and correct, according to the best of my knowledge and belief; and that the prayer for adjournment therein contained is made bond fide, and not for the purpose of delay.

"Sworn before me in open court, at Castlewellan, this 4th day of August, 1849.

"WALTER BERWICK, Commissioner."

Mr. Berwick received the protest; and, after a short conversation, the court adjourned sine die.

GREAT FIRE AT BALLYSHANNON, COUNTY DONEGAL.—A most alarming and destructive fire occurred at Ballyshannon on Sunday, at about half-past one o'clock, just as the people were coming from the different places of worship, it broke out in the drying-house of a tan-yard at the rear of the premises of Mr. William Henry, of Mohen-street, and in a very short time communicated with several houses situated in the front street, and continued to spread with great rapidity for upwards of three hours. At the day being intensely hot, the smallest spark caused the houses that were thatched to ignite Several persons are serious sufferers. No less than fifteen houses in the back street are completely unroofed. At one time it was greatly feared the entire town would be reduced to ashes. The fire was quite visible at Bundoran, a distance of three miles.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Of the eleven meetings which have "come off" this week, the Brighton alone offered any attractions to the metropolitan turfites, and that, if it did not quite reach the standard to which the imaginations of the promoters had raised it, still proves that its downward progress has been arrested, and that the "good time is coming." The weather was glorious, and the number of visitors of all classes unusually large; great profit accrued to the town, and the Chichesterians have by no means been quite blind will see the policy of the more liberal in their support of the race from that they have hitherto been.

The only meetings next week will be the compass of a "day ticket" from town are Oxford and Cambridge Universities, and the Wednesday, and the Thursday: the latter holds out a fair prospect of sport. The other fixtures are Wolverhampton, commencing on Monday; Lewes, on Monday; Canterbury, on Thursday and Friday; and Ashridge, on Friday

The most interesting cricket match will be at Brighton on Monday and Tuesday, between the M. C. C. and Sussex (the return match). Matches will be played on the same days between the Gentlemen of Kent and Surrey, and at Woolwich between the Royal Artillery and the Sevenoaks Vine Club; and on Tuesday at Brixton, between the Metropolitan and Dorking Clubs. A equatic event, entitled a "home circuit" will be started to the Lansdowne's Match, on Monday, for the Silver Oars, at Lambeth; and regattas at Upper Cam ton on Tuesday, and at Richmond on Friday. The Manchester and Belfast regattas commence on Monday, and last three days: good sport is promised.

STEALING NEWSPAPERS.—(From a Correspondent.) We are happy to state that, after a most field investigation, which has occupied several days, the Inspector-General of the Post-office has discovered the party who has been committing such extensive depredations, by the theft of newspapers addressed to parties in the neighbourhood of Bagshot. The delinquent, in whose possession nearly 100 newspapers have been found, including twelve copies of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, proves to be a man occasionally employed to drive the mail cart to and from the railway station and Wokingham. This discovery entirely exonerates from suspicion all parties employed in the Bagshot and other post-offices.

THE FRANKLIN EXPEDITION.—Every one will be concerned to hear that a despatch has arrived at the Admiralty from Sir John Richardson, without any news of Sir John Franklin. The expedition had traversed the coast from the Mackenzie and Coppermine rivers; but the Esquimaux ice declared that no vessel could have made their appearance. Unfortunately set in unusually strong, and prevented the expedition from proceeding beyond Icy Cove, to the north of Cape Kendal, just as it was on the point of exploring a most interesting coast, and one, for the present, all hope is cut off of discovering the lost voyagers. Our only consolation is in the gain to science, for the search for Captain Franklin has brought to light many interesting facts respecting the inhospitable regions of Arctic America.

POMPEIAN MOSAIC.—Very beautiful specimens of mosaic in the Pompeian style are now exhibiting at the Polytechnic. They are the work of M. Gaitset, who execu ed them at Manlen, under the patronage of King Louis, who honoured the artist with many orders Intende for the Pompeian house at Saint-Cloud. Works of the same deser ption may be executed in any design and pattern such as crests and coats of arms Those at the Polytechnic are exposed for sale.

OR

IRELAND'S WELCOME TO QUEEN VICTORIA.

By Charles Mackay, Esq., LL.D, Author of "There's a Good Time Coming."] [The Music by John Smith, Mus. Doc., and State Composer for Ireland.

Moderato.

Sad E - rin, thy harp has been si - lent too long; It's strings to thy touch are re - spon-sive no more; Thy voice once at-tuned to the rap - tures of song, But rais - es a moan on thy de - so - late shore, But rais - es a moan on thy de - so-late shore.

A - rouse thee, O E - rin, look up through thy tears, The Queen of the Isles in thy ci - ties ap - pears! With sis - ter - ly love, and all sym - pa-thies true; A - wa - ken thy harp, let it sound on her ears. Cead mi - le fail - te,

Sad Erin! thy harp has been silent too long;
Its strings to thy touch throb responsive no more,
Thy voice, once attuned to the raptures of song,
But raises a moan on thy desolate shore.
Arouse thee, O Erin! look up through thy tears;
The Queen of the Isles in thy havens appears,
With stately love, and all sympathies true;—
Awaken thy harp—let it sound on her ears,—
"Cead mile failte!—Erin aboo!"*

2.

The night of thy sorrow shall melt in the morn;
Already the darkness gives place to the day;
And thy children that sat on their thresholds forlorn,
Look up to the sunshine that brightens the way.
Exult, then, O Erin! Victoria shall bring,
For the winter now passing, the glories of spring—
For the dark-heating tempest, clear vistas of blue;—
And the myriads now weeping shall smile as they sing,—
"Cead mile failte!—Erin aboo!"

3.

As flow'rs track'd the steps of the fairies of old,
And halos encircled the spots where they stood,
So Confidence, strewing its blessings around,
Shall follow the steps of Victoria the good.
Arouse thee, O Erin! with heart and with hand,
She comes on an errand of love to thy strand;
Look up, with thy sons, ever fervent and true,
And let the glad chorus resound through the land,—
"Cead mile failte!—Erin aboo!"

* Pronounced Kade mee-le fallta! Erin aboo. "A hundred thousand welcomes! Erin for ever!"

THE PROCESSION PASSING THE ROTUNDO, DUBLIN.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

The accompanying Illustration shows the Royal procession passing the Rotundo and Lying-in-Hospital, as described in the narrative of the Royal Visit published with the present sheet.

The Hospital is the first of its kind established in the British empire; and, with the Rotundo, it forms one side of Rutland-square. The Hospital is an edifice of some architectural pretension. Retired from the street, by a court-yard, forty-one feet deep, is the principal front, facing southward, measuring 125 feet in extent. The basement is rusticated; the centre projects, and from above the door-way rises a Doric portico, with an entablature and pediment. On each side of the principal building is a sweeping colonnade, the same height as the basement story, terminating in pavilions, the western forming the Porter's Lodge, the eastern the entrance to the Rotundo. The Hall is supported by columns, and is a fine apartment. Over this is the Chapel, with a beautiful stucco ceiling, the design of Cremillon, a French artist, and executed by two Italian sculptors. This Hospital gives relief to above 2000 women annually.

The Rotundo, as its name implies, is a circular building, and forms a very striking feature: its principal room is 80 feet in diameter, and 40 feet in height; 18 Corinthian pilasters support an entablature, upon which rests an ornamented ceiling. To the north of this have been erected the new rooms fronting Cavendish-row: these, as well as the Round Room, are let for public meetings and entertainments, from which a considerable income is derived for the support of the Hospital. The Rotundo Gardens, now generally known as Rutland-square, are beautifully laid out, and form a favourite promenade for the inhabitants of the northern side of the city.

PHŒNIX PARK.

This noble park, in which an encampment of troops has been for some time stationed, and wherein the Review was held on Thursday, is the finest domain of its class, attached to any city of the British dominions, and is not inferior even to the Prater, at Vienna. Its grounds are beautifully diversified; its commands very fine prospects; and it consists of nearly 1800 statute acres, with a circumference of seven English miles.

POSTSCRIPT.

BAPTISM OF THE HON. AND REV. BAPTIST NOEL.—The Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, who lately seceded from the Church of England, and who has embraced the views of the Baptists, was, on Thursday evening, publicly baptised in John-street Chapel, Meek enbargh-square, in the immediate vicinity of the chapel in which he, the hon. and rev. gentleman had preached as a minister of the Church of England for twenty-two years. The chapel was crowded in every part long before the time appointed for the commencement of the services. The number present must have been upwards of 2000, which, as some silence as great a number must have gone away unable to obtain admission. Mr. Noel took occasion to deliver an address on the subject of baptism, in which he stated, that, after mature consideration, arising out of the assembly proved, first, that baptism, as ordained by Christ, is an immersion in water, a being buried in the water; and, secondly, that immersion is meant to be a profession of faith in Christ. "If these two propositions," said the reverend gentleman, "be established, I believe they will completely prevail with the Christian world eventually), then it follows that a person who, like myself, has only been sprinkled in infancy, is unbaptised because such a person has neither been immersed, nor has he made a Spiritual profession of faith; and these two things constitute Christian baptism." After singing, and prayer over the pool, Mr. Noel and thirteen others, six of them females, were baptised in the usual manner by the Rev. Mr. Shepherd.

THE LATE MR. DENISON, M.P.—The late Mr. Denison, M.P. for West Surrey, and senior partner in the banking firm of Denisons, Heywood, and Kennard, has died worth more than two millions of money, the principal part of which is settled upon Lord Albert Conyngham and his heirs. The Yorkshire estates of this wealthy man are valued at more than £300,000, those in Surrey at £100,000; the remainder of the property is in the funds and other securities. The Marquis of Conyngham, too, has not been forgotten, his deceased relative having left him a handsome legacy. The whole property is valued at £2,300,000.

It is understood that, immediately on the marriage of Lieutenant Heald with the Countess of Landsfeldt (Lola Montez), the Marquis of Londonderry, Colonel of the 2nd Life Guards, took the most decisive steps to recommend to her Majesty that the officer's resignation of his commission should be insisted on, and that he should leave the regiment, which this unfortunate and extraordinary marriage disgraces.

DEPUTY CORONERSHIP OF THE CITY.—The Lord Chancellor has been pleased to approve the appointment of Mr. W. J. Payne, of the Norfolk circuit, barrister-at-law, to be Deputy Coroner for the City of London and borough of Southwark

EXTENSIVE EMBEZZLEMENT.—On Thursday information was received by the metropolitan police, but Mr. Joseph Siddel, for upwards of fifteen years mayor's sergeant at Oxford, had absconded, embezzling between £1400 to £1800, principally the moneys of the Corporation. Up to the moment of the discovery of his defalcations, Siddel had maintained the highest character for honesty and integrity.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

HUNGARY

The advices from the seat of war, which in the beginning of the week had been adverse to the Magyars, were at the latest date (the 6th inst.) again become favourable to them. On the previous day (the 5th) they stole a march, and surprised the garrison of Raab. A sharp conflict ensued, which ended in the fortress and the city being occupied by the Hungarians, where they found 80,000 bushels of oats, 2400 head of cattle, and large stores of miscellaneous provision, which they carried to the citadel of Komorn. Nor were these all the trophies of their victory, for they captured six guns, and took two companies of Austrian infantry prisoners. Kapka commanded the Hungarian troops, who afterwards quitted the city of Raab, and took up their abode in the fortress, where they seized the Vienna mails.

ITALY.

The treaty of peace between Piedmont and Austria has been at length definitively signed. The signatures took place at Milan on the 6th instant.

PRUSSIA.

The Prussian Chambers were opened on the 7th inst. by an address from the King, which was read by Count Brandenburg.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Cape Town papers of the 9th June have reached us. They contain several reports of meetings held, denouncing Earl Grey's scheme of making that colony a penal settlement, at which the persons assembled evinced the strongest determination to resist it to the last. Protests were being prepared in all directions against the project, many of which had appended 4000 to 5000 signatures.

PUBLIC MEETINGS.

PARLIAMENTARY AND FINANCIAL REFORM.—A meeting of the Greenwich Parliamentary and Financial Reform Association was held on Tuesday evening, in Providence Chapel, Powis street, Woolwich; G. W. Masters, Esq., in the chair. The following resolution was adopted: "That the absence of a really representative House of Commons, the stupendous and class legislation, the unequal pressure of taxation, the general extravagance of the public expenditure, and the consequences of these evils engendering discontent and threatening disorders fatal to the political and to the social prosperity of the country, render the organisation of the middle and working classes, for the attainment of parliamentary reform, a matter of momentous importance to the state." Mr. Tindal Atkinson, in addressing the meeting, observed that the great evils of constitutional liberty which had been done in 1831, had given political power and influence to the middle class, who had become, in fact, trustees for the masses, and the time was now ripe when the delegated power could safely be restored to the kingdom whose increased intelligence alone had made them fitting recipients of civil rights. (Cheers.) The policy of the governing body had hitherto been to govern through the division of the people, and, unfortunately, bitterness with the working classes, by the Metropolitan Reform Association was present with hopefulness that the time had at last arrived when the separation was no longer possible, and when, not more by the vices of an imperfect system of representation than an intuitive sense of danger to all that was worthy of preservation in the institutions of the country, the two great classes would unite in irresistible union for a safe, extensive, and searching measure of reform. (Loud cheers.) The change, however, to be safe, must be moral in its nature. (Cheers.) Englishmen were proverbial for that invaluable common-sense which prefers the known to the unknown. The Frenchman invents, the Englishman improves, and every reform which was worthy of the name bore the impress of progression rather than that of sudden revulsion. (Cheers.) Still the reform proposed was of a large character, for it went to enfranchise five millions out of six millions and a half. (Cheers.) He was glad to say that if the contest was to be conducted peacefully carried out, the sympathies of the middle class must be contented, in order that the means of carrying on successful agitation might be found. If the influence of wealth in these days ought to make a railway king, before whom in its zenith the proudest aristocracy in the world could bend the knee, and with equal perversity break up the idol when evil ensued, of what the nucleus of his prosperity, how necessary must it be that a powerful instrument should be used for the advancement of the principles of civil and religious liberty. (Cheers.) In connexion with financial reform, the extension of the franchise was a measure to be sought. The crushing duties of the taxes were felt by both classes alike: from the working-man it took half his earnings in indirect taxation, while direct taxation stared the middle class in the face from the earliest perception of infant sense to the closing hours of the dying old age. (Laughter and cheers.) The labour and capital of the country seemed to be created for no other purpose so than for that of supporting an idle class, who, if they were asked what functions of the social economy they were created to perform, could only reply, like the drones, to flatter their wings in the sunshine, and consume the honey the industry of others had furnished in the hive. (Laughter and cheers.) Did they want instances, let them look at the pension list, and reflect that while a miserable pittance was doled out for the education of the people, the King of Hanover took annually from the industry of the country the sum of £21,000; while a lady, exemplary no doubt for all the virtues which cluster here, was paid £100,000 a year for the happy accident which made her the wife of an English Monarch. (Cheers.)

RAILWAY GUARDS' UNIVERSAL FRIENDLY SOCIETY.—A meeting of this society was held on Tuesday night at the society's present meeting-room, at the Lord, Goldington-street, Old St. Pancras road. Mr. Gray (guard of the London and North-Western Railway Company) was in the chair. After the disposal of the usual business of a friendly society's meeting, Mr. Gray announced the pleasing intelligence that the number entered was no fewer than 234. Mr. George Bayendale has consented to act as a trustee with Mr. Glyn for the society, both gentlemen having expressed their most unqualified approbation of its objects.

THE PRINTERS' PENSION SOCIETY.—On Wednesday evening a general meeting of the supporters of this society was held at the London Tavern, Bishopsgate-street, for the purpose of considering the propriety of extending the object to the permanent relief of aged and decayed master-printers, compositors, pressmen, and their widows. The report stated that since the society's foundation, in 1827, 158 pensioners have been elected, and that 55 are now receiving its benefits. The receipts for the past year left a balance of £56 15s 4d. The funded property amounts to £5909 5s. 7d., the interest of which produces an income of £199 12s. 8d.

LONDON UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.—The annual distribution of prizes to the junior school of this college took place on Saturday last, in the theatre of the institution, Mr. Justice Talfourd presiding.

THE PALACE COURT.—By the County Court Act, which received the Royal Assent on Tuesday week, no fresh actions can be commenced in the Palace Court, and at the end of the year all its functions will cease and determine. A great number of writs were issued in the few days preceding the act receiving the Royal Assent.

CAUTION TO INNKEEPERS.—At the Court of Inland Revenue, on Wednesday, several sport-retailers were fined, under the recent act 11th and 12th Vict. c. 121, s. 19 a d 16, for neglecting to enter in their stock books an account of spirits received, and for not cancelling the permits or certificates received with the spirits.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

THE WESLEYANS AND GOVERNMENT AID FOR EDUCATION.—For the Normal School at Westminster the Wesleyans are to receive £7000 as a grant towards the building, which is to cost £30,000, in addition to £3832, the cost of the site. The annual expenditure of this establishment is estimated at £4790, to meet which the following items of income were calculated on:—800 children at 6s. per week, for 40 weeks, £960; Government grants to 80 stewards, £1600, to four masters, £120; and from students, £800. This leaves a deficiency of £2840 per year, which will have to be made up from the general fund. There remains but £2000 to be collected for the completion of the proposed buildings, the amount already obtained is most yet decided. The connexional statistics of the body are encouraging. There are 413 day schools, with [illegible] of £30,047. The Sunday schools are 4344, with 461,197 scholars, and 83,932 teachers, 59,943 of whom are members of the society. Of these schools, 4049 regularly attend chapel. In 3906 the Conference Catechism is taught; and 2730 of the children attend select classes, preparatory to introduction into the church." The total annual cost of these schools is £26,194 10s. One of the funds, the children's, has suffered to a considerable extent from the unfaithfulness of its clerical treasurer, the Rev John S. Stamp, whose defalcations have it means a large sum, if the amounts borrowed from other funds, on the credit of this, are a l charged to it.

AUSTRALIAN EMIGRATION.—A déjeuner was given on Monday on board the Coromandel, Australian passenger-ship, now lying at the jetty, London Docks, to a select party, who were invited to inspect the vessel as now afforded, by means of comfort and cheapness comb ned, for emigration to those extensive colonies. The accommodations provided appeared highly calculated to promote the health and convenience of the passengers upon their long voyage. The Coromandel is a finely-proportioned vessel, of 765 tons register. She has an elegant poop, and is several feet between decks. Her destination is Adelaide and Sydney, for which places all her berths are engaged; and she sailed, we believe, on Wednesday. Captain Brown, the Commander, presided; and the party, among whom were several of the principal passengers, spent a few hours together very agreeably Mr. Gilchrist Whicker, who has chartered the Coromandel, stated on the occasion that he was the first to suggest the plan of conveying respectable emigrants at a uniform rate of twenty guineas for each passenger, providing the emigrants with everything on the voyage—bedding as well as provisions, the ship being of the most approved construction, and the provisions being most liberal, as well as of the best description. His plan had so well succeeded as to give him confidence in carrying them out on a more extensive scale, and he was determined to use all his efforts to promote emigration at the least possible cost and discomfort to those who, from choice or necessity, determined on self-exile. The late Report of the Emigration Commissioners states that in 1848 no fewer than 115 ships sailed for the Australian colonies, with 28,138 emigrants. In 847 less than 5000 proceeded there, shewing an enormous increase above from what we hear, the emigration for 1849 is likely far to exceed that of the last three years.

THE NECESSITY FOR ABATTOIRS.—On Monday afternoon a bullock broke loose from a butcher's premises in Aldgate, and turned into Leadenhall-street, through Lombard-street, and Birchin-lane, knocking down one or two persons on the way. At the junction of Princes-street with the corner of Threadneedle-street, a gentleman had a most hair-breadth escape of being gored. The angry animal butted with great force at him as he was standing at the corner of the street; but the horns coming in contact with the lamp-post, he escaped. Suddenly he rushed forward in the direction of Bartholomew-lane, where he knocked down an old man who was carrying a bag of apparel, and who had a most fortunate escape. The animal then ran towards Broad-street, knocking down several other persons, most of whom received contusions more or less severe. He at last arrived into Bishopsgate churchyard, where he was secured and afterwards slaughtered.

BIRTHS AND DEATHS, &c., FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, August 4, 1849. The births registered in the week were—Males, 709; females, 690: 1399. The deaths registered were—Males, 993; females, 974: 1967. It is unsatisfactory to observe that the constant increase of mortality, which commenced in the second week of July, was maintained in the week ending Saturday last. The deaths from all diseases in last week were 1967—a mortality nearly double the weekly average of the season, which is 1008. The progress of the total mortality is shown by the following numbers returned in the last four weeks:—1305, 1741, 1891, and 1967. The deaths from cholera, which in six previous weeks were 49, 124, 192, 393, 678, 783, increased in the last to 926. A feature worthy of notice in the present return, is the fact that while the mortality caused by diarrhœa has increased, there has been simultaneously a decrease in the deaths attributed to diarrhœa; for whereas the deaths from this disease (including dysentery) were in four previous weeks 84, 105, 146, 238, in the last week they declined to 198—an amount which is nearly the same as the corresponding week of the summer of 1846, and little more than that of the same week of 1848. It is shown, therefore, that the total mortality from diarrhœa, dysentery, and cholera, amounts in this return to 1124, while the average is only 752. Consequently the excess from the three epidemics exceeds, in some degree, the increase above the average of the mortality from all causes, which is owning partly to the circumstance that the deaths from fractures, burns, and other injuries, registered in the week, were unusually few. Other epidemics besides those mentioned are under the average, will. the exception of hooping-cough, which is above the average. The mortality from cholera rages in nations on the south side of the river; the deaths there, which in the preceding week were 514, rose in the last to 621. On the north side of the Thames, the deaths in the western districts were 93, showing an increase; in the eastern 37, or nearly the same as in the former week; in the eastern (37), a slight increase, and in the central, which include St. Giles and St. George, Strand, Holborn, Clerkenwell, St. Luke, East London, West London, and City, there is a small decrease, the number being 93, though in the previous return there were 97 deaths—the greatest number in any district on the north side of the river is in West London, namely, 32. Of the southern districts, there were 67 in Bermondsey, 86 in Newington, 112 in St. George, Southwark, and 143 in Lambeth. The deaths at Rotherhithe are now comparative y few. The death of a man of 40 years in Brompton was caused by erysipelas of both legs, of putrid character (after five days' illness), caught from sleeping with a child who suffered from the disease.

METEOROLOGICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The daily mean of the barometer was highest on Thursday, when it was 29.965. The mean of the week was 29.793. The temperature was under the average of the corresponding days of seven years in every day except Thursday. The highest in the shade was on Thursday, namely, 74 deg. 5 min. The mean temperature of the week was 65 deg. 8 min.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

THE "AJAX" STEAM GUARD SHIP.—A trial of this, the third of the completed "block ships," took place on Monday, at Portsmouth, under the superintendence of the Rear-Admiral Superintendent of the Dockyard. The ship steamed out of the harbour at about eleven o'clock, drawn forward by the attendant tug, to render aid in the event of accident or derangement of the machinery. There was a large and distinguished circle of scientific officers and gentlemen on board the ship, amongst whom were Rear-Admiral Sir Charles Napier, K.C.B.; Captain Austin, C.B.; Captain Chads, C.B.; Captain Stevens, R.N.; Captain Purcell, R.N.; Andrew Murray, Esq., chief engineer of her Majesty's dock-yard, Woolwich; Nathan Faulkner, Esq., engineer, Chatham; Andrew Esq., master attendant ditto, &c. The ship seemed to be going about six knots out of harbour, with the tide running out, and on the measured knot in the Solent she went at the average rate of seven and a half knots, full power (about the same rate as Hogue and Cressy run from the Thames to Spithead. The object in originating such ships was to provide them with an auxiliary power to accomplish only about four knots in speed to enable them to counteract the effects of tides in going into or getting out of action, or in working off shore. However, by using only as much power as may be actually required when circumstanced as described, the expenditure of fuel and the wear and tear of the ship may be saved.

The friends of the late Vice-Admiral Ross have commenced a subscription for the purpose of erecting a monument to his memory, in the chapel of the Royal Naval Hospital, where he was the resident commissioner, and subsequently superintendent, for many years. About £50 have been already subscribed for the purpose at Plymouth.

THE WAR MEDAL.—It is understood that the Government have consented to give further retrospective effect in the grant of a medal, and that this new arrangement will include the campaign in Egypt.

THE RETIREMENT SCHEME FOR COAST-GUARD OFFICERS.—The following are the regulations to be observed in carrying out the arrangements for the retired list for Lieutenants of the Royal navy serving in the coast-guard, authorised by Treasury letter, May 3., 1849:—"The retired list is to be limited to 30 Lieutenants. The first 10 to receive £30 per annum each; the remaining 20 to receive £20 per annum each. The qualification shall not be less than ten years of creditable and approved service in the coast-guard. No officer shall be eligible for this retirement until, from advancing years, or failure of health, he is no longer capable of performing efficiently the duties of relief officer in the coast-guard, to be certified to it o board by the Comptroller-General of the Coast-guard. No officer to be entitled to benefit by this measure who quitted the coast-guard prior to the date authorising the same (viz. 31st May, 1849). No officer who may hereafter re enter the coast-guard to be allowed to reckon former service as part of the required ten years. Time served as Lieutenant in command of a cruiser to reckon as coast-guard time. No officer to be continued on the retired coast-guard list after receiving promotion to Commander's rank, or being appointed to the out-pension of Greenwich Hospital. The officers will succeed by rotation to the £30 per annum list, as vacancies occur.

BARRACKS.—According to an official return, it is shown that in Great Britain there are 102 permanent and 16 temporary barracks, constructed to contain 57,509 men; and in Ireland there are 70 barrack-yards, 57 permanent and eleven temporary barracks, constructed to contain 1638 officers and 33,854 men

ARMY PRIZE MONEY.—An account has just been printed of the unclaimed army prize money from the 30th January, 1809, to the 31st December, 1848, and directed to be annually laid before Parliament. On the debtor side it appears that the amount arising from forfeited and unclaimed shares of prize money, grants, &c., was £1,094,632 8s. 10d., and from dividends or interest of money invested in the public funds, £233,170 0s. 4d., making together, £1,327,362 8s. 2d. On the credit side, the account stands thus: Refunded to claimants, £677 855. 2s. 7d.; by expenses, £57,124 8s. 4d.; by sums paid for Chelsea Hospital, in diminution of the annual vote, £586,117 10s. 10d.; and balance, £5644 10s. 33d.

LAW INTELLIGENCE

PREROGATIVE COURT

IN RE MARY RUSH, DECEASED.—On Tuesday Dr. Addams renewed his application, made on a former day, in reference to a will upon which probate had been granted. The testatrix was Mrs. Mary Rush, the mother of the nurserymen of Messrs. Jermy, in Norfolk, who propounded the will in question purporting to be that of his deceased mother, in which he had altered his original disposition of the testatrix's property; and with reading, on the affidavit of Emily Sandford, was asserted to have been forged by Rush. The Court, on a former day, had declined revoking its act upon the sole evidence of Emily Sandford. He now offered affidavits made by two gentlemen of high respectability, and he had no doubt the Court would grant the application.—The Court was satisfied with the evidence before it, and granted the application, revoking the will propounded, and admitting the one now offered.—The children are the legatees under the will. By it they are to receive their legacies upon their arriving at age. By the forged will they would not receive their legacies until the youngest child arrived at the age of twenty-one

POLICE.

CHARGE OF BIGAMY AGAINST LOLA MONTES.

This lady, who is also known as the Countess of Landsfeldt, was on Monday last brought before the Bench, at Marlborough-street Police Office, charged with the offence of bigamy, in marrying lately Mr. Heald, a young officer in the Guards. The office was crowded

About half-past one o'clock, the Countess of Landsfeldt, leaning on the arm of Mr. Heald, her present husband, came into court, and was accommodated with a seat in front of the bar. Mr. Heald also was allowed to have a chair beside her. The lady appeared quite unembarrassed, and smiled several times at the bar, and to remarks to her husband. She was stated to be twenty-four years of age on the police-sheet, but has the look of a woman of at least thirty. She was dressed in black silk, with close-fitting black velvet jacket, a plain black velvet bonnet trimmed with blue, and a blue veil. In figure she is rather plump, and of middle height; of pale dark complexion; the lower part of the features symmetrical, the upper part not so good, owing to rather prominent cheek-bones, but set off by a pair of unusually large blue eyes, with long black lashes. Her reputed husband, Mr. Heald, is a tall young man, of juvenile figure and aspect, with straight hair, and small light brown mustachios and whiskers, and rather weak.

Mr. Clarkson, who appeared for the prosecution, stated that the proceedings were instituted at the instance of Miss Heald, the aunt, and for some time guardian of the accused, of the young man who has married the "Countess," and who is the son of the late well-known Mr. James Heald, of the Chancery bar. The ground of the charge was that the "Countess" is the wife of Thomas James, now Captain in the 53rd Regiment of Bengal Native Foot, who is at this time with his regiment in India; and that, knowing her husband, Captain James, was alive, or that every reasonable ground existed for believing he was alive, she, on the 19th of July last, contracted another marriage with the "young gentleman" of the Guards, who has got property to the amount of between £6000 and £7000 a year. At the time of his marriage, Mr. James was a Lieutenant in the regiment of which he is now captain, and to which he has always belonged. He was married in Ireland, and from the certificate of the clergyman who married him at Meath, in that country, it appeared that, on the 23rd of July, 1837, Thomas James, of the East India Company's Service, a Lieutenant of the 21st Regiment, was married to Rose Anne Gilbert, spinster, the lady at the bar. She accompanied Mr. James to India, and subsequently returned, a divorce having been obtained a mensâ et thoro.

The present proceedings were without the consent of Mr. Heald.

The following evidence was adduced.

Miss Heald, an aged lady, was called. She said: My name is Susannah Heald, of Heald-ington Grove, Hornsey-lane, Islenhalm. I am unmarried, and am sister to the late Mr. George Heald, Chancery barrister. The young gentleman is my nephew, and son of my late brother. He has a commission in the army. I was appointed as his guardian by the Court of Chancery. He became of age in January last. I have felt it to be my duty to prosecute this inquiry.

Thomas Howard Montague, clerk in the Consistory Court, produced the record of the proceedings in the suit James v. James. The decree of the Court was a divorce from bed and board. Witness had a copy of the sentence.

The Countess of Landsfeldt, with an impatient gesture, said, "I don't deny it."

Mr. Clarkson read the decree of separation, which was dated the 13th December, 1844. It decreed that Thomas James and Eliza Rose Anne James be separated, but that neither party have power to contract another marriage during lifetime.

Frederick Danvers, clerk in the East India House, produced a copy of the return of the effective state of the army in India, made up to the 13th of June last. At the period of that return Captain James was alive, and in India with his regiment.

The marriage with Mr Heald having been proved,

Police Sergeant Gray: I am a police sergeant in the detective force. I took the Countess into custody this morning, about nine o'clock, at No. 27, Hailmoon-street. The Countess was in the passage, just about to get into her carriage. I told her she must consider herself in my custody on a charge of bigamy, she having intermarried with Mr. Heald, her former husband, Captain James, being alive. The Countess replied she had been divorced from Captain James by act of Parliament. The Countess said, "I don't know whether Captain James is alive or not, and I don't care. I was married in a wrong name, and I have married again wrongly. What will the King say? Lord Brougham was present when a divorce was granted, and Captain Osborne can prove it."

Inspector Wall confirmed the police-sergeant's statement.

Captain Osborne, of the Bengal Native Infantry, East India trader. Had brought Mrs. James from India. Had no doubt the lady in court was the same person, though since that time she had altered considerably. Had seen Captain James with her as his wife on board the ship. Left India the year 1841 or 1842, witness did not know which, but could easily refer to his books.

This was the case for the prosecution.

Mr. Bodkin appeared on behalf of the lady. As far as the proof had gone, he was willing to admit enough had been laid before the Court to justify further inquiry. At the proper time, however, he should be prepared to show that the marriage with Mr. Heald was a bona fide one. They would seem that the lady had been married when about fifteen or sixteen years old, and that a divorce had taken place. It was evident that the lady had a strong impression that a divorce till had been obtained in the House of Lords. That, however, might be a mistake into which the lady would be likely to fall, from her not being acquainted with our laws.

The case was remanded for further inquiry, the lady being released from custody on giving as bail for her appearance on a future day two sureties of £500 each, and herself £1000.

MANSION HOUSE.

CAUTION TO RAILWAY TRAVELLERS.—A case of railway robbery was brought on Tuesday before Alderman Gibbs, which revealed, in the course of the evidence, a fact of some importance to the public. The prisoner, Samuel Gomes, a former servant of the Eastern Counties Railway, was charged by Mr. George Cole Francis, a farmer, from Yorkshire, with stealing a carpet-bag, containing property to the value of £5.—The prisoner was committed for trial.—Some of the witnesses stated that it was now become a common custom with thieves to travel by railway, carrying with them a carpet-bag containing articles of no value, and seizing, at the first opportunity, any other that resembled it. On being taken into the police-station, they would seem that the lady had advanced, and often with success, for the premeditated theft.

GUILDHALL.

THE SECRETS OF TRADE.—On Wednesday, two men, named Richard Hayes and Robert Nixon, were placed at the bar for the fourth time, under the following circumstances: Mr. George Plimoff, of 153, Fleet-street, bookseller, and publisher of the "Illustrated London News," had brought an action against one Bishop, of Oxford-street, sent word to say that he had purchased one of the numbers of "Robbins's Rome," at a sale by auction, containing a description of the party. Witness, after some trouble, succeeded in tracing Hayes to the White Horse public-house, in Poland-street, where he charged him with stealing the book, which he denied, saying that he had bought it of a man who was about dead for two pots of beer in a public-house. That man proved to be the prisoner Nixon. Several witnesses were in attendance who had purchased books of the prisoners, and Mr. Spokes, a bookseller in Holborn, and Mr. Plimoff, identified the books as sold and having been stolen from them. A rather amusing scene arose on a question being put to the persons buying, whether they ought not to have had some suspicion, when the books were offered for sale, that they could not have been come by honestly, the losers of the property contending that Hayes was no buyer at sales, and therefore they should have been wide awake on the subject; while the purchasers, with equal warmth, said that they knew him and had for years in the trade, and had seen him purchase books, and from that fact they had no suspicion. Hereupon Mr. Plimoff and Mr. Spokes retorted that certainly he had now and then bought a shilling book, but he was not in a position to "deal" with those who dealt largely. After the case had settled to the amusement of the persons present, were a little enlightened upon the subject of book auctions or "knock ins," as they are technically termed, from which it would appear that the booksellers were driven by the name of "the family," who sent, as Hayes, and persons like him, were called "lambs." When a gentleman's library was to be disposed of, an understanding was come to between "the family" and "the lambs," that the latter, for a consideration, should abstain from attending to bid while "the family" attended the auction, and perhaps one or two of them would bid for the whole lot, which, when knocked down, were afterwards conveyed to a public-house, and a distribution took place of the many duplicates that there by sale, which was called the "profit and loss," or "knock in," inasmuch as each party suited himself with respect to what books he wanted at the compet tion amongst themselves, and the profits or gains were divided amongst them. And a certain sum given to each "lamb," who would sometimes purchase a few books, that "the family" thought beneath their notice, for a shilling or two. Hayes, in defence, still persisted that he purchased the "History of Rome" and the "Pickwick Papers" from Nixon, while he strenuously denied everything proved against him; but on its being shown that he was a well-known thief, and had been transported, he confessed that he had been a bad character, but was now an honest man. Alderman Carden, after taking a great deal of pains with the case, ultimately sentenced them to two months' imprisonment each, Nixon as the thief, and Hayes as the receiver.

THE EARL OF CLARENDON.

George William Frederick Villiers, Earl of Clarendon, G.C.B., Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, has long held a distinguished position in public estimation. Early attached to the diplomatic service, his Lordship became eventually Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of Madrid, and gained considerable reputation by the ability he displayed in that arduous and important situation. After his return from Spain, he held office as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Lord Privy Seal. He succeeded Lord Besborough as Viceroy of Ireland, in 1847. His Lordship was born 26th of January, 1800, and inherited the family honours at the decease of his uncle, December, 1838. In the following year he married Lady Catherine Barham, daughter of the Earl of Verulam, and has issue several sons and daughters.

The pedigree of the Earl of Clarendon is a very interesting one. In the male line, his Lordship descends from Sir Edward Villiers, President of Munster, elder brother of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, the celebrated favourite of King James I.; and, through female heirship, from Henry Hyde, Earl of Rochester and Clarendon, whose father, Lawrence Hyde, first Earl of Rochester, was appointed in 1700 to the same office as that now so ably administered by his descendant, the Lord-Lieutenancy of Ireland. This Earl of Rochester must not be confounded with the witty but profligate bearer of the title at the licentious court of the merry Monarch. The latter was John Wilmot, a descendant of the Lord Wilmot of Athlone; whereas Lawrence Hyde was second son of the great Lord Clarendon, the historian of the Civil War. The title of Clarendon is derived from a spacious park, near Salisbury, noted as the place where Henry II. summoned the Great Council of Peers and Prelates, from which emanated the celebrated regulations so well known in history as "the Constitutions of Clarendon."

HIS EXCELLENCY THE EARL OF CLARENDON, K.G., G.C.B., LORD-LIEUTENANT GENERAL AND GOVERNOR-GENERAL OF IRELAND.

ROYAL VISITS TO IRELAND.

The following record of Royal Visits previous to that of her present Majesty is of timely interest:—

October 18, 1171, Henry II. arrived at Crook, near Waterford, in Ireland, with a large army, having sailed two days previously from Milford Haven with a fleet of four hundred ships.

He proceeded immediately to Waterford, and from thence to Lismore, Cashel, and Carrick-on-Suir, receiving everywhere the submission of the Kings and chieftains of the country.

He then marched with his army to Dublin, and kept the Christmas of 1171 there with the greatest magnificence entertaining all the Irish chiefs, whom he astonished by his state and numerous retinue. Henry purposed to remain in Ireland during the ensuing summer, to effect the subjugation of the more remote parts; but, being summoned to Normandy to meet the Pope's nuncios, who had arrived to inquire into the death of Becket, he left suddenly, sailing from Wexford on Easter Monday, April 12, and arrived the same day at Portfinnan in Wales.

John was the next Monarch who visited Ireland. Having plundered the Jews and other wealthy merchants of England, of money, to meet the expenses of his trip, he sailed from Haverfordwest with a large army, on June 3, 1210; and, after twelve days' passage, landed near Waterford; proceeding through Thomastown and Kilkenny, he hastened to Dublin, where he remained but two days, and then set out for the north. On the 15th of July he reached Carrickfergus, remaining there for ten days. He then returned to Dublin, through all the chief towns that lay in his route; and sailed from thence on the 24th of August, arriving safely, in two days, at Fisgard, in Wales.

Nearly 200 years elapsed before another Sovereign visited Ireland. Richard II. arrived there, July, 1394, with a large army; and, having held his Court in great style in Dublin for nine months, returned again to England.

In 1399 this Monarch again went to Ireland with an immense army, accompanied by his uncles and Prince Henry, afterwards Henry V. of England. After five months spent in useless parade, he was suddenly summoned to England by the rebellion of Lancaster, by which event he lost his kingdom and his life.

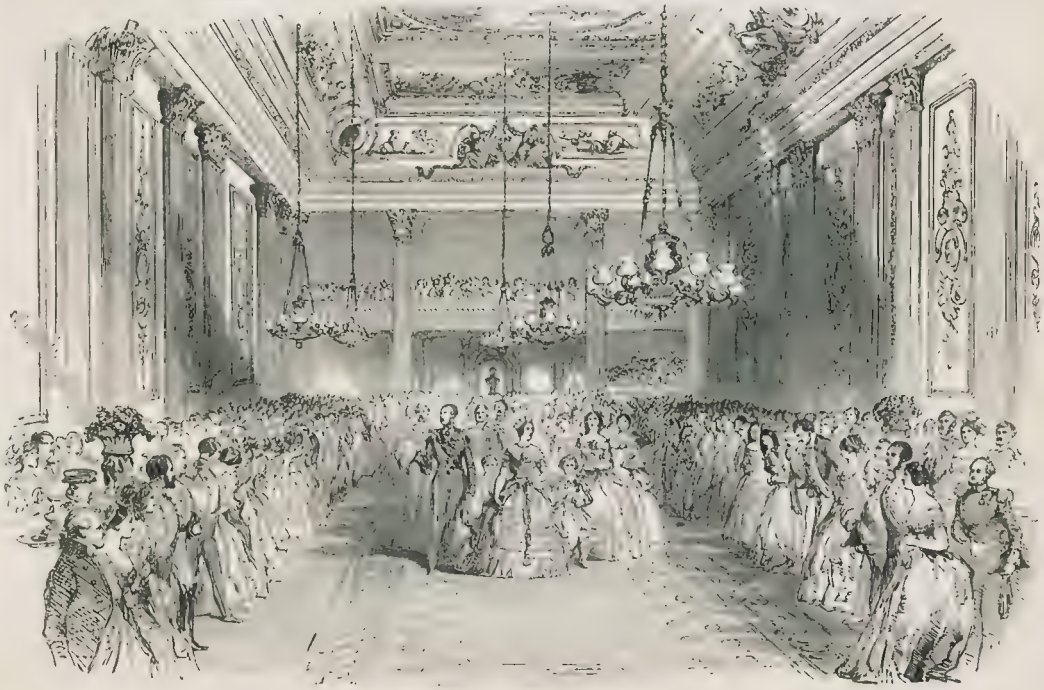
In March, 1689, James II. arrived from France at Kinsale, in the county of Cork, to make a last stand for his kingdom. Proceeding to Dublin he held a Parliament, and remained there until June, 1690, when he led out his army to meet William III., who was rapidly advancing towards him. The battle of the Boyne decided his fate, and he fled in haste to Waterford, where he embarked, July 3rd, for France, leaving his kingdom to his victorious son-in-law.

William III. arrived at Carrickfergus, June 16, 1690, and on the 1st of July fought the battle which decided the fate of Britain. After a short stay he left to take possession of his English throne; and it was not until George the Fourth's visit, in 1821, that Ireland was honoured again with the presence of Royalty, July 31, 1821, the King sailed from Portsmouth in the Royal yacht, but, owing to unfavourable weather, did not arrive in Ireland until August 12. Here he remained until the 6th of September when he embarked in state at Kingstown. The public demonstrations with which it was intended to receive the King were in some degree prevented by the Queen's death, which took place during his Majesty's voyage.

It is curious, that, during the greater number of Royal visits to Ireland, the weather should have been unusually boisterous and unpropitious.

We have said nothing of Cromwell's invasion, because it cannot be looked upon as a Royal one; besides, it is remembered in Ireland only with horror and would stir up feelings there which had better be permitted to slumber.

The Monarchs who visited Ireland previous to their accession to the throne we shall content ourselves with naming they were, John, Edward I., Henry V Henry VIII., and William IV.



SAINT PATRICK'S HALL IN THE CASTLE, DUBLIN.

SAINT PATRICK'S HALL.

THROUGH this superb apartment her Majesty passed to hold the Drawing-room, in the Throne Room of the Castle. The Hall is a very fine room, 80 feet long, 41 feet wide, and 38 feet high. The ceiling is painted and divided into three parts; the central one, which is circular, represents George the Third, supported by Liberty and Justice: the rectangles at each end exhibit, the one the Conversion of the Native Irish by Saint Patrick; the other, the Submission of the Irish Chieftains to Henry the Second.

MUSIC.

ITALIAN OPERA IN DUBLIN.—A series of Italian operas will be given in Dublin in September on a grand scale. The artistes engaged are Mdlle. Corbari, Mdlle Luigia Corbari, and Mdlle. Alboni; Mr. Sims Reeves, Signori Bartolini, Polonini, and Tagliafico. Benedict will be the conductor. The party will also give concerts in Scotland and the large towns of England.

ITALIAN OPERA IN ST. PETERSBURGH.—The engagements for the season 1849 and 1850, beginning in October next, comprise Gris, Madame Frezzolini, Mdle. Corbari, and Mdlle. de Merlo; Mario and Gardoni, tenors; Coletti and Tamburini, baritones; Rossi, basso comico; and Signor Tagliafico, basso profondo.

ITALIAN OPERA AT THE HAVANNAH.—The season will commence in the autumn, with Mdlle. Steffanoni, Madame Bosio, and Mdlle Cosine, prime donne; Signor Bellini, comprimario; Salvi, Ferretti, and Lorini, tenors; Badiali and Corradi-Setti, as barytones; and Marini, basso profondo. Signor Bottesini, the contra-bassist, is the director and conductor.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S

"Linda di Chamouni" has been played once more by Madame Sontag, and with increased power and dramatic energy. This opera, never successful with any singer we remember—at least, never a triumph—has been made to draw the largest audiences. There is something of malady, which comes home to the feelings of the audience sooner or later, betwixt the story of Linda, a village maiden, who conquers a title, and that of Madame Sontag; and certainly no one but her has ever represented so truthfully on the stage both pensive, that of pastoral simplicity, and that of high born elegance. The charm of Mdme. Sontag's talent, and her sway over the public, must naturally increase. Her style is of that exquisite finish, that the little delicacies, the minute traits, whether of vocal or dramatic feeling, are not observed at first, and, when once detected, they afford the key to other latent perfection.

A violent cold in the head has prevented Madame Sontag re-appearing this week in the "Nozze di Figaro," now deferred until next week. "Don Giovanni" has been replaced on the bills. The cast, with such singers as Alboni, Parodi, Gulbani, Coletti, and Gardoni, as performer itself, and the new dramatic interpretation given to the mise en scène completes it. But truly it would be worth a visit to the theatre only to behold Lablache in Leporello. His agility of person as well as of voice, his constant flow of the richest humour, never touching on the vulgar, creates, each time you behold them, greater astonishment. Lablache's interpretation of the part of Leporello is not only in keeping with the libretto of Da Ponte, but with the original comedy of Tirso de Molina. In Spain, in the version of the monkish legend, the ridiculous is, on the stage, curiously mixed up with the mock-dramatic. Don Juan invites the statue to supper, and the statue, as that of a courteous nobleman should, in its turn invites the libertine to a feast in the churchyard. The man of stone gives him a supper on a tombstone hand-in his own monument in the churchyard; the black figures on his constaph descend and help them to the dishes. Don Juan asks for wine, and when the sobbet is handed to him, and he drinks, it turns into flames. Then it is that the unreclaimable scoffer, Don Juan, asks the statue for the shake of the hand—of the right hand of fellowship; and then he himself feels he is turning into stone. Despair seizes him the Satanic imps spring up, and all descend together into the inferno.

Lablache's acting is in keeping with the Spanish style. He is the gracioso: his terror is as real as it is ludicrous; and instead of taking from the terrors of the drama, only adds to them by contrast. On Tuesday he was in most admirable volume, whilst his singing is such as he alone can produce.

For three last nights of the season at Her Majesty's Theatre will occur next week. For the first night, Tuesday, Mozart's great work, the "Nozze di Figaro," will be produced. In this opera, Mdme. Sontag (who will perform every night) will appear, for the first time, as Susanna. The cast is powerful beyond example, including Sontag, Persiani, and Alboni; Lablache, Beletti, and Coletti. Saturday, the 18 h inst., is the last night of the season. On the alloday fo lowing, the principal members of the troupe, with Mdme. Sontag at their head, leave to perform at Manchester.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Saturday night the "Huguenots" of Meyerbeer was performed or the twelfth time this season. Grisi's Valentina, Mario's Raoul, Marini's Marcel, and Angri's Page reaped their usual harvest of honours. This opera, of all others, is executed splendidly executed, and the delight of the audience proved that the great success of "Le Prophète" had not diminished in any degree the popularity of the "Huguenots."

The sixth representation of "Le Prophète," on Tuesday night, surpassed in the perfection of the ensemble every previous performance. A decided improvement was evident in many portions of the sublime work, which daily makes way in public estimation. Like all Meyerbeer's productions, more than one hearing is requisite to comprehend his colossal conceptions and elaborate details. It is not a bar of the exquisite instrumentation which has not its meaning at first hearing on the action of the opera; and so varied and ever-changing are the subjects, that constant attention is required not to miss the beauties of the orchestration. The general impression is now that the first act is the dramatic and powerful as the two last acts. There has been a marked reaction certainly in respect to the first act, which was comparatively but coldly appreciated on the first night. The concentration of the interest in "Le Prophète" is one of its finest attributes. We still think that the divertissement of the second act, however indispensable to please a Parisian audience, might be considerably curtailed; and, indeed, if confined to the "Quadrille des Patineurs," would be amply sufficient. The solemnity which Marco now infuses into the finale of this act, whilst singing the "Prayer," and the intensity which he throws into the song of triumph, in ordering the march on Munster, create the most powerful sensation. Mario's magnificent voice, and intellectual and impassioned acting in Jean of Leyden, render the impersonation one of the most remarkable performances of the modern lyric stage. Since the great days of Nourrit and Duprez, nothing so vivid, striking, and truthful has been seen as Mario's Jean of Leyden. The touching and beautiful delineation of Fidès by Viardot is evidenced in the sympathies and tears of her auditory. Her histrionic and vocal genius has soared to a sublimity; the holy sentiment of maternal love elevates the character and Viardot's assumption invests it with the most intense interest. Her classical and commanding attitudes in the air of imprecation tell with thrilling effect. The coronation scene between her and Mario is so terribly in earnest, and is so exciting, that the audience is apt to overlook her wonderful powers in the prison scene during the opening scena and subsequent duo with Mario. After the heart-stricken mother has pardoned the Prophet, Fidès's hearing of the entire sum is given with graphic force by Viardot. Mario's final drinking song, "Beviam," mightily cheered, is one of those catching melodies which irresistably haunts the memory; it is sung by him with astounding energy, despite of the fatigue of such a long and arduous part. Owing to an attack of inflammation in the throat, Miss Catherine Hayes was compelled to omit nearly the whole of her music on Tuesday night, and she could only come on the stage in the first act, having kindly consented in order to prevent a change of opera. We regret this indisposition of the fair artiste, as she was making great progress in the part of Berta.

HAYMARKET.

The Adelphi company commenced their campaign at this theatre on Monday, according to announcement, with "The Green Scenes," "A most unwarrantable Intrusion," and "The Dancing Barber."

ASTLEY'S.

On Monday, after the military spectacle of "Mooltan and Goojerat," M. Jean Blanc re appeared in "Le Globe Roulant." A new equestrian bal masqué was produced, with a pas de quatre, the characters in costumes from "Le Prophète." The performances included fifty horses and ponies, with, it is stated, every equestrian and gymnastic artiste in the establishment. The effect was gorgeous. During the week, too, Marie Macarte and Herr Henrie have both exhibited their wonderful and beautiful equestrian feats

BURFORD'S PANORAMA.

A view of the Valley and City of Cashmere—from the drawings of G. T. Vigne, Esq.—is now exhibiting at this establishment. It has peculiar claims on the public patronage, being indeed a beautiful gallery picture, painted in the finest oil colour and varnish, and highly interesting by association.

"Who has not heard," says Moore—

> Of the vale of Cashmere,
> With its roses the brightest that earth ever gave;
> Its temples, and grottoes, and fountains as clear
> As the waters which sparkle around them to-day?

Here is the whole poetic scene realised—the Arcadia of Asia, perchance of the world! The Mahomedans believe it to be the first Paradise; the Hindu declares that there, countless ages back, the world was renewed by the creation of man. Picturesque mountains, richly-clothed hills, lakes and rivers, the majestic and the simply here combine, with a delicious climate, to make the spot a perfect garden, blessed with an eternal spring. The floating gardens, so numerous on the lakes, are prominent objects, and, with the city and the valley, reposing in the soft sunlight; while the windings of the river Jylum, or the Augustus Hydaspes, with its well-adjusted proportions, suggest to the mind that Art has here come to the help of Nature, and ornamented the landscape with her finest care.

The scene is varied by some human figures, exhibiting the picturesque and splendid costume of the Sikh chiefs, together with groups of Europeans, including Mr. Vigne himself, Lord Arthur Hay, Captain Cunningham, Lord Elphinstone, Hon. C. S. Hardinge, Dr. Henderson, and Colonel Sir C. M. Wade, C.B.; and certain native persons, such as the "Women of Kashmir and Lidak," and the "Shepherds from the Mountains of the East;" all which impart animation and motion to the else quiet retreat, where the soul might slumber in a contentment drawn for ever. We can emphatically commend this delightful scene to the lover of natural beauty. While contemplating it, however, it will be well to recollect that, within the last twenty years, it has suffered from earthquakes, from pestilence, and from famine; and that, completely ravaged by the Sikhs, it is now in the greatest possible degradation and poverty.

ROME.—At the Polytechnic Institution on Tuesday, we were introduced to an interesting series of twelve dissolving views representative of the Eternal City. We are glad to record that a hint of ours, suggested a week or two ago, has been apparently taken. The exhibition was accompanied by an explanatory discourse, well delivered by Mr. J. Emsell. The lecture was abundant in knowledge of the subject. Toulon, Civita Vecchia, the ville of Monte Mario, the Tiber, the Bridge and Castle of St. Angelo, Mount Aventine, Ponte Molle, Ancona, the Piazza del Popolo, and Ferrara, are among the views exhibited.

MUSICAL REVIEW.

LEZIONI DI CANTO DI GIACENTO MARRAS. Leader and Cock.

Signor Marras has been long known in this country as one of our most popular concert singers. A deficiency of physical power has alone prevented him from occupying a prominent position on the lyric stage; but his refined and finished style of vocalization has gained him deserved celebrity, and, as a singing-master, his abilities have been much in request in the aristocratic circles. He has now given to the world the fruits of his long experience, in two books of lessons, for the exercise of the voice. These lessons are not a series of dry and monotonous solfa exercises, but are elegant vocal compositions, with poetry, for the effective interpretation of every style, whether it be sacred, dramatic, chamber, or national music. Signor Marras assumes the foil wing just reasons for his system:—"I consider that to take from the study of the voice the delightful expression of the words, is to deprive it of its greatest charm: their happy interpretation not only increases the natural beauties of the voice, but gives rise to that deep feeling which is the origin of the sweetest accents, and by which both voice and style are spontaneously elevated to the sublime."

In looking over these lessons, their graceful feeling cannot be mistaken, and the object of the composer to render the study of singing poetical, instead of heavy, mechanical, and tiresome, has been ably accomplished. There is, however, one suggestion we would make to Signor Marras, for his adoption when he will have to publish a fresh edition of his admirable work: translations should be given of the Italian directions at the head of each lesson, and of the words The circulation of the "Lezioni" can now only be confined to the students acquainted with Italian, or having an Italian professor as master; but the instructions, if printed in English, would render the book accessible to the musical world in general.

LITERATURE.

THE HOLY BIBLE, containing the Old and New Testaments, according to the Authorised Version: with Explanatory Notes, Practical Observations, and copious Marginal References, by THOMAS SCOTT, Rector of Aston Sanford, Bucks. (New Edition.) 5 vols. 4to. See Cy, Burnside, and Seeley.

This edition of Scott's laboriously annotated and highly esteemed Family Bible, has just been issued, at an extraordinarily reduced price, which renders its possession within the means of the middle classes, and an especial boon to "all who desire to study the Scriptures accurately and deeply." This reprint has the high advantage of the referenced author's last corrections and improvements, and is illuminated with 84 maps and engravings. The latter consist of very finely-executed engravings on wood, and are chiefly localities consecrated as the sites of great events in Holy Writ; some of them of considerable delicacy and beautiful finish. To such obvious advantages we need scarcely add our recommendation to the reader to avail himself of the circumstances under which this valuable work is now presented to the public.

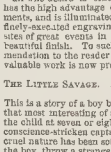
THE LITTLE SAVAGE. By CAPTAIN MARRYAT, R.N. In Two Parts. Hurst and Co.

This is a story of a boy being left alone upon an uninhabited island, written in that most interesting of all forms, an autobiography. The narrative starts with the child at seven or eight years old; he is located upon a grand island, with a conscience-stricken captain, whose death-bed confessions, when his sullen and cruel nature has been softened by suffering on his part, and kindness on that of the boy, throw a strange light upon the history of the latter. The progress of his mind his self-taught acquaintance with books, and his primitive notions of good and evil are, so to speak, a sketch of normal nature; and this is an ingenious portion of the book, which will attract many by its "natural growth." The youthful solitaire reading through the Bible, and his fascination with the pictures in a book on Natural History, are impressive incidents of the sojourn upon the island; and the "little savage's" adventures there, together with the introduction of a missionary among the natives who have wrecked upon the island, form the main points of the story. It is admirably written; and, in style, as well as incidents, has much of the spirit of Defoe, but with a higher religious tone. In all probability this was the last work penned by the lamented author.

The book is liberally illustrated with wood-cuts, cleverly drawn by Mr. Marryat.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

WILLIAM JOSEPH DENISON, ESQ., M.P., OF DENBIES, COUNTY OF SURREY.



THIS highly respected and venerable gentleman who represented the county of Surrey since 1818, died at his residence in Pall mall, on the 3d inst., aged 80. His father the late Joseph Denison, Esq., of London, a banker and merchant of great eminence—realised a large fortune, and purchased considerable estates. He left, at his decease (besides the gentleman whose death we record), two daughters—Elizabeth, the wife of the first Marquis of Conyngham; and Maria, married to Sir Robert Lawley, Bart., created in 1831 Baron Wenlock. The late member for Surrey (who continued as head of the banking house of Denison and Co.) was patron of two livings, and acted as a magistrate for the counties of Surrey and Yorkshire. In politics, he was a staunch Whig.

RICHARD GODSON, ESQ., Q.C., M.P.

THIS gentleman, an eminent counsel of the Oxford Circuit and member of Parliament for Kidderminster, died on the 1st inst., at Springfield Ha., Lancaster, of disease of the heart. He was born 19th of June, 1797—the fifth son of the late William Godson, Esq., one of the Masters Extraordinary for Worcestershire—and married in 1825 Mary, only daughter of the late Henry Bargreaves, Esq., of Springfield Hall. After completing his education at the University of Cambridge, where he took a wrangler's degree, he adopted the legal profession, and was called to the Bar by the Hon. Society of Lincoln's Inn in 1827. In 1831 he entered Parliament as M.P. for St. Albans; and in 1832 was elected for Kidderminster, which borough despite of contested elections in 1837, 1841, and 1849—he continued to represent until the time of his decease. In 1834 Mr. Godson became Queen's Counsel, and in 1845 received the office of Counsel to the Admiralty. He was a moderate Conservative, in favour of Free Trade.

Some years since he published a "Practical Treatise on the Law of Patents for Inventions," and on that of "Copyright," which went into a second edition, and was much approved of.

SIR CHARLES SCUDAMORE, M.D., F.R.S.

SIR CHARLES, who was third son of William Scudamore, Esq., of Wye, Kent, claimed descent, through the Kentish branch, from the ancient House of Scudamore, of Home Lacy, county of Hereford. He was born in 1779, and married in 1812 the second daughter of the late Robert Johnson, Esq.

He received his professional education at Guy's Hospital and Edinburgh, graduated at Glasgow, and was knighted when in attendance, as a physician, on the late Duke of Northumberland, at that time Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. As a medical writer, the deceased had attained some reputation; among his various works we may mention his treatise on Gout and Rheumatism, an Essay on the Blood Observations on the Use of the Stethoscope, and a treatise on Mineral Waters.

THE EX-KING OF SARDINIA.

CHARLES ALBERT AMADEUS the late ex-fortunate Monarch of Sardinia, was the son of Charles Emmanuel Duke of Savoy Carignan, and was born on the 2nd October, 1798. He succeeded his father in the Duchy of Savoy Carignan, the 16th August, 1800 and King Charles Felix in the kingdom of Sardinia the 27th April, 1831. He married, the 30th September, 1817, the Archduchess Maria Theresa, daughter of Ferdinand, Grand Duke of Tuscany, by whom he had two sons, Victor-Emmanuel, the present King of Sardinia, and Ferdinand, Duke of Genoa, and one daughter. The recent career of Charles Albert has been so much before the public, that little need be said of it here. His armed interference in favour of the revolted Italian provinces led, after much gallant display on his part, to his ultimate defeat, and his resignation of the Crown in favour of his son. He retired into Spain, and thence into Portugal, where he died on the 28th ultimo. Charles Albert was a Prince of a chivalrous, though inconsistent character, for he was formerly engaged on the side of France in putting down the Liberal party in Spain in 1823.

SIR NICHOLAS FITZSIMON, KNT., OF BROUGHALL CASTLE, KING'S-COUNTY.

THE death of Sir Nicholas Fitzsimon, Inspector-General of Prisons in Ireland, occurred at his seat, Broughall Castle, on the 31st ult., after an illness of eight days. He was born in 1807, the eldest son of the late Captain John Fitzsimon, of Castlebrack, by his wife, the eldest daughter of Count Magawly, of Frankford. He married, in 1829, Catherine, second daughter of Sir John Power, Bart., of Rockbrook House, county Dublin, but had no issue.

In 1833, he was elected M.P. for the King's County, which constituency he continued to represent until Feb., 1841, when he was appointed a magistrate of the Head Police-Office in Dublin, and knighted by Earl Fortescue, then Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. That situation Sir Nicholas held until 1848, when he became Inspector-General of Prisons.

THE HON. AUSTIN CUVILLIER

THE decease of the Hon. Austin Cuvillier, senior partner of the firm of Messrs. Cuvillier and Sons, of Montreal, took place on July 10, after an illness of only a few hours' duration. Mr. Cuvillier was seventy years of age, and for many years occupied a conspicuous position amongst the public men of Montreal. In 1815 he was returned to Parliament as member for the county of Huntingdon, and he became one of the leading members on matters relating to the finances of the country.

In 1828 he was selected, with the Hon. D. B. Viger and the late Hon. John Neilson, to lay before the Imperial Parliament the petition of 87,000 inhabitants of Lower Canada, complaining of the privation of their political rights to which they were subjected. He was examined before the Select Committee of the House of Commons, and his answers evinced a high degree of ability and a thorough knowledge of the defects of the then system.

Mr. Cuvillier continued to sit as member for Huntingdon until 1834, when he left his seat, in consequence of his differing in opinion with the majority of the House of Assembly on the celebrated Ten Resolutions.

At the first election of members of Parliament for United Canada, in 1841, Mr. Cuvillier was again returned for Huntingdon; and he had the high honour of being elected Speaker of the Legislative Assembly. This office he filled with great dignity and impartiality during the first Parliament.

In the second Parliament after the Union Mr. Cuvillier was not re-elected, in consequence of his being considered not to concur in the view taken by the Lafontaine Baldwin Administration in the rupture with Lord Metcalfe, which led to their resignation. Since that time he took no part in public affairs.

As a merchant, Mr. Cuvillier has conducted the most extensive commercial establishment, we believe, in Canada.—Abridged from the Montreal Pilot.

NEW DOMESTIC GAS LIGHT APPARATUS.

NEW DOMESTIC GAS-LIGHT APPARATUS

THIS new Light Apparatus is the invention of Mr. Mansfield. In the Illustration A is a part of the house, worked by hand, or by any source of power, by which air is driven into B, a tell-tale gasholder, which rises and falls in water contained in the vessel H. B, by its pressure, forces the air to flow through I, in a regular stream, into C, an air-tight metal vessel, containing some benzole, a highly volatile hydro-carbon. I passes into C, and dips into the liquid contained in it. The level of the liquid, when it continually removed by evaporation, is kept constant by means of another vessel above C, which is shut out from the box D. The pipe L, passing from the lower part of the vessel H to D, enters C, and ends the principle of the bird-fountain) maintains the level of the liquid in C always at the level in the mouth. So long as any agent remains in the vessel in D The mouth of L is an inch or two above the mouth of the pipe I, and is so proportioned to the bubbles of air from I cannot enter it (the mouth of L). The air having been thus "carbolised" in C, passes off by the main (K) to the service pipes (G and M), by which it is conducted to the burners—where, as at E, it is consumed, and may be turned on or off, or up and down, like common gas. The liquid in C becomes cooled by its own evaporation. The use of the small jet, F, directed again at the side of C, is to supply the calorie carried off by this means—not to "heat" the vessel C, which need never be warmer than the temperature of the human body. The apparatus is supposed to be in a cellar; G leads off to the upper rooms of the house.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The following have been appointed the Commissioners to act under the Encumbered Estates Act (Ireland): The Right Hon John Richards, third Baron of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer in Ireland; Mountiford Longfield, Esq., Q.C. and LL.D.; and C. J. Hargreave, Esq., conveyancer, of 69, Chancery lane. Baron Richards will have £1500 per annum, instead of £3000 remaining on the bench.

The Rectory of Stanford Rivers, near Romford, Essex, has become vacant by the death of the Rev Dr. Dowdeswell. It is worth £1007 per annum, and is in the gift of the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The ravages of the present war in Hungary are bitterly experienced in Pesth and Buda, where provisions are extraordinarily dear; a pound of coffee costs from 3fl. to 4fl (7½d. to 10d.); a pound of sugar from 1fl. to 5fl.; a potato 18c. to 20c. The cholera also continues to make great ravages.

The Jews of Buda have demanded that their property shall be valued, in order to prove that the contribution imposed on them by General Haynau will absorb all they have. They have announced their intention of proceeding to the United States.

M. Duchêne, responsible editor of Le Peuple, was on Saturday last, at Paris, again condemned by default to five years' imprisonment, and 6000f. fine, for having published articles on the 9th, 10th, and 11th May last, exciting the citizens to hatred of the Government, to civil war, disobedience to the laws, &c. M. Duchêne is in the prison of Sainte Pélagie, but, as on previous occasions, refused to attend the court.

A clerk in the Worcester post-office, named William Merrick, has been remanded upon a charge of stealing money letters.

On Friday week, as Lord John Scott was standing upon the race-course at Goodwood, a London pick-pocket advanced in front of his Lordship, and snatched his gold watch and chain, with which he was making off, when a party of soldiers on the ground came to Lord John's assistance, and the fellow was secured. Immediately a gang of about thirty rushed upon them, Lord John and the soldiers were beat off, the fellow rescued, and the party got clear away, carrying with them his Lordship's property.

A return "of the amount paid into the Treasury, in each year for the last five years, for the tax on dogs in England and Wales," gives for the year ending Jan. 5, 1845, £137,946; 1846, £146,037; 1847, £135,960; 1848, £137,774; 1849, £127,927.

The bill which was in Parliament to effect the abolition of the Grand Jury system within the metropolitan police district was amongst the measures abandoned for the present year.

The following robberies of plate were effected in the metropolis on Monday, viz.—the residence of the Hon. Mrs. Denman, 16, Eaton-square, was plundered of silver plate, valued at £90 (crest, a cat with a mouse in its mouth); from K. Ford Fortescue, Esq., No. 3, Gloucester-road, Peckham, a jewel-case, the contents valued at £300; and from Mr. Clark, at the same residence, plate, valued at £110.

James Galwey, Esq., of Dungarvan, has been appointed Inspector-General of Prisons in Ireland, in the room of Mr. Nicholas Pleasants.

The King of Naples has lent his war-steamer Delfino to Austria, for the purpose of assisting in the blockade against Venice.

The King of Prussia has conferred the crosses of the orders of Military Merit and of the Red Eagle on the Prince of Prussia, and the latter order on the Prince Frederick Charles of Prussia.

The fixed batteries of the Royal Artillery were on Tuesday inspected at Woolwich, by Sir Thomas Downman, C.B., who expressed his satisfaction at the clean and soldier-like appearance of the men, and at the general order of their equipment.

On Tuesday evening, about nine o'clock, a fire broke out on the premises of Halliday, furniture dealer, of No. 82, Long-acre, which destroyed several hundred pounds' worth of property, and injured the wine-vaults of the adjoining house. The origin of the fire is not known.

In consequence of the increase of the cholera, the general Board of Health has made additional provision in the medical service for the relief of the poor who may be attacked by the malady. The regulations extend both to town and country.

On Saturday, July 21, a bottle was washed on shore at Queensborough, Kent. It contained a slip of paper, evidently hastily torn off a serial publication, written with lead-pencil, and related to that ill-fated steam-ship the Franconia, the board of which was the late lamented actor Power. It stated that the immediate destruction of the vessel and passengers was inevitable. The slip of paper is in the possession of the landlord of the first public-house, Northside, Queensborough.

Poor Wadlow, who for upwards of thirty years officiated as box-keeper at Her Majesty's Theatre, and in the same capacity at the French Plays since their establishment by Mr. Mitchell, died on Sunday morning, at his residence at Acton, from an attack of cholera.

At Alton, on the Mississippi, such is the fear of the cholera, that the inhabitants have placed cannon on the wharf to prevent the landing of the emigrants until they have been examined.

Major-General Henry Daubenny, C.B., has succeeded to the £200 per annum reward for distinguished services, from the 26th of June. The services of the Major-General date from 1796, when he was employed at the taking of the Cape of Good Hope, and the capture of the Dutch fleet in Saldanha Bay. For many years subsequently he served in the East Indies, and on his return was sent with the expedition to Walcheren.

The Lords of the Admiralty have sanctioned the purchase at once and for the use of the Royal Dockyard Chapel at Woolwich, but the cost of the instrument is not to exceed £60.

The new quay at Dover is so far finished, that, last week, the French mail packet landed the mails and passengers at the low-water landing-quay, just constructed at the Boom-house. This quay, together with the deepening of the harbour's mouth, will form an important convenience both to the continental and coasting steamers, as it will allow them to land and embark passengers at all but dead low water.

The Right Hon. the Lord Mayor, Sir J. Duke, and suite, and several suites of distinction, embarked at St. Katharine's Wharf on Saturday evening, on board the General steam Navigation Company's steam ship, Clarence, for Edinburgh.

The merchant-ship the Dreadnought sailed on Tuesday from Gravesend, with 120 cabin, intermediate, and steerage passengers, for Port Natal, being the third vessel despatched this season for the rising colony of Natal, South Africa, by Mr. J. C. Byrne, since he obtained those concessions from the Emigration Commissioners that have enabled him to confer land in the vale of passage money, a steerage passenger acquiring 20 acres for £10, priority of choice being secured according to the date of entrance on each ship's books. The Commissioners have extended the concession so as to embrace 2000 adults, instead of 500, the original number.

There was launched on Saturday afternoon, from the building-yard of Mr. Robert Napier, Govan (Glasgow), a splendid new steam-ship, named the Bolivar. This fine vessel is the property of the Pacific Steam Navigation Company. She is built of iron; is 200 feet in length, 27 feet beam, measures 700 tons burden, and is propelled by side-lever engines of 300 horse power. She will be the largest vessel in the service.

The Queen has been graciously pleased to appoint James Graham, Esq., now British Vice-Consul at Venice, to be her Majesty's Consul at Portland, in the United States of North America.

An extensive flight of that somewhat rare and very curious bird, the common crossbill, has just made its appearance in the fir plantations of Pensenden-heath, Maidstone. They were first seen on July 24, and appear to be family parties composed of parent birds and young ones of this year. These birds—that as at very irregular periods, and sometimes with intervals of many years.

The emigration from Clyde during the first six months of the present year has exceeded that of any former season. The numbers who have emigrated have been:—Cabin passengers, 317; steerage passengers, 10,243: total, 10,560. Of these, 7630 have gone to the United States, 2653 to Canada and the North American colonies, and the remainder to Australia, and the East and West Indies. The description of people emigrating has been much superior to those of former years.

The Samuel Enderby, belonging to the South Sea Whale Fishery Company, went down the river on Tuesday, and will call at Plymouth to embark Mr Charles Enderby, F.R.S., appointed Governor of the Auckland Islands. The Samuel Enderby takes out an experienced surgeon for the service of the company, and one appointed by the Government for the Auckland Islands; also a surveyor and a number of artificers for the new colony. OUR MAGAZINE COLUMN FOR AUGUST.

DESERTED SPA.

Poor, pretty, gay, melancholy Spa! It is like a funeral festivity at which people make merry over the dead. The glory of Spa has long since gone by. Sir Francis Head gave it the finishing blow—the last knock on the head. All the world used to go to Spa formerly; all the world goes now to Nassau, where they have already added a new brunnen to the old list, or to Kissengen or Grandchenery. Spa, that once attracted the whole fashion of Europe, is now merely the spectre of its ancient self; retaining its outlines of its old charms, its air of elegance and jaunty grace, as far as a skeleton can be supposed to represent the brightness and vivacity of youth. Spa still has its visitors from different countries, but only just enough to indicate its decline. The famous Redoubt is still here, but it is almost empty. The promenades are still preserved, but the carriages and once animated town are gone. The change is striking, coming back upon what Spa once was. A hundred years ago, all diseases, from the spleen upwards, were sent to Spa. The grand tour was nothing if it did not include Spa. The education of a gentleman of high breeding was unfinished if he had not visited Spa. All the crowned heads of Europe made pilgrimages to Spa. Peter the Great derived so much benefit from the waters that he built a pump-room and a colonnade over the Pouhon spring in testimony of his gratitude. The Duchess of Orleans, wife of Egalité, in like manner erected a little souvenir, which, being destroyed in course of time, was replaced by Louis Philippe. Spa was the rendezvous of kings and ministers—the only rendezvous where could cluster interests and men on a neutral ground. All the old comedies continued in pleasant allusions to Spa, which was as essential to the fashionable life of the day as Epsom or Tunbridge at home. There is nothing of all this left but the name.—Bentley's Miscellany.

MUSICAL COMPETITIONS IN BELGIUM.

In conformity with a lively Belgian custom, one day of the late Kermesse of Mechlin, on July 2, was devoted to grand musical competitions. Every town and village has its harmonic society; and upon such occasions as these each musical confraternity, with band playing and colours flying, marches into the place from every adjacent one, and the rivalry that ensues between these various bodies gives rise to some twelve hours' unremitting performance of symphonies of almost invariable merit. Daily concerts, also, took place in the Botanical Gardens; not, as such a name generally implies, huge concentrations of the beauty of individuals, private as well as public, within, and the Bible and Crown without. Theodore Hook had many good points, ever and above his extraordinary power of humour, and we feel that Aristophanes must have had many more, but no one would think of extolling the journalist for his keen moral perception, scrupulous candour, or zealous regard for religion; and that judgment must be far more penetrating, that charity far more simple-hearted and comprehensive than one, that can discover any traces of virtues so exalted in the author of the "Clouds." Fraser's Magazine.

THE FUNERAL AT SEA.

The passengers stood in a group beneath the quarter-deck, every one doing the best to attract, in spite of the unfavourable weather; while the crew were gathered in a half-circle beyond the captain and officers, to hear him read the service. The gale had somewhat lulled at the time, and it was clearer to the east; but to westward, in the obscure approach of sunset, a host of mighty clouds were rolled up from the dark blue horizon, their rounded and many-figured summits, standing out in relief against an empty space of sky, were tinted with a lurid and brassy glow. The leaves of the prayer-book fluttered as the captain tried to keep his place, and all waited in listless fear for a weather-roll that would allow him to resume. At another time the mainyard would have been respectfully backed till the moment of burial, but this could not be conveniently done on the present occasion. The chief parts only of the service were read; and, indeed, to omit these, in their solemn appropriateness, because of a mere gale of wind, would have been for an worthy of brave seamen or good shipmates; nevertheless, all were glad when the Captain reached the close. At last minute the ship sank in a trough; the voice of the blast seemed to be shut out on deck, though whistling loudly through the upper spars and rigging. A thrill of solemn emotion passed into one's spirit, as we heard distinctly the words, "Forasmuch then as it hath pleased Almighty God of his great mercy to take unto himself the soul of our dear brother here departed, we therefore commit his body to the deep——." The ship rose high up on a vast wave, the voice of the captain blew away to leeward, but he made a sign with his hand to the men: the end of the grating flew up, and shooting from her uplifted side, feet foremost, the body, wrapped within its hammock, plunged for one to the long, grave-yard wave of the element below. Two pale waters closed bubbling over, and it seemed as if at that instant a mighty hand threw upon it into the abyss, like the symbolic shower of earth, a great surge from the abundance of ocean, with a weight and force as different from the rattle on a coffin lid as the moment it had swelled maidenly up above our mainyard, and with heads uncovered and we listen in the hollow to that striking sentence—"to be turned into corruption, looking for the resurrection of the body (when the sea shall give up her dead), and the life of the world to come, through our Lord Jesus Christ." The captain closed the book. "Keep her away, my lad!" he shouted through his trumpet to the man at the wheel. "A bit of a pull on the rest of our mainbrace, men!" said he again; and in a short time the wind was found to have changed a point or two, so that one reef was shaken out of the topsails, and the ship, driven more obliquely, rose and fell less upon the seas, whose direction coincided more with here.—Fraser's Magazine.

STATUE OF LORD GEORGE BENTINCK

Mr. Campbell, the sculptor, is to execute the bronze statue of Lord George Bentinck, it is said, at a contract price of three thousand guineas, for the county of Portman-square. We were rather amazed to hear that the committee of noblemen and others who subscribed the fund even openly avowed that the monument ought not to be decorated; and should be simply a bronze figure on a plain granite pedestal. Of course, those who "pay the piper" have a right to have any tune they please, but we should have expected that an aristocratic committee would have shewn a little more discrimination and better feeling for what that sterling old gentleman's decision in the matter was. The venerable abilities of Lord George obviously suggested a monument which should hand down to posterity some records of his zeal for agriculture, navigation, English sports, &c.; and we regret that the opportunity has been lost. Dukes and Lords have no right to deprive want of taste in their own country, when they actually resolve against encouraging it.—Journal of Design

AN INCIDENT IN THE FRENCH REVOLUTION OF FEB., 1848. BY LOUIS BLANC.

The dejeuner withdrew (from the Council of Assembly), when an immense shout rose up from the Place de Grève. The people wanted to see the members of the Provisional Government: we came down to satisfy this desire. At the moment when we were leaving our way through the crowd heaped up on the staircase, a man with energetic demeanour, and whose sparkling eyes cast a wild glow over features of a cadaverous hue, rushed towards me, and grasping my arm with intense passion: "Does art, then, a traitor, thou also?" For there were some who imputed it as a crime to me, not to seize that opportunity to overthrow those of my colleagues to whom others accused me of wishing, upon the wreck of the power, to strengthen and increase my own. In thinking of this implication I felt disgust, I could not check a bitter smile, and this was all. When we had arrived on the platform, which has just been erected at the entrance of the Hotel de Ville, I spoke to the Corporations to entreat them to withdraw in good order. They answered by a cry of acclamation which united the Provisional Government; and immediately putting themselves in movement, they proceeded with an admirable so enmity towards the Column de la Bastile, as the silent and astonished city: for during several hours, and the last out of the 150,0 0 workmen who composed it, relates the Moniteur, were passing at five o'clock, before the façade of the Hôtel de Ville. Such was the day of the 24th of February, the greatest, perhaps, of all the historical days remaining living in the memory of man.—Louis Blanc's "New World."

THE TEMPLE.

Those venerable inns which have the Lamb and Flag and the Winged Horse for their sign-boards, have attractions for persons who inhabit them, and shares of rough comforts and freedom, which men always remember with pleasure. I don't know whether the student of law pervades himself the refreshment of ennui, or indulges in poetical reminiscences as he passes by historical chambers, and says "Tonder Eldon lived—upon this site Coke mused upon litigation—here Chitty toiled—here Barnwell and Alderson joined in their famous Libours—here Byles composed his great work upon bills, and Smith compiled his unrivalled Mercantile Law"—but Gustavus Adolphus tells us somewhere, that "but the man of letters can't but love the place which has been inhabited by so many of his brethren, people by their creations as much to us as this day as the authors who often they were. And Sir Roger de Coverley walking in the Temple Garden, and discoursing with Mr. Spectator about the beauties in the tops and patches who are sauntering over the grass, is just as lively a figure to me as old Samuel Johnson rolling through the fog with the Scotch gentleman at his heels on their way to Dr. Goldsmith's chambers in Brick Court, or Harry Fielding, with inked ruffles and a wet towel round his head, dashing off articles at midnight for the Covent Garden Journal, while the printer's boy is asleep in the passage.—Pendennis.

THE CHAPEL ROYAL, DUBLIN.

BLARNEY CASTLE.

THIS picturesque edifice, of antiquarian and popular fame, almost colossal, is situated in the village of Blarney, about four miles north-west of Cork. It consists of a massive square tower, that rises broad and boldly above the surrounding trees, on a precipitous rock over a stream called the Awmartin. The Castle was built about the middle of the fifteenth century, by Cormac MacCarty, or Carthy, surnamed Laider, or the Strong, descended from the Kings of Cork.

BLARNEY CASTLE, NEAR CORK.

"The military and historic recollections connected with Blarney are doubtless of sufficient importance to give an interest to the place; but to a curious superstition it is perhaps more indebted for celebrity. A stone in the highest part of the castle wall is pointed out to visitors, which is supposed to give to whoever kisses it the peculiar privilege of deviating from veracity with unblushing countenance whenever it may be convenient—hence the well-known phrase of 'blarney.'"

"A short distance to the south-west of the castle is a lake, said to abound with a species of leech. It does not afford one good subject for the pencil, being without islands, the margin swampy, and the adjacent trees planted with too much attention to regularity. It is a very generally believed tradition that, before Blarney surrendered to King William's forces, Lord Clancarty's plate was made up in an oaken chest, which was thrown into this lake, and has not since been recovered; nor does this appear improbable, as I understand repeated attempts have in vain been made to drain it. In 1814, Mr. Milliken, whose well-known song of 'The Groves of Blarney' has identified his memory with the place, gave Mr. Crofton Croker a clumsy silver ring for the finger, which had been taken out of the lake by a boy who was fishing in it."

THE CHAPEL ROYAL, DUBLIN.

This edifice is situated on the southern side of the Castle, and is "a very elaborate, but not particularly successful, example of modern Gothic. It consists merely of a choir: its dimensions are 73 feet long by 35 feet broad. At the eastern end there is a large perpendicular window; on each side are seven buttresses, with crocketed pinnacles. Around the exterior is a good deal of carving: among others, are the heads of the entire series of English Kings. The sculpture over the northern entrance is a curious fancy: the head of St. Peter is placed above the door and over it the head of Dean Swift! The interior is extremely elaborate, and rather striking in effect; but it hardly sustains a close examination."

Every part is highly ornamented; but, like the groined roof, all appears imitative plaster-work, instead of the good old free hand-carving of real Gothic churches. All the windows are filled with stained glass. The galleries are distinguished by having crimson curtained thrones in the midst: that on the south side is for the Lord-Lieutenant—the opposite one is for the Archbishop of Dublin. The Viceroy generally attends the service on Sunday mornings, when the chapel is usually crowded." (The Land we Live in.) The building cost £42,000.

THE VICEREGAL LODGE.

PHŒNIX PARK adjoins the city of Dublin westward, and is at once an ornament to it, and a most important benefit to the inhabitants. In this Park is the Viceregal or Lord-Lieutenant's Lodge, in which her Majesty sojourned.

The Lodge was originally built by Lord Leitrim, from whom it was purchased by Government in 1784. Many additions have, from time to time, been made to it. In 1808 the Duke of Richmond added the north portico (of the Doric order), and the handsome lodges by which the demesne is entered on the Dublin side. The north front was built by Lord Whitworth: it is the most striking face of the building, and consists of an Ionic portico, with four columns supporting a pediment. The demesne contains about 200 acres.

THE DEATH OF TEWDRIC, KING OF GWENT.

This spirited group illustrates a very interesting passage in Cambro-British history—the Death of Tewdric, King of Gwent, at the moment of victory over the Saxons, near Tintern Abbey, on the Wye. "The wounded King is represented, after his having fallen in the battle, urging on the pursuit of the flying Saxons, attended by his only daughter, Marchell, and an aged bard, who is in the act of proclaiming victory."—(See "Liber Landavensis," page 383.)

This work has been modelled in plaster by Mr. J. E. Thomas, and occupied a prominent position in the Sculpture Room, at the recent Exhibition of the Royal Academy. It is a composition of high merit, and we hope to hear of its being executed in marble.

BOURNE'S RIVER STEAM-TRAIN.

The great impediment to the developement of the resources of India is the difficulty of locomotion. As there are but few horses in the country, and as, from the heat of the climate, and other causes, the bullocks by which the transport of commodities by land is principally maintained are unable to travel more on the average than seven or eight miles a day, the conveyance of merchandise by land carriage is necessarily tedious and expensive.

The great rivers flowing in various directions from the interior to the coast, and which would be the natural outlets for the produce of the country, if well adapted to navigation, so frequently change their channels, and are, consequently, so much obstructed by sand-banks and shallows, that they are accessible, to a limited extent, to common boats and steamers; and vast tracts of land in the interior consequently lie waste, which would be cultivated with a large profit if an outlet existed for their produce.

As a remedy for the evils due to these deficient means of transport, the introduction of railways into India has been projected; and certain companies having that object in view have now been for some years before the public. But it has been proved beyond dispute that most of these schemes, while costing a large sum of money, and requiring a considerable time for their execution, would fail to be profitable, and would be too insignificant in their immediate results to ameliorate the communications of the country to any appreciable extent. Under these circumstances, Mr. Bourne, who has devoted considerable attention to the subject of Indian Railways, now brings forward a succedaneum in the shape of River Navigation, which is to be accomplished, not by the ordinary steamers common upon European rivers, but by a steam-vessel specially adapted to surmount the difficulties incidental to the navigation of Indian rivers. The effect of this innovation, if successfully introduced into practice, will be to unlock some thousands of miles of river navigation in the different presidences of India. Practically, the effect of Mr Bourne's proposal will be to present India with a reticulation of railways extending over the whole face of the country, without expense; for even if railways existed in India, it would hardly be advisable to maintain a higher speed upon them than 12 or 15 miles an hour, and this speed will now be maintainable upon the rivers under the plan here illustrated.

THE DEATH OF TEWDRIC, KING OF GWENT, AT THE MOMENT OF VICTORY OVER THE SAXONS.—BY J. E. THOMAS.

Mr. Bourne's steamer, instead of being formed like a common vessel, more nearly resembles a floating railway train. It consists of a series of barges, articulated to one another like a hinge, so as to be able to bend, if necessary, in passing curves in the river, and to be exempt from straining if it gets aground upon an uneven surface. These barges are built of sheet-iron, in the manner of pontoons, so as to float upon very little water; and, upon the deck of each, a wooden house of light construction is built, either for the accomodation of passengers or for carrying cargo. In the first of these barges, which is made larger than the rest, is placed the steam-engine, which, by means of paddle-wheels, gives motion to the train. The length of the train can be increased or diminished at pleasure by putting on or taking off some of its constituent barges, and the length of the train will be varied with the quantity of merchandise required to be carried, and also, probably, with the physical peculiarities of the river which is to be ascended; but, on the larger rivers, Mr. Bourne computes that the train may be made sufficiently long to carry 250 tons, the average depth of water not being more than twelve or fifteen inches with this load.

It is quite obvious, that, as the first boat may be made very sharp, and as the draft of water is so very inconsiderable, the train will be propelled with a less force than is necessary for ordinary steamers carrying the same load; and it is not difficult to understand how, with a power of 300 or 350 horses, a speed of fifteen miles an hour is maintained. The engine, for various obvious reasons, is of the high-pressure description, to which, in this case, there is no more objection than in the case of a railway locomotive, since the passengers are at one end of the train while the engine is at the other, and with several goods barges between them.

It is an easy thing to determine the draft of water of a vessel when her weight and dimensions are known, as the vessel will always displace a weight of water equal to her own weight; so that, when the weight is given, the draft will be proportionate to her displacing dimensions. In the case of a flat-bottomed barge 36 feet wide, it will require a ton weight per foot in the length of the barge (including the weight of the barge itself) to sink it one foot in the water, since 36 cubic feet of water weigh one ton very nearly. If, then, from this total weight the weight of the barge be deducted, the difference will be the weight of cargo that can be carried upon one foot draft of water. Mr. Bourne reckons that his train will float upon six inches of water without any cargo, so that, upon a 12 inches draft, the weight of cargo carried will be about the same as the weight of the train itself.

It will be obvious from the foregoing exposition, that a high speed with large carrying power and a large draft of water are attainable by the means Mr. Bourne proposes; but these qualities, though important, do not of themselves afford the solution of the problem involved in the navigation of Indian rivers with that certainty and expedition which gives steam locomotion most of its value. The shoalest part of the shoalest of the rivers it is proposed to navigate is not less than two feet in the channel, in the driest time of the year; but, as the channel is continually shifting, so that there is no assurance that a steamer can always keep it, and as she will consequently have sometimes to pass over shoals on which there is less than two feet water, it is necessary to provide means for the accomplishment of this object in an effectual and satisfactory manner. Mr. Bourne has accordingly furnished his barges with wheels, which, when the train grounds, may be depressed by appropriate screw gear until they rest upon the bottom of the river; and upon these wheels the train is carried off or over the shoal, in the same manner as if it were a train of railway waggons. Each barge is provided with a pair of these wheels, of a sufficient number of feet in width of tire to prevent it from sinking into moderately hard ground to an inconvenient extent; and the periphery of the wheel, or drum, is serrated, to enable it to bite the ground, whereby, when the wheel is turned round by appropriate gearing, the train is propelled. If the bottom be very soft or if it consist of quicksand, the train will be able to force its way through without the necessity of resorting to the wheels; whereas, if the bottom be hard, so that the train cannot pass through the deposit, then the wheels will necessarily have a sustaining power which will enable the train to pass over the shoal like a train of waggons over a slight eminence upon the land. There is, obviously, no difficulty in giving the sustaining wheels the same amount of bearing surface per ton of weight as is given to the wheels of the common carts employed for agricultural purposes; and if these carts are able to pass through a river, or along a sea-beach, in a foot depth of water, it is clear that any other kind of vehicle, with an equal amount of bearing surface per ton upon the wheels, must have the same capability. To obviate any straining of the barges, when resting in the middle on the wheels, instead of resting equally upon the water, a suitable trussing is applied, like the ropes of a suspension-bridge, which accomplishes the object without adding much to the weight.

With these explanatory remarks, we believe the view we have given of the steam train ascending one of the rivers of India will be readily understood. In the paddle-wheel, the float-boards are placed somewhat spirally upon the periphery, so as to make the action upon hard ground continuous, instead of consisting of a succession of lifts. In some cases, depending partly upon the size of the train, and partly upon the nature of the soil, the paddle-wheels are made the sustaining and dragging wheels for carrying the steamer over shallow places, and they are then made with the power of being depressed below the bottom of the vessel. Our limits prevent us from attempting any explanation of the subordinate features of this important contrivance, and we are therefore only able to mention that the arrangement offers peculiar facilities for a perfect system of steering; and that a combination of powerful lights, or the electric light, will be introduced in the bow so as to facilitate progress by night. The Court of Directors of the East India Company, we are happy to add, are giving the matter their earnest consideration, with a view to the immediate introduction of the improvement upon the rivers of India, under the circumstances most favourable to its successful operation. Mr. Bourne's plan constitutes, indeed, only an amplification of the system of steam navigation introduced by the Honourable Company into India many years ago, and by which much improvement would, no doubt, have intermediately taken place but for the popular clamour for railways which has compelled the Honourable Court to suspend the above measures, upon which it has already expended a large amount of the river navigation, in order to address itself to the improvement of the

COUNTRY NEWS.

READING ELECTION.—On Monday, the day of nomination, not less than five candidates to fill the Parliamentary vacancy in this borough, created by the elevation of Mr. Sergeant Talfourd to the Bench, presented themselves at the hustings:—viz. Mr. Blandford (Conservative), Mr. Bowyer (Whig), Mr. Norton (Liberal), Sir J. Hare (ditto), and Mr. T. Clark (Chartist). The show of hands was declared in favour of Mr. Norton. On Tuesday the poll was taken, when, Sir J. Hare and Mr. Clark having retired, the contest was between the three former gentlemen, who polled the following numbers respectively—Stamford, 507; Bowyer, 364; Norton, 107. The official declaration of the poll was made, as above, on Wednesday.

WESTERN DIVISION OF SURREY.—J. J. Briscoe, Esq., of Fox Hills, Chertsey, is a candidate for the above division, vacant by the death of the late Mr. Denison.

REPRESENTATION OF SUNDERLAND.—It is now confidently stated that Mr. Hudson will not retire from the representation of Sunderland. We hear that an offer has been made, on the part of that gentleman, to settle all matters with the York, Newcastle, and North Railway Company, by the appointment of a certain sum; and, further, that this offer is likely to be accepted, rather than have resort to the only alternative—that of seeking a remedy in the Court of Chancery. At the same time, it is rumoured that Sir Hedworth Williamson may be expected shortly to vacate his seat—the peculiar state of his health rendering this step necessary. Durham Chronicle.

KILLERTON PARK, DEVON.—An interesting fête champêtre was held on Monday last at Killerton, the demesne of Sir T. D. Acland, Bart., M.P. The worthy Baronet gave permission to the members of the Exeter Literary Society to visit his picturesque grounds, and a special train was provided by the British and Exeter Railway Company to convey the party to and from the Exeter station. The archers tried their skill at the target; cricket had its votaries; some amused themselves with the ancient game of quoits, whilst others danced on the greensward. The spacious mansion, and the magnificent library contained, were attracted to the scene, and it would have rejoiced the heart of "Young England" to have heard the hearty shouts of the merry groups, and seen the hundreds of happy faces, gladdened by innocent and healthful recreation at this open and social gathering.

ESCAPE FROM KINGSTON GAOL.—On Tuesday afternoon a man named Drysdale escaped from this gaol. Having lately been detected in trying to saw through the iron grating in the back yard, whither he was allowed to go for air and exercise, he was, in lieu of this, permitted the use of the gaol passage, from whence he got into the debtors' room, from the top of a bed in which he broke through the ceiling, and from thence got to the belfry skylight (not secured, it would appear), and from thence let himself down by means of his hammock rope. He has not yet been captured.

VALUABLE COW LOST.—CARTON TO LEAD MINERS.—A cow, worth £14, the property of Mr. Richard Walker, of Matlock, Bath, was recently observed to refuse her food, and she gradually got worse and died, notwithstanding the best veterinary skill had been in requisition. On examining the contents of the stomach, it was found that a carton had by some means swallowed a quantity of lead ore in grains from the size of a small pin's head up to that of a large pea. The lead miners of this district are in possession of very singular and extensive privileges, and they surely ought to take every precaution to prevent their operations from injuring their neighbours' cattle; the more so as it is a well-known fact that the "bellend" (the ore portions of the ore) is of a most deleterious quality when introduced to the stomach of any living animal.

A CANINE PATRON OF RAILWAY TRAVELLING.—A terrier dog, belonging to Mr. Hodgkinson, spirit merchant, of Matlock, Bath, having recently consented to travel with his master by rail from the latter-named place to Matlock-bridge station, took it into his head to start railway traveller on his own account. Now, master "Spot" had a little acquaintance of his own at Matlock-bridge—a sweetheart, if the truth must be told—and he, whom he was accustomed to pay frequent visits; and, finding walking, or rather running, somewhat fatiguing, he adopted railway travelling in preference, and has, since that period, sometimes once a day, gone to the other, invariably coming back by the return train, and never once making a mistake by taking the express train, which does not stop at Matlock bridge station.

Early on Monday morning a fine young sturgeon was caught in the river Exe, opposite Powderham Castle, Devonshire, by Daniel Pim, fisherman; it measured six feet in length, and weighed nearly 100lb. It was shortly after sent off to the London market.

MELANCHOLY CASE.—On Monday an inquest was held at Liverpool, before P. F Curry, Esq., the borough coroner, conjointly on view of the bodies of James Cu kin and Catherine Culkin, both children. The facts are comprised in the evidence of the following witness:—Ellen Culkin, sworn, said: I am widow, and live in Paul-street. The deceased parties lived in Oriel-street. The father's name was Patrick Joseph Culkin, and I knew him well. The house is in a court. He had three children, namely, James, aged about eight years; Sarah, about seven years; and the third, Catherine, aged about eleven months. No one but themselves lived in the house. One of the children (Sarah) died of cholera on Wednesday evening last. Next morning, at seven o'clock, his wife died. I was present when she died. I saw the husband then, and he appeared to be in a melancholy way. I heard him say several times that he could not live after her. I asked him to take a cup of tea. He said, no, he would never again taste food in this world. The deceased children, James and Catherine, were then in the house. I slept in the house on Thursday night. Next morning the husband still appeared to be in a low melancholy way. About twenty minutes past eight o'clock I went out, and left the father and the two deceased children in the house. I gave the younger t (Catherine) into his arms. About half-past two in the afternoon I went back. I found the door fast. I lifted the latch, but could not get in; I then went and lifted the window, and got in through it. It looked into the bed where the corpse of his wife lay, and behind the corpse I saw Culkin lying. He had one arm round the neck of the corpse, and the other on her breast. I then perceived that his throat was cut. I do not know then whether he was alive or dead. I unlocked the door, the key of which was inside, and called in assistance. Dr. Kilner was passing at the time, and I called him in. Several neighbours also came in. We found the bodies of the two deceased children, James and Catherine, with their throats cut, and quite dead. They were both on the same bed with the corpse. James was lying at the foot of the bed, and Catherine by the side of her father. Dr. Kilner is a surgeon in the Northern Hospital. Previous to Wednesday last I never observed anything in his conduct and manner that led me to suppose him to be at all deranged in his intellect. It was very much attached to his children. I never saw a father more fond. Mr. Thomas. After the death of his wife he spoke in such a foolish way that I did not think he was not himself. He has been in such low circumstances that he was literally assisted to make partial relief. The razor, wrapped at the handle end with a piece of cord, was produced.) The razor-blade produced was all he had to shave himself with for the last twelve months I know it. and have seen him frequently use it. I have frequently observed the razor, as it now appears. I found it myself. It was lying on the hearthstone. I gave it to the doctor, Mr. Kilner. I did not observe if there were any marks of blood upon it. After some further corroborative evidence, Mr. Kilner, surgeon, said after Culkin had been called over and entered into some particulars tending to show that he killed upon her and her husband on Thursday night, and that from his manner and language, at the door, she thought he was not quite sound in his mind. The Coroner did not deem it necessary to take this testimony upon oath, inasmuch as, acting upon the advice of legal friends, he deemed it better to leave the case to be dealt with by the Judges, who would be the proper parties to deal with (this day). The Judge had a discretion upon medical certificates of the man's insanity, to commit him (if guilty of the murders) to the Lunatic Asylum, where he would be taken care of; or, if it appeared that he at the time laboured under temporary insanity, to discharge him, should he recover. The jury was sworn by a late Act of Parliament. The safest verdict would be one leaving the felony, and the case would be dealt with in a higher court. The Jury unanimously returned a verdict of "Wilful murder against Culkin," and "Felo de se" in both cases. The accused is still at the hospital, and very ill; but hopes are entertained of his recovery. He had formerly been in good circumstances.

EXTRAORDINARY PHENOMENON, WITH LOSS OF LIFE.—A most singular catastrophe occurred off the coast of Kincardine-hire on Tuesday (Sunday afternoon last), whereby a large boat, which was employed in conveying railway sleepers from Aberdeen to Stone haven, had discharged her cargo at the latter port and was returning to Aberdeen, when she was caught in a sudden and violent whirlwind, which laid her on her beam-ends immediately, and was a below a rise of broken water The crew were, of course, thrown out, but they all succeeded in clinging to the capsized boat except one man, who was observed to be floating about stiffly, and was, in point of fact, dead when taken possession of. Mr. Thom, of the Mill of Marshals, with several fishermen, having witnessed the catastrophe, put off to the assistance of the crew, and succeeded in rescuing them, after several an highly praiseworthy exertions The coast-guard were also promptly afloat, and at the scene of the disaster. It was discovered that the man who had been observed floating about so strange y had been killed by a flash of lightning, which was observed by parties on shore to break over the boat at the very moment of the accident. The deceased, Alexander Mavers, a seaman about fifty years of age, left a widow and family in very destitute circumstances.

Wednesday a second steam yacht, built for the purpose of ply on Windermere Lake, was launched at Low Wood Hotel

CHURCH, UNIVERSITIES, &c.

OXFORD.

NEW CANON OF CHRISTCHURCH.—Dr. Ogilvie, of Baliol College, as Regius Professor of Pastoral Theology, now becomes a Canon of Christ Church, vacant by the death of Dr Dowdeswell. When this Professorship, as well as that of Ecclesiastical History, was founded by the Queen in 1842, each was to be endowed forthwith with a canonry in Christchurch; the University in the meanwhile undertaking to provide stipends for the professors out of the public chest. The Rev Robert Hussey holds the latter professorship, and will, therefore, if he live, take the next vacant canonry.

Charles Thomas Coote, Esq., M.A., of Pembroke College, has been [illegible] resignation of Dr Wells.

PREFERMENTS.—The Rev. J. Gedge, to the rectory of Bildestone, Suffolk, £346; the Rev J. Williams, to the rectory of Llanymowddwy, £218; the Rev. E. R. H. G. Palmer, to the vicarage of North Somercotes, Lincolnshire, £394; the Rev S. Buckland, to the perpetual curacy of Great Torrington, Devonshire, £162; the Rev. D. Pantdhotes, to the perpetual curacy of Hanley, Staffordshire, £220; the Rev. E. Greatorex, and the Rev. J. B. Dykes, to be Minor Canons of Durham Cathedral; the Rev. Alfred Kett, to be Minor Canon of Gloucester Cathedral; the Rev. J. Woollaston, to be Archdeacon of that portion of the diocese of Ad laide contained within the limits of Western Australia

PREFERMENTS VACANT.—The Rectory of Stanford Rivers, Essex, £1007; patron, the Court of the Duchy of Lancashire. A Prebendal Stall in the Cathedral of Salisbury.

RESTORATION OF ST. MARY REDCLIFF CHURCH, BRISTOL.—A very interesting meeting took place last week, in Bristol, of the newly-formed Ca [illegible] Society, the object of which is the complete restoration of Redcliff Church. Its members first attended divine service in the venerable church, after which a collection amounting to thirty guineas was made. The Rev. Canon Harvey preached the sermon from 1st of Haggai, 8th verse. A dinner afterwards took place at the Royal Western Hotel.

BISHOP OF EXETER.—The Bishop of Exeter has commenced proceedings against the Rev. Charles Rothes, under the act for the better enforcing church discipline, and that gentleman has already been served with notices thereof.

NEW CHURCH NEAR HOLYWELL.—Viscountess Fielding, on attaining her majority on Thursday, the 9th inst., invited all the clergy and gentry of the neighbourhood to attend the ceremony of laying the foundation stone of a new church, to be dedicated to St. David. The whole of the cost of the building and the endowment, amounting to £.9,000, besides a glebe-house and land, was by her Ladyship generously defrayed on the occasion.

GORHAM v. THE BISHOP OF EXETER.—Sir Herbert Jenner Fust has delivered his judgment in this case in the Arches Court. The plaintiff was appointed vicar of St. Just, Cornwall, in 1845, by the then Lord Chancellor, and was regularly inducted and instituted in 1846, by the Bishop of Exeter. He was presented by the present Lord Chancellor to the living of Bamford Speke, in the same diocese, to which the Bishop of Exeter refused to admit him, on the ground of unsound doctrine as to regeneration in baptism. Hence arose the present suit. At its conclusion, Sir Herbert said, the point to be determined was, did or did not the Church of England hold the doctrine of baptismal regeneration? Undoubtedly it did. Did Mr. Gorham hold it? He had come to that doctrine. It was the whole tenor of the examination that such was the case. The Bishop, therefore, had been sufficient cause for not instituting Mr. Gorham to the living of Bamford Speke, and he must consequently be dismissed with his costs. Notice of appeal was given.

CAUTION AGAINST RETAINING MONEY-ORDERS TOO LONG IN HAND. —The following notice has been issued by the Post-office authorities:—"By the 11th and 12th Vic. c. 98, it is enacted, that all money orders issued before the end of August, 1848, and not presented for payment before the end of August, 1849, shall be null and void. And by a regulation made under the authority of the said Act, with the consent and concurrence of the consent of the Lords Commissioners of her Majesty's treasury, every money-order issued subsequently to August 31, 1848, shall be void, unless presented for payment before the end of the twelfth calendar month after the year in which it was issued. Thus, a money order issued in September, 1848, will lose all value unless presented for payment before the end of september, 1849."

INTERESTING DISCOVERY.—M. Paul Gervais (says the Constitutionnel) has just discovered in the upper tertiary stratum of Montpellier a species of fossil ape, probably belonging to the Macaque genus. On comparing this discovery with that of M. Lartet in the Sewalik mountains, in the north of India, and London, it appears that fossil apes have been discovered in the three principal tertiary strata of western Europe, that is to say, in every part of the level of sedimentary earths in which the bones of mammalia of every kind are found. Indeed at the Lyons museum is preserved, the non-discovery hitherto of the slightest trace of human skeletons, or remains attesting human industry, would be very astounding. The discovery of these fossil apes is therefore an additional motive for pushing on the researches in the tertiary strata.

NEW ACT FOR THE RELIEF OF THE POOR.—An act (12 and 13 Vict. cap. 103) received the Royal assent on the last instant, to consume the statute, 4 and 5 Wm. IV. cap. 76, mentioned in the preamble, and to substitute a provision in the act of a salutary character at the present period. By the 14th section, it is enacted that the guardians of a union may contract to receive in their workhouses certain poor persons, not being paupers, for the use of the corporation of the workhouses of any other union, or the presidence or reasonable apprehension of any epidemic or contagious disease," or from other causes specified. Guardians may appropriate property of paupers (50 covered, not exceeding £5.0 for any thousand persons) received by them in and about the burial, as also of the maintenance of such parties for any time during the twelve months previous to the decease. The expenses of burials may be recovered from parties in the same manner as under the existing regulations, under local Acts, are now enabled to consent to the orders of the Poor-Law Board, and guardians may expend a limited sum for purposes of emigration, not exceeding £5.0 for any thousand persons without a previous vestry meeting. The Act is only to extend to England and Wales.

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

The past week has been the dullest known for some months, transactions in the English Securities having been on an unusually limited scale, with the exception of a large sale on behalf of the Court of Chancery. Consols opened on Monday at the decline of ¼ upon the previous week's prices, and receiving no fall, to 93, for money. On Tuesday 92¾ was quoted; but the opening and closing prices were 92⅞. A large sale, on behalf of the Court of Chancery, caused, for a short period, a further decline on Wednesday; but the closing quotation was the same as on the preceding day. Any further reduction was prevented during the week there was rather more buoyancy, the last prices being—For Bank Stock, 199; Reduced, 93¼; Consols, 92⅞; New Three and-a-Quarter per Cent Annuities, 98¾; Long Annuities, expire March, 1860, 13 1-16; Ditto, 1885, 20 pm; Ditto under £1000, 81 pm; Consols for Account, 92⅞; Exchequer Bills, £1000, June, 49 pm; £500, June, 50 pm; Small, June, 47 pm.

The absence of business in the Railway Market has produced a slight attempt at a low price Foreign securities. Buenos Ayres Stock on Monday quoted 52 for account, being a rise of six per cent. upon the prices of the week before. This sudden advance is in consequence of the probability of peace being at last restored, and the hope of some arrange ments being made for the liquidation of the overdue dividends. Portuguese, also, has been firm, and Ru sian Stock continues to advance. In the other descriptions of securities the rates have been but little varied. The last prices for Brazilian Bonds, 85; Ditto, New, 1829 and 1839, 84¾; Buenos Ayres Bonds, Six per Cent., 51¾; Guatemala Bonds, 20; Mexican, five per Cent., 16½; Account, 16½; Russia Bonds, 105¾; Portuguese, Four per Cent., 29¾ d; Ditto, Converted, 36; Russian Bonds, 105¾; Spanish, Five per Cent., 1849, 18⅜; Ditto, Account, 18⅜; Venezuela Bonds, Two-and-a-Quarter per Cent., 9; Ditto Two-and-a Half per Cent., 8¾; Ditto, Four per Cent., Certificates, 22 x d.

Not much business is doing in the Share Market. Great Westerns are rather worse, and North-Westerns, it is understood, will pay a seven per cent dividend. Eastern Counties manifest little spirit, small investments for equalization tending to support the market against the heavy bearing known to exist. SATURDAY MORNING.—The Market remained steady yesterday, at the prices of the preceding day. Consols closed at 92¾ for Money and Three Shares were dull, and fore-gn securities did not show any decided variation.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE [illegible] English wheat, of fresh growth, was in good demand, and the trade was soon cleared. Foreign was dull, and the currency was barely supported. Barley was dull, and 1s per quarter lower than last week. New grey peas were dull at 1s to 2s per quarter lower. Indian corn, meal, and flour were offering free y, at Monday's reduction.

ARRIVALS.—English wheat, 1820; barley, —; malt, 1430; oats, 810; flour 2960. Irish oats, —. Foreign, wheat, 7500; barley 8200; oats, 13,180 quarters; flour, 2000 sacks.

Flour, American, 22s to 24s per barrel; Baltic, 23s to 24s per barrel.

The Seed Market. The sale for most kinds of seeds is heavy. Canary seed may be had on rather lower terms. New tares are offering at 6s to 6s 6d per bushel.

Linseed, English, sowing, 54s to 60s; Baltic, crushing, 38s to 40s; Mediterranean and Odessa, 36s to 38s; Calcutta, 36s to 38s per quarter; Cakes, 14s to 15s per cwt.; Brown Mustard-seed, 8s to 10s white ditto, 5s to 10s 6d. Tares, 4s 6d to 6s 6d per bushel. English rapeseed, new, £20 to £26 per last of 10 quarters. Linseed cakes, English, £8 10s to £10 5s; ditto, foreign, 40s 6d to £7 5s per 1000; Rapeseed cakes, £4 10s to £4 15s per ton. Canary, 1s to 1s 6d per quarter. English Clover-seed, red, —s to —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s to —s. Foreign, red, —s to —s; extra, —s; white, —s to —s; extra, —s per cwt.

Bread.—The prices of wheaten bread in the metropolis are from 7d to 7½d; of household ditto, 5d to 5½d, per 4lb loaf.

Provisions.—Monday, though by no means brisk, demand for [illegible] finest Dutch butter at full prices. In other qualities scarcely any doing. Fine Friesland, Cork, and Limerick, 82s to 84s; fine Holstein and Kin [illegible] 78s to 80s; fine Holland, 68s to 72s; and inferior qualities, 45s to 54s per cwt. The sale for both and good parcels of Irish bacon a dcmer, but the middling and inferior kinds are a slow sale. Fine Waterford, 56s to 58s per cwt.; fresh, 9s to 11s per pound. Irish hams move off heavily, at 1s to 2s per cwt less money. Prime Limerick Waterford, 67s to 70s, heavy 62s to 64s; and prime small Limerick 66s to 68s per cwt. Lard [illegible] 1s to 3s 6d per cwt. Irish hams are lower to purchase.

Tallow [illegible] for all kinds is heavy. At market prices, P.Y.C., on the spot, has sold at 3s 9d per cwt. [illegible] 3s 7½d per cwt. Town tallow [illegible] 3s 9d per cwt. [illegible] 3s 7½d per cwt. net cash

Oils.—Linseed [illegible] market is in a very exciting state, owing to the prevalence of cholera, and prices have further advanced 1d per gallon Rum is in fair request, and the turn aligher sales spirits, 9s 8d per gallon, net cash

Hay and Straw. Old meadow hay, £2 18s to £3 14s; new ditto, £2 8s to £3 0s; old clover, £3 4s to £4 14s. new ditto, £3 0s to £4 4s; old tares, £2 4s to £3 12s per load.

Coals. For most kinds the demand is somewhat active, as very full price [illegible]

Potatoes.—The supplies for potatoes are moderate on the increase, the demand is heavy, at from £7 10s to £8 10s per ton.

Coals (Friday)—Brown's, 14s 6d; Lumley, 14s; Morrison, 13s 6d; Kelloe, 14s 9d; West Hilton, 13s; Braddyll, 13s 3d; Tess, 13s per ton.

Hops (Friday).—The supply of really fine hops on sale here is small. On the whole, the demand for such has ruled steady, and prices have undergone a full improvement. In middling and inferior kinds very little is doing, at barely late rates. Old hops are almost nominal. We have had no foreign arrivals coming under notice since our last, and as the duty is now known to be, it is evident that the growth will be comparatively small. Very little betting upon the duty, which is cu ent £70,000 to £80 000 —

Kent and East Kent (Friday).—Weald of Kent ditto, £3 19s to £4 10s, Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 10s to £7 7s per cwt.

Wool (Friday).—Notwithstanding that our market to-day was very moderately supplied with bonds, the demand for that description of stock was extremely inactive; and, in consequence, prices have ruled 1d to 2d per lb lower than last week. Both descriptions of clothing wools are also in limited request, at barely late rates. Of hops are almost nominal. We have had no foreign arrivals coming under notice since our last, and as the duty is now known to be, it is evident that the growth will be comparatively small. Very little betting upon the duty, which is cu ent £70,000 to £80 000 —

Kent and East Kent (Friday).—Weald of Kent ditto, £3 19s to £4 10s, Mid and East Kent ditto, £4 10s to £7 7s per cwt.

Smithfield (Friday).—Notwithstanding that our market to-day was very moderately supplied with beasts, the demand for that description of stock was extremely inactive; and, in consequence, prices have ruled 2d lower than last Monday's quotations. Sheep trade is also in a very dull state, owing to the prevalence of cholera, and prices have further declined 2d per 8lb. Prime small oxen, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6 [illegible] ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime Scots, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; coarse and inferior beasts, 2s 8d to 3s 2d; second quality ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime [illegible] —s to —s; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6 [illegible] —s to —s; prime Southdown sheep, 4s 8d to 5s 0d; prime large ditto, 4s 4d to 4s 6d; middling ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 8d; prime calves, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; middling ditto, 4s 2d to 4s 4d; prime ditto, 4s 6d to 4s 8d; inferior ditto, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; prime pigs, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lambs, 5s 0d to 6s 0d.

CHAPTER XIII. HOLIDAYS OF THE POOR.

Food and raiment, household shelter, and a grave, are all the Poor-Law allows to the pauper; for there is no clause in that act permitting him the enjoyment of the sweet air of heaven, or the open and unwalled sunshine (the gold which God scatters down for all), beyond what bare and beaty space the narrow courtyard in which he is doomed to walk—the Prisoner of Poverty. The birds he there hears sing are the dirty sparrows, that roost under the soot-blackened eaves, and weary the heart with their unchangeable chirrup. The hum of the bees is the buzz of the bloated blue-bottle, ever hovering around, and endeavouring to slow and spoil the morsel of meat that is doled out to him with a niggard hand. The murmur of his streams is heard in the flushing of the poisonous sewers, running of his town. The coarse garments that dangle on the clothes-lines—for in such places it is ever washing-day. His blue sky is the little morsel of the face of heaven which, (by straining his neck) he can see roofing the tall bare walls that surround him. His flowers are the morsels of chickweed, the two or three dwindling blades of grass, or the dank green moss, that shoot up beside the damp wall, or between the fissures of the pavement. His fragrance, a life-destroying atmosphere, a compound of all unwholesome smells.

Day after day, week after week, month after month—throughout the budding spring—all the while the long-leaved summer reigns—when Autumn is throwing her rainbow-hues over the forest, and Winter comes forth, in his shroud of snow, and with ice snow-flakes hanging on his hair—throughout all these changes he feels but cold and heat; can only tell when it is spring by hearing the cry of "primroses" without the walls; summer, by the hot pavement on which he treads; autumn, by the drawing in of the days and the chilly evenings; and winter, by the cold that seems to eat into his very bones. This is his life; these all the changes he knows, unless the roking of the monotonous year is varied by the days he never let his idea-bud, or the weeks he spent in the hospital. The very walls are ever the same; he has counted every fissure in the pavement; almost every morsel of gravel is familiar to his eye: he knows how many sabs are cracked and broken; at what hour the sun will have gruel; when a change to potatoes. He knows the days when the pea-soup and porringer and plate his only comforters, until sleep comes and steeps his senses in forgetfulness. He knows when it is Sunday by receiving his clean shirt, and attending church.

Poverty is the country—however poor it may be, however low it may have fallen—is still surrounded with a few fragments of the Paradise which was once man's possession. There we see the blue of the sky bending and resting upon the dim rim of the horizon, or losing itself in the depths of the woods. The gladed green of the refreshing earth ans below like a rich velvet carpet which God hath diapered with flowers of "all hues," and thrown down for man to tread upon. The solemn avenue of stately trees rises like a tall temple, roofed in by his mighty hand; and as we gaze upward, we feel the heart worshipping Him unawares, and walk along surrounded with the awe of an old religion. Every rounded pebble beside which the stream plays and murmurs, sends up its tuny voice through the bubbling silver, and his is the praise in the great ear them which Nature hymns in His praise. In the greenless and sunless streets of the busy city we see not this God-created life, this old world, which has lived on ever since a broad leaf waved; long, perchance, before Eve was planted her wild-wood bower. But on the rounded daisies that blowed in Eden, when the voice of God was heard "walking in the garden in the cool of the day." (Genesis iii. 8.)

The visions when St. John the Evangelist was raised in the Spirit, and saw the golden gates were never closed; of a river clear as crystal, and trees bearing beneath their load of fruit. Isaias also saw there "the glory of Lebanon:...the fir tree, the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of [illegible] sanctuary." And in our own dreams of those immortal realms, we but catch a few glimpses of what is beautiful on earth—a peaceful country, green and flowery; and over the sunshine which sleeps thereon, the shadows of angels are ever passing.

Those who never see the beauties which God hath scattered over the face of this earth, can never imagine anything of heaven, or dream of delights beyond the worship which they join in here below.

Our forefathers were a holiday-loving people. With what delight they set out to bring home May! Herrick has told us in striking verse. they hung a green bough on every door, and suspended from window to window, in the centre of the streets, endless garlands of flowers. The dance under the Maypole was surely preferable to reeling out of a gin-shop; and the archers perching on the roof of a summer evening, under the trees in Moorfields, much better than a sitting skittle-ground, reeking with tobacco, gin, and beer.

If the country is a little further from London that it was in those days, we are enabled to reach it as soon as they did, when linked to that space-eaving thunder-bolt, a railway engine; and quick and far away as the flowers have flown, we can still overtake them in a few minutes.

We have great fun in these holidays of the poor; for whatsoever contributes to their happiness removes a portion of what is evil, and supplies the place with what is good. To make a poor weary heart happy and contented for only a few hours, is to lessen the evils of life—it is a rest in the desert, a spring flowing its "loosened silver" through the arid sand, at which they drink, and taking heart go on their way again more cheerfully. A more selfish and depraved class live not, than those who only think of their own pleasure; who never dream of the delight there is to be found in making others happy.

How grateful the generality of the poor are for favours! They return the donor thanks, sincere thanks—they can offer God no more.

We pay our poor-rates because we are forced; but is a parochial board to be the limits of our charity, is there nothing required beyond food, raiment, and household shelter, for the poor? Ask Joseph brown, and he will point with a proud finger towards Bethnal green, to those whom he led forth like a second Moses, out of a wilderness of bricks, mortar, and ruin, to a land where summer reigns, where he smote the rock, and sent the gushing waters bubbling and sparkling among a thousand brick-dried and dusty hearts.

At his bidding the little double-up old woman left on roasting chest-nuts at the corner of the street, and went out to see them grow. The pale-faced girl for one day ceased her cry of water-cresses, and saw the clear brook in which they stood; while the pretty flower girl gazed with wonderment over the gardens or Havering Bower, and thought how fresh and beautiful the flowers looked there compared with those she sold in the streets of London. The old man, bent with age, left his box of lucifer matches (the beggar's last shift) at home, and went to see the butterfly once more alight on the blossoms. And Joseph Brown walked at the head of these immortal souls, those poor children of sorrow and misery, as they knelt down on their march to heaven, whose folded wings may in another state touch our own, when we kneel with bowed head and clasped hands on the star-paved floor of heaven, blushing to think how many tribulations they waded through without a murmur, while we looked on nor extended a helping hand.

The last trumpet, when it awakes the dead, will have no soft and savery sound for the silken sons and daughters of luxury, but send out the same earth-rending peal, and startle all from their long deep slumber.

These Bethnal-green holiday-people were a poor and homely race, looking what they really are, a badly-fed and badly-housed populace. They are small in stature and limb, and unwholesome in appearance, like flowers crammed into the bit of ground behind the smoky alleys in which they live, that dwindle and pine and get less and less every year they live: so were these poor people—they had neither bulk, bone, nor muscle; they were like the trees in our city squares compared with the giant oaks of Sherwood Forest. Some of the girls were rather pretty but pensive: they seemed happy, and yet it did not look natural for them to appear so; you could not tell how it was, yet you "felt" it to be so. The ugliest and dirtiest were in appearance the happiest; the saw only the present, they left the past behind them, quite sure that the old cares, privations, and sorrows would not run away while they were absent. Peace be with them, and all happiness attend such cared-for beings as Mr. Joseph Brown, Rev. Thomas Bunch, the Curate of Bildeston; the Rev. R. H. Herschel, and all the kind friends who assist them by contributing their mite to these Holidays of the Poor.

During one of our rural wanderings this summer, we chanced to stumble upon a holiday group of charity-scholars, [illegible] which had been brought [illegible] by a [illegible] in a [illegible] waggon. They had not been [illegible] half-a-score of such pleasure-vans as our Artist has sketched in this page, and they had not had all the freedom we should have liked to have seen them enjoy: it one or two straggled a little out of bounds, they were called back. Poor little things! they seemed to envy the bees and birds that new sang, and we wish that they had no teachers to watch over them. We fancied how many of them had slept on the previous night, through thinking about their country excursion; how often they had looked at the sky, and hoped that it would not rain—that it would surely be fair one day in the year, the only day on which they got a holiday. It made us sign to look at some of them—they were such little specimens of humanity, especially when, on enquiry, we found that many of them were fatherless and motherless. They seemed to look on nature with that childish wonder which is pleased with everything it sees: they gathered the white dead-nettle, the ox-eye, and red poppy, and thought that such were beautiful flowers—little darlings, that could only sob and weep when they were beaten, and tender closer to one another for comfort, seeming to look about with their pretty eyes as if in search of some friend to protect them. Others we saw with forbidding countenances, who had, no doubt, been beaten and starved, and felt a savage satisfaction in punishing such as were less than themselves, as if copying the examples they had suffered from.

Some had eaten their dinners before reaching their journey's end, and gazed with longing eyes on such as had been more provident; though we strongly suspected that many had been tempted by false promises and the hope of sharing the dinner of their companion—hopes not likely to be realised in many cases, judging from what we saw.

Oh, how we longed to have had those children under our own guidance for the day, to have taken them to one or another of the sweet spots we knew, so different from the dusty patch of ground by the road-side, where the pleasure-vans were drawn up: such spots as we have often described—roads and lanes that lead only to fields; green nooks that seem too beautiful ever to be broken up into highways; as if Heaven would be a law to crush those lines of white daisies that seem to stretch onward and onward, as if trying to find their way to where, in spring, the primroses and violets and blue-bells nestle on the wood-side banks; spots which for ages have formed an old highway of flowers, over which have flown armies of birds, and bees, and butterflies; places beside which there ever went singing along with sunbeam voice some little brook, that seemed to chafe if only a pebble checked its course, as if it hurried on to be free again away from the flowers that grew further on, and which had come a long way down the hills to look at them whence the breeze had first blown the tidings about the beauty of the spot in which they grew; and ever over the stream the creeping May-buds waved, as if they tried to imitate those whiteness gazing from a cloud that lay mirrored below, while here and there great trees threw their arms across it, chequering its onward course with cooling shadows, as if for a little time to give it a pleasant resting-place before it went on again to where the unfooded sunshine falls for where that pleasant stream goes broadening out, the gaudy dragon-flies meet together to play, and where it runs narrowing in, the burnt bulrushes, the feathery reeds, and the golden wallflowers bend and bend themselves together, as if they were never weary of telling one another how pleasant is the scenery around which they grow; spots where the birds seem to come for new songs—sweet notes which they gather from the lapping of the water and the whistling of the reeds, and these they sing to the blossoms, and the blossoms breathe them back again to the bees, and the bees whisper them into the bells of the flowers they plunge into, and every insect that alights thereon catches the note, and all day long is humming the low tune high up in the air. To such places as these ought the dear children to be taken, while the pleasure-vans await their return beside the dusty high-road, where only the plantain, the ox-eye, the dead-nettle, and the hemlock grow.

But while the railway rushes on in its lightning-like speed, and the steam-boat tosses the water aside with proud disdain, as if angry that it should, for a moment, check its course, the slow-moving canal-boat, drawn leisurely along by horses, has also its crowd of holiday people; such as our beautiful engraving here represents as another of the moving pictures of London. This is, no doubt, one of the cheapest and safest methods of spending the day, after all. Here there is no rushing and thronging as on the railway, no dashing and rocking as in the steam-packet, nor any shaking in going over the ground as in the pleasure-vans. The ripple the boat makes is scarcely heard. You can even distinguish the rustling of the tiny waves among the sedge that sways idly to and fro on the banks of the canal. It is a beautiful sight to see these boats full of holiday passengers, gliding slowly along within a yard or two of the shore in the summer sunshine; to look down and see them all mirrored in the water, even to the little girl that is leaning over the side, and rippling the surface with her hand, beside the woman in the red shawl that deep down is clear-shadowed. Pleasant it is to stand a little way off, and, while the boat is towed slowly along, to hear some old solemn hymn chanted; low at first, then gradually swelling higher, and to distinguish the children's voices mingling with those of men and women; and nothing to drown the harmony, save the measured tramp of the horses which haul the boat, the creaking of a gate, or the short, sharp crack of the driver's whip—sounds which disturb not your thoughts. Not that we would have them always singing hymns, or listening to pious addresses, but leave them a little breathing time to look on nature, to "commune with their own hearts," to enjoy themselves on the lawn (as the kind Curate of Bildestone allowed them to do the other day, after giving them a hearty meal of plum-cake and tea; and, when wearied with their sports and pastimes, carrying home, as he did, every poor child with a huge lump of plum-cake in its hand).

In the north of England the school feasts are called "Potations," for so is the word sounded, the origin of which we have never been able to discover nor to find any other meaning for it than that of drinking; yet it signifies a childish feast or holiday in the midland counties. We want a better compound word than "Pic-nic" for these holidays of the poor, and hope that some of our learned readers will help us to one, and that next year we shall have to record the good deeds of many Joseph Browns.

No. 386.—VOL. XV.] FOR THE WEEK ENDING SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1849. [SIXPENCE.

THE CULTIVATION OF FLAX IN IRELAND.

IRELAND is no longer a stale subject. Its condition, its grievances, its fears, and its hopes are no longer voted to be bores, or avoided as topics of discussion and study by the politician and the philosopher. A new light has been thrown upon a subject that was once thought to have been worn threadbare; and the Irish question is acknowledged in all quarters to be not only the most important, but the most interesting of all the questions of the present age. As long as Mr. O'Connell lived, and with his vain babble insisted that the evils of his country were entirely political or religious, people in England were disgusted or disheartened; but now that he, with his followers and successors, have been removed, and that Famine and Misery have become the teachers of the people, the truth has dawned upon the understanding of most men that the evils of Ireland are purely social. In this respect, Famine and Misery, though severe, have proved valuable teachers. They have let in a flood of day upon places that were formerly dark as midnight, and have pointed out to the Irish and the English people the true and only remedies to be attempted. Of course these remedies are many. There is no universal panacea for social ills, any more than there is for those which afflict the body. He who, by a long course of bad living, has impaired his constitution, must not depend on any one nostrum to restore it. He must not only renounce his old bad habits, but he must acquire new and good ones. He must not only avail himself of this or that aid from the pharmacopœia, but he must attend scrupulously to fresh air, exercise, and diet, with cleanliness of body and serenity of mind. So with Ireland. She is not to be cured by a Poor-law blister, by a legal pill for the expurgation of landlords, or by the phlebotomy of emigration. A thousand other circumstances affecting her general health must be taken into consideration, or, like many other patients, she will die of her doctors.

No one who has travelled in Ireland can avoid seeing that the country is divisible into two great districts—the prosperous and the unprosperous. In the remote parts of the country, where the population is entirely agricultural, the stupendous wretchedness is scarcely credible to those who have not beheld it with their own eyes. In the neighbourhood of large cities like Cork, dependant on foreign trade, the face of the country and the condition of the people improve; while in the north of Ireland, which does not depend upon agriculture entirely, but carries on an extensive manufacture, comfort is the rule, and misery is the exception. An extension of trade and manufactures, therefore, is one of the great wants of the country, and one of the surest means of raising the people from the Slough of Despond into which a too exclusive reliance upon agriculture has led them. These, however, are matters that cannot be forced. It is beyond the power of any Government or Legislature to establish a trade in any particular locality; and the State can no more found a prosperous manufacture than it can invent a new plant. Still, much may be done in the way of persuasion and instruction of the people; and we rejoice to see that the Irish Executive, under the able headship of Lord Clarendon, has not been negligent of the important subject of Irish manufactures; and that her Majesty and Prince Albert, in their recent visit to Belfast, have expressed an interest in the cultivation of flax, which may be the means of drawing the attention of English capitalists to the capabilities of the Irish soil for the production of a material which is essential to the prosperity of the only prosperous manufacture in Ireland.

There has been established in Belfast for some years a Society for the Promotion and Improvement of the Growth of Flax, which has obtained the patronage of the Queen and Prince Albert. This society is principally supported by the prosperous linen-manufacturers of the counties of Antrim and Down, and by the landlords of the North, who have sense enough to see that wherever manufactures flourish, agriculture thrives; and that the best friend of the landlord is the trader or manufacturer who gives employment to the people. Under the auspices of this society, all available means are made use of to spread throughout the rural population a knowledge of the culture of flax. We select a few facts from the published Reports of the Society, to prove the vast importance of the subject to all interests in Ireland. At present the manufacturers of Belfast are obliged to import large quantities of flax. It appears by the official reports of the Board of Trade, that for the six years ending the 10th of October, 1845, the imports of flax into Great Britain and Ireland amounted to 388,897 tons, of which the value was no less than £19,44 2,750; in addition to 1,500,000 quarters of flax-seed. Mr. Sharman Crawford, in a speech delivered in Belfast in 1846, computed that Great Britain and Ireland paid no less, upon an average, than £6,000,000 per annum for foreign flax, seed, and oilcake; the whole of which might have been produced in Ireland. The importation has not much, if at all, diminished since that time. It is the object of the manufacturers of Belfast—in their own interest, of course—and of the landlords of the North of Ireland, who cooperate with them equally for self-interest, that this importation should cease, and that Ireland should produce all the flax that it needs. The only impediments in the way are want of capital and skill on the part of the people, and want of capital on the part of Irish landlords generally. The Society endeavours, by means of its paid agents, to remove the first impediment. It publishes instructions, in a plain and accessible shape, to the small farmers; and it sends its emissaries through the country to point out the advantages of a flax crop to the tenant and to the landlord. Good flax has been grown on bog land, which was valued at only 2s. 6d. per acre.—(Society's Report for 1847, page 9.)

At the flax exhibition of 1846, Mr. Armstrong, of Kippure Park, county Wicklow, exhibited some flax grown on the top of a mountain surrounded with heather. He stated that he had not read the advantage of any instruction from the society's agriculturists, which would account for the inferiority of its management; but, such as it was, it proved that, even at these high altitudes (900 feet and 1050 feet above the level of the sea), where flax had not hitherto been introduced, there was ample arena for its cultivation. The Marquis of Downshire corroborated this statement, and said the district where this flax was grown was "not one better than a grouse mountain." In fact, flax will thrive "not one better than a grouse mountain." In fact, flax will thrive with ordinary care, as well, if not better, in Ireland, than in any country of the world, and, were it only as extensively cultivated in Munster and Connaught as would meet the exigences of the linen manufacturers of Belfast, those now wretched districts, teeming with an unhappy population, cooped up in union workhouses, eating the bread of idleness, and dragging all the classes down with them into the common level of their own pauperism, would be raised to the enviable condition of the people of Ulster. In the South and West of Ireland, the only food of the peasant is the potato; and, when that fails, the Indian corn, called the potato; and, when that fails, the Indian corn, called out to him by a demoralizing charity. In the North of Ireland, where flax is cultivated, and where the linen manufacture flourishes, the peasant has never been reduced to a potato diet. "In the North of Ireland," says the Society's report for 1848, page 15, "oatmeal is much used as food, since flax and other crops afford the means of paying the landlords claims. During the present year (1848), in districts of the South and West, where the society has introduced the cultivation of flax, the people have been enabled in very many instances to meet the demands of the landlord and tax-collector by means of the produce of their little crops of flax. This has enabled them to retain the grain which would otherwise have been devoted to that purpose; and, in fact, to reserve all the food produce of the farms for the support of their families and live stock. It is evident, therefore," adds the report, "that the general adoption of flax cultivation would be a direct step towards the use of a grain diet, as well as of the introduction of many of the comforts which the population of Ulster enjoy."

During the spring of 1848, the Commissary-General placed in the hands of the committee 690 bushels of Dutch flax-seed imported for the purpose by the Government into Ireland. It was distributed through the agency of relief committees and individuals, among the poorer classes of farmers in the counties of Cork, Limerick, Clare, Galway, and Tipperary. The price charged was 8s. per bushel, which was under the market value. The breadth of land sown with this seed was 274 statute acres, and the produce was about 80 tons of flax, worth about £35 per ton,—or £2800. Mr. Blakely, of Warrenstown, county Down, grew upon three acres 100 stone of flax, valued at 1½ a stone, or £75, which was converted into cambric by the manufacturers of Belfast. The process of its conversion is described in the report of the Society for 1846 (page 20) as having given employment for a twelvemonth to 210 persons, whose wages amounted to £2217 6s. 8d. It was to him a profit, after paying for the flax, of £332 13s. 4d.

We have not at present any further space to bestow upon this interesting subject, but we think we have quoted enough to direct public attention to it. We believe the statements issued under the careful superintendence of the Belfast Society to be strictly accurate; and we agree with Mr. Sharman Crawford, in the elaborate address delivered by him in 1846, that the more extensive cultivation of flax in Ireland "is calculated to open a wide field of employment for the people; to afford to the small landholders a means of paying their rent better than any other which can be devised; to afford proper means, also, for the creation of what is admitted on all hands to be so much required in Ireland—capital; to lead to the increase of national as well as individual wealth; and, finally, to form the best and only effectual bridge, which would be most desirable to form in the country—a bond of union and connexion between the manufacturing and agricultural interests."

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO THE LINEN HALL AT BELFAST.

This splendid establishment, the head-quarters of the staple trade of Belfast, was the greatest point of attraction in the whole route of the Queen's visit on Saturday last. A beautiful arch was erected over the door at which her Majesty was to enter the exhibition-rooms. The sides of this arch were of green moss; the [illegible] interwoven with flowers. The arch was flanked by two splendid Irish yew trees, taken with fruit, from the conservatory of Robert Langtry, Esq., of Portwilliam.

In the centre of the Quadrangle a large mast was erected, from which to unfurl a Royal standard as soon as her Majesty entered the Hall; and various other flags floated in the breeze.

A little before three o'clock it was announced that her Majesty had left the pavilion and was on her way to the Hall, and in a few minutes the cheers of the multitude outside gave notice of her approach. The Lord Lieutenant [illegible] Duke of Abercorn, [illegible] Lord Chancellor [illegible] the Marquis [illegible] Lord Adjutant [illegible] Lord Downshire, [illegible] which was dressed with layers of the flax plant in the growing state, surmounted with laurel, and on the top a harp and crown in flowers, with the words "Royal Flax Society" in dahlia letters underneath—the carriages entered the inner gate, passed through the porch, and, on emerging upon the carriage-way which skirts the inner quadrangle, the Royal [illegible] Lord Chancellor and Committee of the Society [illegible] Lord Adjutant [illegible] Lord Downshire, [illegible] Lord Lieutenant [illegible] Duke of Abercorn, [illegible] Lord Chancellor [illegible] Marquis late Monarch the title of "Magnanimous," and decreed the erection of his statue in the Court of Honour of the Senatorial Palace.

The King of Sardinia has directed that the mourning for his Royal parent shall last for six months.

Two steamers of the Royal navy had been ordered to Oporto to convey to Piedmont the remains of Charles Albert. The Prince de Carignan, Prince de Masserano, and General Solaroli were to proceed to Portugal on this mission.

VENICE.—Accounts dated the 5th instant state that 17 large and small vessels had been sent out from Venice to pick up Garibaldi and his men. The Venetians fancy some the Continent with 500 infantry and 600 horse, and collect an immense quantity of provisions and oxen.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

The occupation of Raab, which we briefly noticed in our Postscript last week, is regarded by the Austrians as a terrible blow. All the artillery at Ataab and Moson was taken by the Hungarians, who took four batteries to Komorn, and spiked the rest. One battalion of the regiment Mansochal was captured; 40,000 cwt. of copper money, 50,000 uniforms, and 100,000 cwt. of flour were taken in Raab; and at Gyönyö the Hungarians took five vessels loaded with corn and with 17 cwt. of gunpowder. Near the city of Marchfeld, the Hungarians intercepted a Russian transport of 30,000 regimentals. The principal engagement in this affair took place at Aatsh, when General Klapka, with 8000 men, attacked the Imperialists, who mustered 5000, and who had five batteries of 6-pounders.

It is stated that there are two parties in the Austrian Cabinet. Schwarzenberg, Bach, and Schmerling insist upon continuing the war, and attempting to crush the Magyars by Russian aid. The Generals Haynau and Kramm are said to wish for peace. The prevailing feeling in Vienna is in favour of peace. The sympathy expressed in England for the cause of the Magyars has made a profound impression there.

The Austrian Premier, Prince Schwarzenberg, set out for Warsaw on the 6th inst., on a visit to his Majesty the Czar, for the purpose, it is thought, of consulting with his Russian Majesty on the steps to be taken to ensure a greater unity of purpose between the allied armies.

The latest accounts from the seat of war are conveyed in some bulletins which the Russians have published, boasting of great advantages they had obtained over the Hungarians in several engagements that had recently taken place. They admit, however, that they had been beaten in the pass of Ojtu, where they sustained a loss of 40 killed and 120 wounded.

At the latest date, the 11th inst., the communication between Vienna and Pesth, on the right bank of the Danube, was entirely interrupted. On the left bank, the position of the Hungarians was excellent.

SPAIN.

A ministerial crisis, involving the probable retirement of MM. Mon and Pidal, is expected at Madrid

The Duke of Aumale has arrived at Puerto de Santa Maria, on a visit to his brother the Duke of Montpensier.

PORTUGAL.

The only news from this stagnant quarter is that of a peculation of a very serious nature which has lately been brought to light in the Custom-house at Lisbon—some very high in authority are said to be implicated. The sum abstracted from the Sete Casas (Custom-house) is about £70,000 (300 contos). The critical position of the Bank of Lisbon causes great alarm.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The session of the Legislative Council was opened on the 16th of June, by the Hon. Mr. Montagu, his Excellency the Governor being unhappily, from the effects of his late indisposition, unable to attend in person. The usual minute was read, detailing the principal measures which are to be submitted to the Council during this session; but, important as many of those measures are, their announcement was listened to with manifest coldness and absence of mind, not only by the crowd in the gallery, but by the members of the Council. The subject that occupied all thoughts was one not named in the minute, namely, Lord Grey's proposal and apparent determination to make the colony a receptacle for felons. The greatest excitement prevails on the subject, and meetings continue to be held, at which strong resolutions are unanimously adopted against the proceeding. It appears that the Governor, Sir Harry Smith, and the Legislative Council are also opposed to this scheme of Earl Grey; but the former has stated, that, as he has received direct orders to carry the plan into effect, he felt bound to obey his instructions, although he felt great pain in doing so.

UNITED STATES.

The news from the States by this week's arrival is of little or no interest. The cholera still continues its ravages unabated.

Three negroes have been executed at Charleston, South Carolina, for having knocked down a gaoler and made their escape from prison!

At St. Louis there has been another conflagration, in which three vessels full of freight were consumed.

Shocking outrages continue to be committed on the plains and the Rio Grande by the Indians.

CANADA.

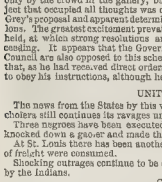
The latest accounts state that the ill-feeling created by the recent outrages o the Orangemen had not altogether subsided.

The proceedings of the British League, which had commenced its session in Kingston, Canada West, have not yet assumed any importance.

A conflagration had taken place in Quebec, where damage to the extent of £30,000 had been done.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED

FRANCES, COUNTESS OF DARTMOUTH.



HER Ladyship, whose death is just announced, was second daughter of George, fifth Viscount Barrington, by Elizabeth his wife, daughter of Robert Adair, Esq. She was born 20th October, 1802, and became the second wife of the present Earl of Dartmouth on the 25th October, 1826. The issue of the marriage consists of fourteen surviving children—six sons and eight daughters.

The eminence of the Barrington family was caused by the singular bequest—to the Countess's great-grandfather, John Shute, Esq., barrister-at-law—of a large property in Berkshire, by John Wildman, Esq., of Becket; the will declaring the testator had the power to make Mr. Shute his heir was that he considered him the most worthy of all his acquaintance of adoption, after the manner of the Romans, a mode of settling property of which he had always approved.

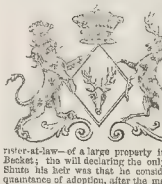
Shute Barrington, the excellent and estimable Bishop of Durham, was granduncle of Lady Dartmouth.

MRS. CROMWELL RUSSELL, OF CHESHUNT PARK, HERTS.



We have this week to record the demise of Elizabeth Oliveria, only daughter and heiress of the late Oliver Cromwell, Esq., of Theobalds, who was great-grandson of Henry Cromwell, Lord Deputy of Ireland, third son of the Lord Protector, OLIVER CROMWELL. Henry Cromwell, the Lord Deputy, had, besides his son Henry, from whom Mrs. Cromwell Russell descended, a daughter Elizabeth, who became the wife of William Russell, Esq., of Fordham Abbey, and is now represented by William Andrew Dyer, Esq., of Gloucester-place.

After the death of Oliver Cromwell, in 1658, Richard, his eldest son, succeeded to the protector power, but his rule lasted only seven months and twenty-eight days. He preferred the tranquillity of private life, and survived, in retirement, to the advanced age of eighty-seven. Pennant, the quaint historian, mentions that his father had told him that he used often to see, at the Don Saltero Coffee-house at Chelsea, poor Richard Cromwell, "a little and very neat old man, with a neat plaited countenance, the effect of his innocent and unambitious course." Richard left no male issue; consequently, the representation of the Lord Protector's family was carried on by the descendants of his (Richard's) next brother, Henry, of whom, as we have already stated, Mrs. Cromwell Russell was the heir and representative. Her father, Oliver Cromwell, a solicitor of eminence, and clerk to St. Thomas's Hospital, succeeded, under the will of his cousin the Miss Cromwells, to the estate at Theobalds, Herts, which had been granted by Charles II. to General Monk for services in restoring the Monarchy! He published some very interesting memoirs of his ancestors, and was honourable proud in his descent, that, wishing to perpetuate the name of his great ancestor, he applied for permission that his son-in-law (the husband of his only daughter) should assume the surname of Cromwell, a permission the illiberality of the Government of the day refused.

The late Mrs. Cromwell Russell has originated three new remarks on the form of it in the case of the late Count Lavradio, was born at Rio, and died at Paris, 1801, Thomas Aremberg Russell, Esq., by whom she had several children.

SIR THOMAS READE, KNT.

INTELLIGENCE has arrived of the death of this respected gentleman, her Majesty's Consul at Tunis. Sir Thomas, who attained the rank of colonel in the army in 1837, was formerly Deputy Adjutant-General at St. Helena. He received in 18 , the third Class of the Order of St. Ferdinand and Merit for his services near Messina, in 1810, being then Assistant Quarter-Master-General to the forces in Sicily; and was knighted by his own Sovereign in 1815.

On application to the authorities by the Board of Health, the Ordnance department have ordered tents to be supplied to the inhabitants of Megavesey, Cornwall, for them to live under whilst their village is being cleaned, during the prevalence of cholera there. Her Majesty's lighter Rochester sailed from Devonport, with the tents, on Tuesday last.

EPITOME OF NEWS—FOREIGN AND DOMESTIC.

The Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel preached on Sunday morning as a Baptist minister, in Mr. Evans' chapel, John-street, Bedford-row, the same place in which the hon. and rev. gentleman was baptized on the previous Thursday evening last.

On Monday the flags of all the ships of the General Steam Navigation Company, in the river, were hoisted half-mast high, in token of respect to the memory of the highly-esteemed and deeply-lamented secretary of the company, the late John Wilson, Esq.

Mr. Heald and the Countess of Landsfeldt (Lola Montes) arrived in Paris on Friday and occupy apartments at the Hôtel Windsor. It is said Mr. Heald has settled £2000 a-year on the lady.

Mrs. Jermy passed through Preston on Monday on her way to the Lakes, where she is about to remain for a short time. Her servant, Eliza Chestney, was with her.

A fire, which is attributed to malevolence, burst out on the 2d in the forest possessed by Mdme. de Ségur, in the neighbourhood of Lue, not far from Toulon (France). The greatest part of this fine forest was destroyed, and the flames then spread to the plantations of M. de Colbert, which also suffered very much indeed. The damage is estimated at 500,000f

The Paris Court of Assizes has condemned M. Gustave Leroy, for a song which he composed, called "Le Bal et la Guillotine," to six months' imprisonment and a fine of 200 francs. The burden of the song was, that while the guillotine was cutting off the heads of the alleged murderers of General Bréa, the great inhabitant of the palace of the Elysée (Louis Napoleon) was enjoying a ball.

On Friday week, as Captain Badcock, of Lymington, was out on the Solent in his sailing-boat, accompanied by his brother, by Mr. Clayton, and his two sons, aged respectively ten and twelve years, they accidentally came in contact with a yacht, by which the boat was upset, and Captain Badcock and his two sons were unhappily drowned, and that gentleman himself escaped with much difficulty, and is at present very ill from the effects of the calamity.

On Tuesday week a lad, while taking a walk, entered "Nanny Rowley's Wood," near Earnuses colliery, a short distance from Gateshead, and found upon the ground the body of a youth, with a cord round his neck. On the branch of a tree above, a handkerchief was made fast, and a cord; and it was evident that the deceased, after being suspended, had fallen to the ground through the breaking of the cord. The body was indentified as that of Joseph Wyse, the son of a mason.

At Lothers, near Salisbury, during the storm on Tuesday night week, a bull and two pair of heifers were destroyed by lightning, and a large oak tree in the neighbourhood was shattered to pieces.

Early on Wednesday morning week two horses, the property of Mr. Yeasley, landlord of the Antelope Inn, of Salisbury, were found dead in a field, called the West Ward, on the outskirts of the town. The animals lay within a few yards of each other; and, on examination, the marks left by the electric fluid were observable on the chest of one, and running down one of the fore-legs of the other. The horses were valued, one at £30, the other £15.

The official table of exports shows that, in the month ending 5th July last, the total value of the coals exported from the United Kingdom amounted to only £81,763, whereas, during the corresponding month of last year, it reached £93,996. Nearly the whole of this immense falling off, if not the whole, is attributed to the blockade of the German ports and rivers, by Denmark, during the recent hostilities.

The festivities of the past week in Dublin have not been without their drawback. In consequence of the tremendous rushing at the station on Sunday night, a young lady, Miss Jones, of Capel-street, fell between the carriages, and had both her legs broken. On the following day amputation was performed, but it was too much for the poor sufferer, who expired under the operation.

At Lemberg, in Galicia (Austrian Poland), on the 31st ult., a milliner, accused of making Kossuth cockades, and of having persuaded or coaxed her husband to play the spy, was taken to the barracks, and there punished with thirty blows from rods, or rather sticks, on her bare back.

Emigration has taken place lately to a considerable extent from South Uist, on the properties of Colonel Gordon of Cluny and Lord Macdonald. A fine large Clyde ship, the Tusker, sailed on Tuesday from Loch Boisdale for Quebec, conveying 500 souls, and a second ship, the Monarch of Elphinstone, was expected to sail later in the week with about 380 souls. The most, if not the whole of these people were from Colonel Gordon's property; and he assists them by taking their crops at a valuation, the emigration agent at Glasgow taking the stock also at valuation.

Mr. E. Brown, late of Preston, who has made some important discoveries in chemistry, has, since his paper on "The Prevention of Poisoning by Chloroform and Sulphuric Ether" was read before the Royal Society, discovered the liquification of hydrogen gas, a desideratum to chemists since the liquification of chlorine was effected by Faraday, in 1836. Mr. Brown intends contributing a paper on the subject to the Royal Society.

The site fixed upon for building the New University Museum at Oxford is in the parks, near the Wadham College Gardens. Merton College, to whom the land belongs, have consented to let the University have four acres for that purpose. The building, &c., it is expected, will cost upwards of £50,000, a great portion of which will be raised by subscription, and the remainder will be made up from the University chest.

General Cabrera, the celebrated Carlist chief, arrived in London on Saturday evening last.

On Monday, the waters of the River Thames fell unusually low, and at four o'clock the usual channels of the navigation were impassable, and many vessels grounded above bridge, the surface of the water was found to be of unfathomable shoals, and at the steam-boat piers planks, &c., were compelled to be hoisted out to land and embark passengers, at Waterloo Bridge the whole of the arches, except two next the Middlesex shore, were dry.

On Monday information was received by the police that the residence of Lord Seymour, 18, Spring-gardens, had been entered and plundered of £300 worth of silver plate, consisting of knives, forks, and silver waiters, &c., bearing the crest, a Tree with a Saw through its Trunk: motto, "Through," by a lad, having the appearance of a cheesemonger's shopman, who obtained admission under pretence of calling for orders.

An arrival of gold, to the amount of £195,000, took place last week from Russia. £95,000 was on Government, and £100,000 on private account—the latter by special permission, the export of gold, under ordinary circumstances, being still prohibited

The imports of pork, bacon, hams, &c. into Liverpool, for the fortnight ending the 8th instant, are as follow, which, though light nominally, are in reality, considering the very advanced season, heavy. Formerly Ireland supplied these, and got paid from England, now America supplies us, and gets the cash:—1938 barrels of pork, 1047 boxes of bacon, 16 hogsheads of hams, and 376 kegs of lard.

The Queen has been pleased to direct letters patent to be passed under the great seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland granting unto Henry Murray Lane, gentleman, the office of Bluemantle, Pursuivant of Arms, vacant by the promotion of George Harrison Rogers Harrison, Esq., to the office of Windsor Herald.

Mrs. Butler's (Fanny Kemble's) case has at last been ended by a compromise, which secures her 1500 dollars per annum, and the enjoyment of her children's society for two months in a year. The gifted lady will reside permanently in Massachusetts.

Not long ago Mr. Richard Rawcliffe, of the Wild Boar Farm, Out Rawcliffe, sustained a very heavy loss by the death of the greatest portion of his cattle in the sovereign epidemic. On its becoming known to his landlord, T. Butler Cole, Esq., of Kirkland, he most generously forgave him a full year's rent, although it was the first year of his tenancy

The promised contributions to the building fund of the Normal College for Wales now exceed £3000. The sum of £50 was unanimously voted to be applied to the same object, by the Committee of the "Voluntary School Association, London," on the 30th ult

His Highness the Queen Dowager, with her usual munificence, has just transmitted to the Institution of the Sailor's Home, in Wells-street, Londondocks (a receptacle for seamen paid off from their respective ships in the port of London), £400, being the cost of building the eighth and last dormitory.

A vessel just arrived in the docks from Seville has brought 3500 barrels of quicksilver, consigned to a house of commercial eminence

The public executioner of Presburg (Hungary) has refused to execute the sentences of death by hanging passed by court-martial on some Hungarian nobles, and has offered his resignation. The executioner of Buda had according y been sent to Presburg. He made little difficulty in the matter.

The Mexican inhabitants of Rio Grande city recently lynched a man named Jack Mills, for murdering a respectable Mexican citizen of that place by deliberately shooting him down with his revolver as a bonâ fide. A meeting was held, resolutions determining upon Mills' extermination were passed, and a committee appointed to carry the resolutions into effect, which they did most fatally, by perforating his body with full thirty balls.

It is now decided that the "Vernon testimonial" shall consist of a marble bust of Mr. Vernon, and ornamented pedested, to be placed in the National Gallery.

A farmer in Suffolk, within the last few days, was fined one pound and costs, for drawing blood from an old woman whom he called a witch, by scratching her head with a nail. He said she had bewitched him.

The Havanna authorities have acceded to an application requesting that copperas may be allowed to be landed at one of the wharfs on the south side of the Thames; the report of their principal officers thereon having recommended that copperas may be added to the list of articles allowed to be landed at all the first-class sufferance wharfs on the river side.

Mr. Nicoll, the sheriff elect for London and Middlesex, has appointed the Rev. Thomas George Patteson Hough, M.A., incumbent of Ham, Surrey, to be his chaplain, and Mr. David Williams Wire, of St. Swithin's-lane, to be his under-sheriff.

THE QUEEN AND PRINCE ALBERT'S VISIT TO THE BANK OF IRELAND, DUBLIN.—COURT OF PROPRIETORS' ROOM, FORMERLY THE HOUSE OF LORDS.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

DUBLIN.

In the late edition of our Double Number of last week we recorded the Royal sojourn at Dublin, to the departure of her Majesty for Belfast.

We now Illustrate three of the Royal visits to three of the public establishments of the city of Dublin: these are—the Bank of Ireland, the Female Infant School of the National Board of Education, and the Botanic Garden. The visit to the Bank has been already described, at page 87; the visit to the National Board of Education, in the same page; and the visit to the Botanic Garden, in page 86.

The Bank faces College-green. it is the old Irish Parliament House, where, before the Union, the Irish representatives

Sat in grand committee,
How to plague and starve the city.

This is the finest building in Dublin, and one of the very finest in the kingdom. Since its conversion into a bank, the interior has undergone an entire change, except the House of Lords, which yet retains very much of its original appearance. This is now the Court of Proprietors Room, shown in our Illustration: in the semicircular recess once occupied by the throne is a statue of King George III. The walls are hung with Dutch tapestry, which is very fine.

The Botanic Garden is close to the ancient village of Glasnevin, on one of the leading roads from Dublin to the eastern portion of the county, and also the county of Meath distant about a mile and a half from the Post-office.

The Tolka, which divides the garden from the village, is a classic stream. On its banks the celebrated Addison, along with Swift, Parnell, Steele, and Tickell, lived during considerable periods of their lives. The ground now occupied by the Botanic Garden was the demesne of Tickell, who came to Ireland in 1714, with Addison, who was secretary to Lord Sunderland, the then Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland. The house in which the poet lived is still in tolerable preservation, and now that in which the curator resides. A distant view of it appears in our wood-cut representing the entrance-gate, where the arched bed-room windows and roof appear in the background. Immediately adjoining the garden is the great Glasnevin Cemetery, where the remains of the late Daniel O'Connell rest; and not far distant, in the same place, lie the ashes of the once celebrated lawyer and orator, John Philpot Curran.

The handsome range of conservatories represented in our wood-cut has been recently built, and the expense mostly defrayed by special parliamentary grants. The garden is one of the largest in Europe, as well as one of the most comprehensive in design, containing as it does nearly thirty statute acres.

The Illustration of the Court-yard of the Castle represents the arrival of the company to the Levee, described at page 89.

We next give a few additional details of the events of Thursday.

GRAND REVIEW IN PHŒNIX-PARK.

On Thursday morning, soon after dawn, the crash of military music resounded in every street; the gleaming of arms and the waving of standards were visible in every great thoroughfare, as the troops marched to the ground. Nothing could be finer than the appearance of the various bodies of men—the solid columns of infantry bristling with bayonets, in their scarlet and gray; the gay Lancers fluttering about the field, the very butterflies of war—the Hussars, all radiant with finery, and looking steam-and-gold—the quick step-jobours roll of the field Artillery, cutting deep into the sward, and still moving as nimbly as the horsemen beside them; then the splendid squadrons of the Enniskillens, and the sombre and steady-looking masses of constabulary in their uniforms of dark green, scarcely distinguishable but by their superior bulk and stature from the Rifles basi-a them. The troops on the ground comprised two regiments of Hussars (7th and 8th), the 6th Carabineers, the 6th Enniskillens, and the 17th Lancers. The infantry consisted of the 1st Royals (2nd battalion), 2nd Queen's Royal Regiment, the 40th, 48th, 55th, 60th Rifles (2nd battalion), 71st Highland Light Infantry, and 9th Foot—in all 6160 men.

At ten o'clock the Royal standard was hoisted, and the Queen left the Lodge. Her Majesty was in an open barouche, drawn by four horses, with postilions and outriders. She was accompanied by the Royal children, and attended by the Countess of Clarendon. Prince Albert was mounted on a magnificent dark chesnut charger, and was dressed in the uniform of a Field-Marshal. He wore a star on the left breast.

The troops having been marched to the front of the Royal standard flag-staff, near which the Royal carriage was stationed, Prince Albert took the command with Lieutenant-General Sir Edward Blakeney.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"G. V.," Dublin, is thanked for his letter. Our Correspondent is of opinion that the fatty matter, or "bog spermaceti," mentioned in Mr. Rogers's paper on the Bogs of Ireland, read to the Botanical Society of London, and printed in our Number of last week, is identical with the "Fossil Butter" frequently found in the northern counties of Ireland, sometimes in rudely-formed barrels (see specimens in the collection of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin), and well known to Irish antiquaries. This, G. V. considers to set aside the idea of the "bog spermaceti" being a mineral substance; therefore, as usually as one of the industrial resources of Ireland is at once evident.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1849.

HER Majesty has concluded her Irish trip: has gratified Dublin—pleased Glasgow, the most important city of her domains, next to London—and is, by this time, safe in the Highland retirement of Balmoral, in the enjoyment, as her people devoutly hope, of all the blessings that can fall to the lot of humanity. Her progress has been in the highest degree satisfactory; and she has left behind her impressions of good which will not be effaced. There is every reason to believe that her visit to Ireland is but the first of an annual series, and that the mutual satisfaction of the Queen and people of Ireland towards each other will lead to a still more intimate acquaintance on both sides. Her Majesty's delight at the unexpected cordiality and enthusiasm of her Irish people is no secret. She has found her way into their hearts; and we trust that in future years both England and Ireland will see the happy results of the confidence that will date from her first visit. Her Majesty has taken occasion to show the Irish people the interest she takes in their country, by conferring upon the Prince of Wales the title of Earl of Dublin—a small matter in itself, but one which shows, in connexion with many others, the current of her feeling. If, as is supposed, it should be resolved that she shall hold her Court annually in Dublin, a still more substantial mark of her good intentions will be conferred, and a foundation will be laid for the fair, free, and kindly introduction of the English and Irish people to each other. Hitherto, they have been estranged by their mutual ignorance—an ignorance maintained and fostered by unwise politicians and uncharitable sectarians. Her Majesty promises to be the means of removing it; and we trust that many a now miserable and uncultivated district, covered with unroofed cottages and squalid paupers, will have cause to bless the day when Englishmen were induced to follow in the footsteps of the Sovereign; and learn the capabilities of that rich soil, and the many good qualities of a long-suffering and long-slandered, but grateful and affectionate people.

But, perhaps, the most gratifying of all the gratifying circumstances connected with the visit is the letter which, by command of her Majesty, Sir George Grey has addressed to the Earl of Clarendon. We present the document without further comment, feeling assured that both in England and in Ireland it will be perused with the highest satisfaction by all classes of the people:—

Royal Yacht, 13th August, 1849.

MY LORD,—It is with sincere pleasure that I perform the duty which devolves upon me, in obedience to her Majesty's command, of expressing to your Excellency, at the close of her Majesty's visit to Ireland, the heartfelt satisfaction which she has derived from her reception in that portion of the United Kingdom over which your Excellency presides with universally increasing credit. From the time of her Majesty's arrival at Cork to that of her departure from Belfast, of warm and devoted loyalty and attachment to her throne and person, and of affection for every branch of her family. The circumstances which have attended this visit cannot fail to strengthen the deep interest which your Excellency is aware has long been felt by her Majesty in all that concerns the happiness and welfare of her Irish people.

Her Majesty rejoiced to observe among the multitudes who enthusiastically greeted her appearance, the absence of all distinction of class and party; and she indulges the hope that the feelings elicited on this occasion may tend to promote, among all her faithful subjects in Ireland, that union of heart and affection which is essential to the prosperity of their common country.

I am further commanded to express the high satisfaction with which her Majesty remarked the general regard and esteem entertained for your Excellency, which have been so justly earned by your able, judicious, and impartial discharge of the high trust confided to you.

I am, with great truth and regard, my Lord,
Your Excellency's obedient servant,
(Signed) G. GREY.

THE French nation is fairly entangled in financial difficulties. The corrupt extravagance of the reign of Louis Philippe dwindles into insignificance when compared with the reckless extravagance which has characterised the Republic. The Ministers of the Monarchy, although they may have expended lavishly, were wise enough to hold firm by the sources of revenue at their command; but the National Assembly of the Republic not only authorised an immense outlay out of resources diminished by the commercial panic that always follows Revolution, but, with insane generosity, abolished some of the most prolific of existing taxes, without providing substitutes for them. In the remarkable message of the President to the present Assembly the naked truth was very plainly told. The additional charges rendered necessary by the Revolution, including the expenditure of the Provisional Government, the absurd national workshops, the redemption of the pawn-tickets of the mob of Paris, the salaries of members of the Chambers, the maintenance of the Garde Mobile, the cost of powder and shot for foreign and home service, and of the largely-increased army, amounted, in round numbers, to 205 millions and a half, or £8,220,000 sterling. In addition to this evil reckoning, the public debt in 1848 was increased by the creation of rentes to the amount of 56 millions and a half of francs. The tax on wines and spirits, producing one hundred millions of francs, or £4,000,000 sterling, was abolished by the National Assembly during the last days of its existence, in order to please the populace of the capital. The estimated deficiency for 1848, notwithstanding an increase of 40 per cent. on the assessed taxes imposed upon the wealthy, and borne with some grumbling, and the increased debt already alluded to, amounted to 72 millions of francs; while the deficiency for 1849 is estimated at 180 millions. To restore the duties upon wines and spirits is too dangerous even for the present strong Government; and to invent new taxes that shall have the essential quality of productiveness, is beyond the skill of mortals.

The President and his ministers have, if it be possible, to extricate the nation from this dilemma. Hitherto, as we have seen, they have discovered no expedient more statesmanlike or more just than to borrow;—tiding over the evil hour, and leaving the next year or the next generation to provide for itself. But even this unworthy and unsafe policy has proved unsuccessful, by the President's own showing, and they have been compelled at last to have recourse to an income-tax—the most unpopular, the most odious, and the most easily avoided of all taxes. There is one element of fairness about the French Income-tax which is not possessed by the Income and Property-tax in this country;—it is to extend to all incomes whatsoever. In a country like France, where incomes are far more equal than amongst us, and where the vast majority of the people, including the multitudinous owners of small pieces of land, do not possess incomes of more than a thousand francs a year, upon the average, the very fairness of the tax will increase its unpopularity. Were the Income-tax rendered necessary by a coalition of the great Powers against France, it would be paid, were it ten times as excessive; but in a state of things where the national glory in foreign conquest is not to be flattered, and the national existence as an independent state is not threatened, we fear that the President will find that, to get out of one difficulty, he has but run into another—and that the rigorous collection of the tax will concentrate against his Government an amount of hostility in the highest degree perilous to the existing quietude of the country.

COURT AND HAUT TON.

RUMOURED ROYAL VISITS.—It is currently reported in well-informed circles that during the sojourn of her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert at Balmoral, Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, at Dunrobin Castle, and the Earl of Aberdeen, at Haddo House.

THE QUEEN DOWAGER.—Monday was the anniversary of the birthday of her Majesty the Queen Dowager. The usual loyal demonstrations were made in the Royal parishes during the day, and in the evening her Majesty's tradespeople illuminated, in celebration of the auspicious event.

THE DUCHESS OF KENT.—The anniversary of the birthday of the Duchess of Kent was celebrated with great rejoicing on Friday, at Tonbridge Wells, where her Royal Highness is at present sojourning.

HIS IMPERIAL HIGHNESS THE GRAND DUKE OF LEUCHTENBERG. This illustrious member of the Czar's family arrived at Southampton on Saturday last, in the Russian steam-frigate Kamschatka. His Imperial Highness came to town the same day, and was received at the railway terminus by Baron Brunnow, the Russian Minister, by whom he was conducted to Ashburnham House, where he has remained during the present week. On Saturday his Imperial Highness went to the Opera, and on Sunday the Prince made calls on the Duke of Wellington, Viscount Palmerston, Prince Metternich, &c. During the early part of the week the Prince "Hoofed" in London, visiting all the principal public establishments, private exhibitions, &c.; and on Tuesday Baron Brunnow gave a grand banquet in his honour, at which Lord John Russell, Viscount Palmerston, and several foreign Ministers were present. On Thursday the Prince left town and re-embarked at Southampton, en route for Malorca, where his Imperial Highness purposes to reside during the ensuing winter for the benefit of his health, which is somewhat unsatisfactory. The Duke of Leuchtenberg married, in 1839, the Grand Duchess Mary, eldest daughter of the Emperor Nicholas, by whom he has a family of four children. The Grand Duchess, being at this time in an interesting situation, is prevented from accompanying her husband.

The Duke of Wellington left Apsley House on Monday for Walmer Castle. The gallant and noble Duke, who is in the enjoyment of excellent health, will shortly receive a succession of visitors

POSTSCRIPT.

THE EARL OF LINCOLN, M.P.—The health of the Earl of Lincoln is far from being in a satisfactory state, his Lordship having recently had repeated attacks of the gout, which have invariably had a tendency to the heart; his Lordship's medical attendants, however, do not anticipate any actual disease there. His Lordship, accompanied by his brother, Lord Robert Pelham Clinton, Mr. Greene le Vernon, jun., and three or four other gentlemen, will set out in the Grana yacht on Monday next, for Spain; and it is the present intention of the party to remain abroad for eight or nine months, during which they will visit the Holy Land, Sicily, and Italy, and proceed up the Nile as far as the cataracts.

LONDON AND NORTH WESTERN RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held at the Euston station yesterday; G. C. Glyn, Esq., M.P., in the chair; when a report was presented, which stated that the directors had to report a diminution of the passenger traffic as compared with the corresponding period of 1848, of £22,150; the coals traffic showed a decrease of £1,622, but the miscellaneous traffic showed an increase of £3,669, which had been obtained at a very trifling augmentation of working expenses, while the ordinary working expenses were reduced. The aggregate receipts from traffic had been £[illegible], the working expenses being £5054 less, leaving a net increase of profits of £2,886, with about the same mileage. With a view of providing a deterioration fund for the replacement of the line, a sum of £7525 had been placed aside for the half year. The directors had concluded a beneficial arrangement for working in conjunction with the Midland Railway, the Eastern Counties Railway, and the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway; and negotiations were also going on with the North Staffordshire Railway Company, with a view to conducting to the public interests. Negotiations were going on with the Great Western Railway, which, it was hoped, would lead to a similar arrangement, by which many materially advantageous to both parties. In conclusion, the directors recommended the payment of a dividend of 3½ per cent. for the half year, being at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum out of the disposable balance in hand of £[illegible], leaving a balance to be carried to the next account of £5,901 10s. 1d. The report was adopted; the dividend declared payable on the 27th inst.; and, one or two formal resolutions having been passed, the meeting separated.

BOULOGNE AND AMIENS RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held at the Euston station yesterday; Sir H. Verney, Bart., in the chair; when a report was presented which stated that the works on the line were proceeding in a satisfactory state, and that the directors hoped they would be ready for opening in the spring of 1850. In order to economise the expenditure and accelerate the completion of the works, the directors had determined to lay down single lines from Clayden Junction to Oxford and Banbury, and putting down the Electric Telegraph for the service of the railway. Negotiations were going on with the Great Western Company to provide a better terminus than that at present occupied by the latter Company, and on favourable terms of exchanging traffic. The accounts showed the total receipts to have been £881,384 17s., and the expenditure £844,231 19s., leaving a balance at the bankers of £37,152 18s. The report was unanimously adopted; and, after some formal resolutions, the meeting separated.

STRIKE AT BIRMINGHAM.—A turn out (which commenced during the past week) among the cellars of South Staffordshire, extends, and promises to be a general one. About 600 colliers struck work on Monday morning at Netherton and Briery hill ceased work on Thursday. Instead of quietly submitting to a reduction of 6d. a day, as proposed by the masters, the men now require an advance of 6d. on their previous wages. Although some thousands are out upon strike at present, everything is quiet and peaceable.

LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

FRANCE.

According to our advices from Paris last night the French Government had received information that Austria had applied to Bavaria for military assistance, and that the latter Power was about to send 50,000 troops to protect the Austrian capital, so as to leave all the Imperial forces free to act in Hungary. This intelligence is said to have disturbed the French Government very much, because of the irritation likely to be excited in France

The troops left at Rome by General Oudinot have exhibited strong feelings of dissatisfaction at not being permitted to return to France.

HAMBURGH.

On Monday last, the 13th instant, a sanguinary affair took place here between a body of 800 Prussian soldiers and the populace, arising out of the political ill-feeling entertained towards the former. The corps was the 2nd battalion of the 34th Regiment of Prussian Infantry, and on its marching from Altona into Hamburgh, not people gathered in great masses and pelted them with stones. Another party tried to shut the gate by which they entered against them. The soldiers used their arms against the people, and there was a regular battle, in the course, the military loss was comparatively insignificant, while that of the people was considerable. Ten soldiers were carried off to the hospital; five rounds were fired by the soldiers. During the night a part of the burgherwehr were sent for to assist the soldiers to barricade Altona to the Riding School, where the battalion was quartered. At these barricades fresh conflicts ensued. Towards the morning the barricades were cleared away, and later everything was quiet. Of the people there were 40 conveyed to the hospital, badly wounded.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY.

Accounts from Vienna of the 12th mention the defeat of Bem by the Russians, in Transylvania. The loss of the Hungarians, as given in the bulletin, is evidently exaggerated, as it is stated to be 1000, while that of the Russians was 44 The Russian General, Sastiatin, was killed by a cannon ball.

ORDINATIONS.

The Lord Bishop of Lincoln's next ordination will be held in the Cathedral on Sunday, the 23rd of September next. Candidates are required to send their papers to his Lordship six weeks previously.

The Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells intends to hold an ordination in the Cathedral Church of Wells on Sunday, the 23rd of December next.

The Lord Bishop of Exeter will hold his next general ordination in the Cathedral Church of Exeter on Sunday, the 23rd of September next. Candidates for holy orders are desired to transmit the requisite papers to his Lordship's secretary, Mr. Ralph Barnes, at Exeter, six weeks before the day of ordination.

The Lord Bishop of Ely's next ordination will be holden on Sunday, the 23rd day of September next. Candidates for holy orders are desired to transmit the requisite papers (prepaid) to his Lordship's registry, John Burder, Esq., 27, Parliament-street, Westminster, on or before the 23rd day of August next. The Bishop requires from all candidates from the University of Cambridge applying for deacon's orders, a certificate of their having passed the voluntary theological examination. And all candidates for deacon's orders (except on college titles) are to give immediate notice to the Bishop, at the Palace, Ely, of their intention of applying for ordination, unless they have already had communication with his Lordship, or his chaplain, the Rev. Professor Corrie, St. Catharine's Hall, Cambridge. The Bishop particularly requests that due attention be paid to papers being sent in on or before the 23rd inst.

The Lord Bishop of Salisbury proposes to hold his next ordination on Sunday, 23rd December. Candidates for deacon's orders are requested to send their names to the Bishop not later than the 20th of September next.

PENSIONERS FOR AUSTRALIA.—We understand it is the intention of the noble Lord at the head of the Colonial Office, in conjunction with the Secretary at War, to adopt measures to encourage a certain number of our pensioners to the colonies. It is proposed to send out a company of these men in charge of each convict ship that is to proceed to Australia, and arrangements for this purpose will be made with the shipping agents. The pensioners on this visit will be enrolled in a local force, and placed under the charge of the staff officer of pensioners for the district in which the men are to reside. By this means a resident military force will be provided for each colony, and the wives and children of the pensioners selected will, we believe, be sent out free several months after their husbands.

ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH BETWEEN LONDON AND PARIS.—The French government has accorded to Mr. Brett the requisite assistance to establish, as soon as practicable, a submarine electric telegraph between Calais and Boulogne, which, crossing the Channel, will go to Dover on the coast of England. The treaty entered into with Mr. Brett guarantees certain advantages to the French government, and leaves all the expense at the charge of Mr. Brett, assuming him, however, a privilege for ten years in case the experiment should succeed. The works must be terminated by the 1st of September, 1850, at the latest; but it is probable that they will be finished sooner. This first application of the submarine electric telegraph, if it should succeed, as from the long examinations which have been made there is every reason to hope, will produce on the relations between France and England results of which it is impossible at present to estimate the importance. Dover, the point at which the submarine telegraph is to join England, is united to London by a direct telegraphic line; the capitals will, therefore, be in this manner in almost instantaneous communication.

COUNTRY NEWS.

SYMPATHY WITH THE HUNGARIANS.

On Monday, at Birmingham, a town's meeting, convened by the mayor of the borough, was held at the Corn-Exchange, for the purpose of sympathising with the people of Hungary, and memorialising the Government to recognise the independence of the Hungarians

Amongst those present were Samuel Thornton, Esq., mayor; Mr. Scholefield, Esq., M.P.; Alderman Palmer, George Dawson, Esq., Joseph Sturge, Esq., town clerk, Alderman Martineau, ex-mayor; Joseph Sturge, &c.

The Mayor, in opening the proceedings, said he was happy in being able to respond to the highly respectable requisition which had been presented to him.

W. Scholefield, Esq., M.P., moved the first resolution, viz.:—

"That, as Englishmen, as lovers of freedom, civil and religious, as true Conservatives, and as friends of progress, this meeting feel it a sacred duty to express their earnest, entire, and unreserved approbation of the Hungarian struggle for independence, and their humble and hearty admiration of Hungarian heroism."

The Rev. Dr. Raphall, Jewish minister, who seconded the resolution, Mr. Gill, and Mr. Joseph Sturge, briefly addressed the meeting.

The resolution was carried.

G. M. Muntz, Esq., M.P., moved the next resolution, which was as follows:—

"Resolved,—That we look with deep and unmitigated abhorrence on the savage and horrible manner in which Austria carries on the war, and as friends of the rights of nations and the freedom of the world, emphatically protest against the unrighteous intervention of Russia."

Mr. Lawson seconded the resolution, which was put and carried, after which the meeting was addressed by Mr. James Mason, Mr. Baldwin, and others, and the following resolutions were also agreed to:—

"That a petition be presented to the Queen, praying the Government to give an emphatic expression to these universal feelings of the people, by immediately recognising the de facto Government of Hungary; and that the Mayor be requested to sign the same on behalf of the meeting, and to secure its presentation."

"That a committee be appointed, with power to add to their numbers, to organise a subscription, and to take all desirable means for aiding the Hungarians throughout the struggle."

MEETING AT DERBY.

A large and enthusiastic meeting was held in Derby, in the Town-hall, on Monday evening. From 800 to 1000 were present. The meeting was convened by the Mayor, in compliance with a requisition signed by men of all parties, clergymen and dissenting ministers, &c. The object was to express with the citizens of London and other towns in an expression of sympathy with the Hungarians, and to consider the propriety of addressing a memorial to Government. By an oversight, the Russians were omitted from the heading of the requisition, and the resolutions were therefore limited to the cause of the Hungarians, though several of the speakers—the Mayor among them—referred to the position of the Russians

The chair was taken by the Mayor

Mr. Alderman Moss gave a brief history of the Hungarians and their connexion with Austria, and, after alluding in the strongest manner the interference of Russia, and the horrid barbarities committed by Haynau, proposed the following resolution:—

That this meeting recognises the right of every independent nation to manage its own internal affairs; that it deeply sympathises with the Hungarians, who have suffered so much calumny while heroically contending for this right; and protests against the armed interference of Russia to deprive those gallant people of national freedom, and to entail on them and their posterity a forced subjection to arbitrary power.

The Rev. C. P. Shepherd, curate of St. Peter's, seconded the resolution, which was carried by acclamation.

Mr. Bass, M.P. for the borough, proposed the next resolution, viz.:—

That a memorial, signed by the chairman in behalf of the meeting, be presented to her Majesty, through her Majesty's Foreign Secretary, expressive of the sense of this meeting, and earnestly praying for the immediate recognition of the Government de facto of Hungary, as demanded not less by justice, policy, and the commercial interests of both countries, than by a solicitude to stay the effusion of human blood, and to terminate the barbarous atrocities which mark the progress of the Austrian and Russian armies.

The Rev. J. Gawthorn having seconded the resolution, it was carried unanimously, as also was the following memorial

TO THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY

The memorial of the inhabitants of Derby, assembled at a public meeting convened by the Worshipful the Mayor, and held in the Guildhall, August 13th, 1849—Sheweth, That your memorialists deeply deplore the unrighteous interference of the Governments of Austria and Russia with the struggle of the Hungarian people in their rightful and heroic struggle to secure for themselves and their posterity the advantages of free institutions and of good government; That your memorialists cordially sympathise with your Majesty's Government in protest against the interference lamentably, but generally boasted your Majesty's Government to protest against the interference of Hungary by the Russians, and, by timely mediation, to preserve all the more humane sympathies in behalf of the liberties of the oppressed people of Hungary. And that your Majesty's Government will not fail to recognise, without delay, the independence of that nation.

Mr. Bass is to present it to her Majesty, through her Majesty's Foreign Secretary. The meeting closed with three cheers for Kossuth, Bem, Dembinski, and Görgei. Three for Mr. Bass, and three for Lord Palmerston. A subscription has been opened in the town for the Hungarians.

REPRESENTATION OF KIDDERMINSTER.—Agitation increases in this borough. In addition to Mr. Osborne and Mr. John Best, as candidates, a third gentleman has intimated himself to the electors in the person of Mr. Crawshay Bailey, son of Mr. Bailey, M.P. for Brecknockshire. Mr. Bailey, Mr. Best are both Protectionists, and the difference in their position, if any, arises from purely local causes. Mr. Bailey, however, is said to be the nominee of Lord Ward. Mr. Osborne continues to seek the suffrages of the electors in the most independent spirit. The new writ for the borough has been issued, and fixes the election for next Thursday week, the 23th instant.

THE HARBOUR OF REFUGE AT DOVER.—This gigantic undertaking, which has been steadily progressing for some time, and which, in the course of two years more, will be completed by his Grace the Duke of Wellington on Wednesday, was visited and inspected by his Grace the Duke of Wellington on Wednesday, with the progress of the work. The plan of the proposed harbour may be described in brief to consist of the enclosure of about 500 acres of water, extending from about 100 yards west of the old harbour nearly to the South Foreland. That portion of the contract already let consists of a wall or pier running out from the main land 800 feet into the sea. This pier is 53 feet in width, and 29 feet above low-water mark. The west wall consists of 18 feet, and the east wall of 16½ feet of solid masonry, Portland and Bramley Fall stone of the best quality being used in their construction. The centre is filled up with pier rubble, composed of the proportions of shingle, hydraulic lime, and porcelanne (or lava from the burning mountains), obtained at Civita Vecchia, the extraordinary binding qualities of which, when ground to the fine powder, and mixed with water, have been discovered. The foundation of this wall is laid 6 feet below low-water mark, and the operations for this portion of the work are carried on in tunnels, several diving bells, the arrangement of which is so perfect that the men remain under water for five hours at a time, hewing the rock and fitting in the stones, the least of which, by the terms of the contract, must weigh two tons.

COLLIERY EXPLOSION, AND LOSS OF LIFE.—On Friday week a dreadful explosion of fire-damp occurred at Mr. William Thomas's colliery, situated about two miles from the village of Aberdare, near Merthyr Tydvil. The shock was felt for miles round. Soon after the fatal event, a frightful scene of horror took place—mothers hurrying in search of sons, wives in search of their husbands, their cries rending the air as corpse after corpse was brought to sight. The number of persons in the pit at the moment of the disaster was first stated at 119; and of the 51 who were killed, 37 lost their lives through suffocation, the remaining 14 being burnt to death. Seven horses out of eleven were also killed; and a rumour prevails in the neighbourhood that, at the colliery, previous to the accident, was not in a fit and proper condition. It is confidently asserted that the cause of this most awful catastrophe was the negligence of one of the colliers in going to a dangerous heading without a safety-lamp. It is scarcely a year since twenty-seven human lives were destroyed by an explosion of the same nature and near the same pit.

DESTRUCTION OF FARM PROPERTY BY FIRE.—On Sunday night, shortly after eight o'clock, a fearful conflagration occurred upon the estate of Sir Thomas Leonard, situate at Wennington, near Rainham, in Essex, about eighteen miles from London. The property in which the disaster commenced was tenanted by Charles Richard Webb, Esq., and consisted of 1,000 tons of hay. The flames, when discovered, were raging in a wheat rick on the south-east corner of the stack-yard. Mr. Parratt, the agent to Sir Thomas Leonard, with a great number of villagers, hastened to the scene, and tried, by every possible means, to get the fire under, but without effect, and in the course of a few minutes the fire had seized upon a number of ricks of wheat, by, and straw, so that there was property covering upwards of half an acre in a general blaze. Lieut. Sinclair and Mr. Greensill, with a strong body of artillery and several engines, instantly started from Woolwich barracks to the scene; but the flames continued to progress, and the light being seen in London, caused the firemen of the brigade in Watling-street, and also that of the West of England Company, in the Waterloo-road, to start in search of the fire. When the London engines reached the spot the whole of the property, except the dwelling-house and the cart-lodge, was in an immense sheet of flame. The engines were kept at work during the night, and the whole of Monday morning. The property destroyed by the disastrous event is very considerable; and had it not been for the exertions of Mr. Parratt, Sir Thomas Leonard's steward, and the military, there is no doubt that the whole of the cattle on the premises would have perished. Owing to the great number of fires that had been wilfully caused during the preceding few days, Superintendent Corn; Mr. James Thomas, one of the trustees, in the chair. From the report it appeared that the institution was founded in 1842, for the purpose of relieving the distresses of poor, aged, or infirm persons, of good character, who had been occupied in any of the branches of organ-building during a continued period of two years, and of extending the like relief to their widows. As yet, the slender resources of the society do not permit the election of annuitants. The receipts for the year end ng the 30th of June last amounted to £77 5s. 8d., and an economical administration of the society's affairs reduced the annual expenditure to £13 7s. 8d. There appears to be an increase in the year's income over last year, and yet there has been a considerable deficit in the amount of annual subscriptions, occasioned by the removal or death of some of the members, circumstance which induced the committee to consult the utmost economy in the expenses. Another fund has been opened by the society, who have determined, as soon as they have means, to build an asylum for decayed members; and to this object, in addition to £14 invested during the year in the joint names of Mr. James Thomas and Mr. G. S. Bishop, a sum of about £20, realised from a pleasure excursion, will be devoted. The next assets of the society on the 30th of June last amounted to £648 7s. 1½d., of which £568 was invested in the Three per Cents. The report, after acknowledging the assistance which the society in its operations has received from employers and others, concluded by appealing to the help of all connected with the musical world, or interested more particularly in the perfect development of the powers of that fine instrument in the formation of which the principles of the society ground their physical and mental energies. The report and statement of accounts were adopted, and the officers of the society were re-elected for the ensuing year.

CITY OF LONDON RAGGED AND INDUSTRIAL SCHOOLS.—On Wednesday evening the half-yearly general meeting of the friends and supporters of the Ragged Schools assembling in Foster-street, Half-moon-street, Bishopsgate, was held in the school-room. Henry Edmund Gurney, Esq., presided. The report of the Committee of Management of the School for the past six months, after particularising various instances of good effected through the instrumentality of the school, during that period, among the children of the district, stated that during the six months the average attendance of scholars had been, in the afternoon—boys, 33; girls, 37: in all, 70. In the evening—boys, 24; girls, 25: in all, 128. Mr. Althaus, in moving the adoption of the report, commented on the extent of the work yet before them. There were in the metropolis upwards of 25,000 children eligible for ragged schools, but up to the present time they had not been able to reach more than one-tenth of that number; part of the committee had at present been allowed to continue in the state of wretchedness and ignorance they were now in, so long might they expect their goals to be crowded with juvenile delinquents. The report was then adopted.

ROYAL FREE HOSPITAL.—CHOLERA WARDS.—On Wednesday a meeting of subscribers and board of management was held in the boardroom of the institution, in the Gray's-inn-lane-road. The Rev. Dr. Rice in the chair. The report stated that the prevailing epidemic brought to the gates of the hospital daily between 400 and 500 out-patients, and the numbers were on the increase. Two large unoccupied wards had been opened for the reception of cholera patients. The medical report for the past year stated that 667 totally destitute patients had been admitted as in-patients, and 37,944 out-patients; making a total since the foundation of 282,357. The receipts were £4601 12s.; the expenditure £4843 9s. 8d., out of which outstanding debts (which are now nearly liquidated) to the amount of £2062 7s. 7d. had been paid. The following legacies have been received:—John Brown, Esq., £372 7s. 6d.; Thomas Smith, Esq., £300; Nathaniel Stevens, Esq., £200; Thomas Howes, Esq., £100, &c.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—On Wednesday, John Oliver Hanson was elected a director, in the room of the late James Pattison, Esq.

FOREIGN SUGAR.—The following numerous arrivals of foreign sugar took place into the metropolis on Monday, from the places mentioned:—The vessel Calder, of the United States, from Matanzas, brought 401 boxes and 275 boxes the Rosamonde, of Prussia, from Cienfuegos, 567 hogsheads, 50 tierces, and 100 barrels; the General Jones, of the United States, from Trinidad, 1,2 boxes; the Sylph, from Havannah, 60 boxes; the Savannah, from Havannah and Matanzas, 714 boxes from the former, and 1196 boxes from the latter place; the Amazon, from Bahia, 573 cases and 2 other packages; and the Eugenie, from Matanzas, 1950 boxes of the article.

METROPOLITAN IMPROVEMENTS—SEWERAGE.—Workmen are now actively employed in Parliament-street and in the more immediate vicinity of the Houses of Lords and Commons, in effecting, under the direction of the Commissioners of Sewers, what has long been looked upon as a very great desideratum in that important locality. For many years it has been matter of complaint to members of the Legislature, that stenches of a most offensive description were had at this period of the year, whenever the numerous gully-holes with which the streets are surrounded, not only to the great annoyance of the olfactories, but in some cases even to the extent of affecting the health of the noble and honourable persons alluded to. It appears that these gully-holes were originally intended merely to convey an accumulation of rain-water from the surface of the streets into the main sewers; and at first the system was found effectually to serve the object in view. Latterly, however, owing to the bad state of the drainage, the refuse matter has thrown back their filthy exhalations into these contributary channels, and the effluvium from the gully-holes has been most pestilential. To remedy this inconvenience the present plan is being adopted. The old gully-traps from the contributary channels are being removed, and new ones are substituted for them. Connected with the gully grating is a cast-iron trap, which is hermetically sealed against any exhalation from the sewer, by the interior water with which it is filled. When the trap is filled with water from the streets, it flows over and empties itself into the main sewer, so that there can be no sensible fear of flooding, whilst, as before stated, the stenches arising from the sewer have

HER MAJESTY LANDING IN THE HARBOUR AT BELFAST.

THE ROYAL VISIT TO IRELAND.

(From our own Correspondent.)

BELFAST.

The prosperous, beautiful, and loyal town of Belfast resolved not to be outdone by the Irish metropolis in the splendour and enthusiasm of its reception of her Majesty and Prince Albert. The accounts which we have already published of the proceedings at Cork and Dublin—from the hour at which the Royal squadron appeared in the splendid harbour of Cove, until the Queen stood on the paddle-box of the Victoria and Albert in the harbour of Kingstown, and waved her handkerchief as a last kind farewell to the assembled multitudes of Dublin—show that every step of the Royal progress was an ovation and a triumph. Her entry into, and departure from, Belfast, were no exceptions.

The preparations had been long making; and their elegance, variety, appropriateness, and completeness reflected the highest honour upon the judgment of all concerned.

We described in our last the exterior of the grand Pavilion erected on the quay: its interior was equally imposing.

After the pavilion, the next object that presented itself in the line of route was the grand triumphal arch, as high as the roofs of the adjoining buildings, and a most creditable specimen of architectural skill and embellishment. It was built of wood, very strongly put together, and covered with paper of marble pattern. Along the top were intermingled wreaths of laurel very gracefully hung. On the frieze facing the pavilion the words "Ceud mile failte" were worked in large letters formed of dahlias; and on that facing High-street "God save the Queen," of the same floral fabric. In the two panels on each side of the archway were the letters "V." and "A." On each side of the pavilion were erected handsome galleries, that on the left in front of the Custom-house having been built at the private expense of the Corporation, for the use of the families of the Town-Council, while one on the right was erected by the Harbour Commissioners, and another a little lower down by Mr. James Lemon, both of which imparted a very lively and picturesque character to this portion of the Queen's route.

Early on Saturday morning a notice was issued by the Mayor, to the effect that her Majesty was to leave Kingstown Harbour at six on Friday evening, and calling upon the inhabitants, official and non-official, to be early at their posts to give her a hearty welcome. The windows, balconies, and platforms began to fill before eight o'clock; and before nine the line of procession was almost impassable. It was expected that her Majesty would make her entry into the town at ten o'clock, as information had been received that the Royal squadron had anchored in the Belfast Roads, near Craigavad, as early as four in the morning. Ten o'clock passed over, and the thousands of eyes that from house-tops and balconies, and the mast-heads of the numerous vessels in the river, were directed towards the Belfast Lough, could discover no sign of the anxiously expected squadron. The Marquis of Londonderry's carriage, with four grey horses, drove soon after ten to the first triumphal arch on the Quay, to be in readiness to receive her Majesty on passing through the covered pavilion at the landing-place. The arrival of the carriage, followed by the noble Marquis and Marchioness in another vehicle was greeted with hearty cheers by the crowd. The Marquis was attired in the uniform of Colonel of the 2nd Life Guards. About six in the morning the wind had blown pretty freshly, and there had afterwards been a very heavy fall of rain. The weather, up to ten or half-past, was cloudy and lowering; and much fear was felt that the rain would mar the beauty of the procession, and compel her Majesty to drive through the town in a close carriage.

About eleven o'clock a steamer was observed approaching the quay. It was speedily ascertained that it had brought official notification from Sir George Grey, that the Queen would embark in the steam-yacht the Fairy, at one o'clock, and might be expected in Belfast about two. It was intimated, also, that her Majesty had had a rough passage from Dublin, and needed a little repose.

HER MAJESTY'S LANDING AT BELFAST

At a few minutes after two, the discharge of artillery from various stations on the river announced that her Majesty was approaching. The wreaths of curling smoke—first from one steam-boat in advance, then from a second, and soon after from a third—made it evident that the squadron was close at hand, and the vast multitude made ready to receive the Queen. The scene, as the gilded sides and rakish yellow chimney of the Fairy were first descried, was exceedingly beautiful. All down the river the shores were lined with people. The wharves and quays were crammed. A line of vessels extended on the side opposite the Royal landing-place, and included five large steamers, and about forty merchant vessels, the decks and yard-arms of which were black with human creatures. The fine wide bridge was impassable for the crowd of people. The scene, looking downwards into the town, was exceedingly brilliant—the glittering flags, the garlands of evergreens, the beautiful arch, the balconies and platforms filled with elegantly-dressed ladies, the gay attire and accoutrements of the military, the striking costume of the bishops, clergy, professors, and doctors of laws, all mingling together, not in confusion, but in order and regularity, formed a gorgeous spectacle. The guns fired, the military band struck up the National Anthem, and the people shouted, far and near, with a roar like thunder among the hills, as the Fairy came alongside of the quay, and afforded the dwellers in the "North" an opportunity of beholding the Sovereign of their love. Her Majesty stood upon the deck, attended by Lady Jocelyn, and bowed with a smiling and evidently happy face to the delighted multitude around her. Prince Albert also appeared upon deck, and bowed his acknowledgments to the crowd. The Earl of Forteacue, Sir George Grey, and other officials were in attendance upon the Queen.

The deputations which had addresses to present then proceeded on board. The Mayor of Belfast went first, accompanied by his chaplain the Rev. Richard Oultan, the cushion-bearer, and Aldermen Harrison Stirling, and Crawford, to present the addresses to her Majesty and Prince Albert from the Town-Council.

The address having been then graciously received by her Majesty Sir George Grey intimated to the Mayor her Majesty's desire that he should kneel, upon which the Queen, receiving the sword from the Marquis of Londonderry, Gold Stick in Waiting, and touching the Mayor first on the left and then on the right shoulder, said, "Rise, Sir William Gillilan Johnson." The Mayor retired, and the other members of the deputation, and the Town-Clerk and Chaplain, were severally presented to her Majesty. The Mayor and deputation then presented the address of the Council to Prince Albert, with some complimentary observations from the Mayor.

His Royal Highness expressed himself highly gratified by the address and the compliment paid him.

The Marchioness of Londonderry was then announced to the Queen by Sir George Grey. Her Majesty shook hands with the Marchioness and entered into conversation with her, as did also Prince Albert. The Marchioness then introduced her daughter, Lady Adelaide Vane to the Queen, who shook her warmly by the hand. The Marchioness of Londonderry then presented her Majesty with a small parcel, containing a specimen of needlework, we believe, by the noble Marchioness' daughter, and her Majesty received it evidently with much pleasure.

The presentation of these addresses did not occupy more than a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes, when her Majesty, leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, disembarked amid renewed salvos of artillery, and renewed shouting and waving of hats, handkerchiefs, and flags, on the part of the immense and unanimous multitude. She entered, with the Prince, the carriage of the Marquis of Londonderry, attended by Lady Jocelyn and another Lady-in-Waiting—Lord Londonderry himself mounting the box with the footmen. The procession then formed; and the crowd on the quay, which the police and military found it impossible to restrain, burst over the barriers into the pavilion, and fell into the line of procession, with loud shouts of "God save the Queen!"

On either side of the pavilion at the head of the street the roofs of several houses were entirely taken off, and suitable erections made in their stead for viewing the procession. In fact, the inhabitants rivalled each other in fitting up private accommodations in every place along the route, each studying to make their decorations most pleasing to the Royal eye.

DONEGALL-PLACE.

The people who congregated here to witness the procession were not to be easily numbered. Thousands lined the street on each side, and all the windows and house-tops that could be made available had their occupants. A very large gallery sweeping round the Castle Buildings appeared very conspicuous. In the front of Messrs. Lindsay's establishment an elegant and commodious balcony was erected, covered in front with blue, white, and pink calico. A gallery boxed in was erected immediately above the balcony, and an excellent band was stationed in it, and whilst her Majesty was passing they struck up "God save the Queen." Her Majesty and Prince Albert, and the ladies in waiting, all noticed the handsome erection, and her Majesty and the Prince graciously smiled in recognition of it. Underneath the balcony was written "Welcome, Victoria and Albert!" From the window of the American Consul's house, a splendid flag with stars and stripes was suspended. A very handsome pavilion was erected at the Royal Hotel, over the iron railings of the palisade. It was hung with crimson drapery, fringed with white, and the covering supported with small pillars tastefully decorated, and each surmounted by a small flag. In the centre of the pavilion was a neatly executed painting of her Majesty in her robes, with the crown on the head, and his Royal Highness Prince Albert in a Field-marshal's uniform; and another painting, lower down to the left, represented her Majesty alone, with the crown above, and surmounted by the words "Long may she reign!"

Her Majesty first visited the Linen Hall, the inspection of which occupied some time. A detailed report of the exhibition will be found at page 114.

The procession, on leaving the Linen Hall, moved on through Wellington place, which was densely crowded, into College-square East. The Royal Academical Institution had a number of handsome flags flying over the roof, and the railings to the street were lined by crowds of well-dressed persons, who cheered her Majesty with infinite enthusiasm. Passing Fisherwick and Glengall-place, the Ulster Railway terminus, which was beautifully ornamented with wreaths of laurel and gay with handsome flags, attracted the Queen's attention, and seemed to be much admired both by her and Prince Albert. Proceeding slowly on, past Victoria-place and Albion-place, where her reception was to the full as enthusiastic as at any other portion of her route, the next great features in her Majesty's progress were

THE QUEEN'S COLLEGE AND BOTANIC GARDEN.

Her Majesty and Prince Albert, still preceded by the Mayor, and attended by Sir George Grey, passed through the turnpike, underneath a triumphal arch, decorated in a beautiful and pleasing manner with evergreens and flowers. Here again the enthusiastic cheering and hearty welcome of the assembled multitudes sounded far and wide, and which the Royal party acknowledged in the most gratifying manner.

Having passed the turnpike, where the remainder of the long train of carriages stopped until their return, they proceeded at a slow pace to the entrance of the Union Workhouse, over the door of which was erected a most magnificent arch. Having stopped here for a short time to view the exterior of this building, and also that of the Deaf and Dumb Institution, the Royal party entered into Elmwood demesne, the residence of Edward II. Clarke, Esq., amidst loud cheers.

Having passed through the avenue which leads from the Lisburn to the Malone-road, the Royal party proceeded immediately to the entrance of the Botanic Gardens, where they were received by the committee and the curator, Mr. Ferguson; and, after driving through the principal walks of this beautiful place, of which they expressed themselves in terms of the highest admiration, they continued on the Lisburn way back to town visited that beautiful architectural structure the Queen's College.

On arriving at the entrance, where the president, Rev. Dr. Henry; vice-president, Dr. Thomas Andrews; Dr. Stevelly; W. J. C. Allen, Esq., the registrar; Professor Hodges; and Captain Larcom, one of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, were awaiting them, her Majesty and Prince Albert alighted from their carriage, and were conducted by the Mayor, first into the entrance-hall, then through the examination-hall, and round by the cloisters to the grand entrance. Charles Lanyon, Esq., the eminent architect of the College, was in attendance, and described the different parts of the edifice to the satisfaction of her Majesty and Prince Albert, the latter having expressed his approval in a warm manner. Prince Albert was also pleased to signify to the Rev. Dr. Henry the intention of her Majesty and himself to give their Royal autographs in an album to be preserved in the library, in commemoration of her Majesty's gracious visit to the College immediately after the appointment of its professors.

BRIDGE-STREET.

The appearance of this street while the cortège was passing through it was most picturesque. The house-tops were most profusely hung with elegant flags: and, as the street is narrow, the tops of the flags met each other almost; and as the fronts of the houses were tastefully and elaborately ornamented with flowers and evergreens, the whole appearance, to a person passing, strikingly resembled an arbour with a magnificent canopy over it.

Thousands of persons filled Donegall-street as the procession wended along. The enthusiastic cheering of the people, thronging everywhere along the sides and up in the windows, seemed to affect the Queen and her Royal Consort evidently with pleasure and delight, and their acknowledgments of the plaudits were both gracious and continuous. The front of Messrs. Scott, Brothers', house presented a most interesting spectacle. The decorations were of flowers and evergreens, and were particularly noticed by the Queen and his Royal Highness. In the front of the house of the Messrs. Scott were the words, "Erin greets Victoria and Albert;" and underneath was the inscription, "God bless our good Queen." The letters were formed of dahlias and other choice flowers, and the whole appearance was distinguished in the extreme. The Commercial Buildings were also very handsomely decorated with flags, &c. The Banner of Ulster office also appeared very attractive, from the tasteful and excellent manner in which it was decorated. It had on the front the letters "V. A.," with the harp between them, formed with dahlias and other beautiful flowers, and besides this an elegant blue flag with the harp, round tower, and wolf-dog upon it, surmounted by a gold crown and the inscription, "We bid thee welcome," in beautiful letters. Several other nice flags were suspended from the windows. The front of the house was decorated with evergreens and choice flowers.

HER MAJESTY'S EMBARKATION FOR SCOTLAND.

On the return of the Queen to the pavilion, her Majesty, leaning on Prince Albert, was conducted by the Mayor on board the Fairy. The Queen, previous to her departure, intimated through Sir George Grey that she desired an interview with the Mayor, who immediately attended, when her Majesty said—"Mr. Mayor, I am greatly gratified by the reception I have met with." The Mayor said that her Majesty's approval would be a great satisfaction to the inhabitants of Belfast, who humbly hoped that her Majesty would, on some future occasion, honour them with a similar mark of her Royal favour. The Prince also expressed in warm terms the pleasure which his visit to Belfast had afforded him. The Mayor made his acknowledgments for his Royal Highness' approval. Sir George Grey shook hands cordially with the Mayor, and said that her Majesty's reception was magnificent, that nothing could be more gratifying, and that the arrangements in all respects were most creditable to Belfast. The Mayor and other official personages having withdrawn, her Majesty proceeded on board the tender, which was in readiness for immediately departing. The cables were then slipped, and the Fairy put out amidst the most deafening acclamations from the thousands who had pressed forward to obtain a parting glance of their Queen. The cheering from both sides of the river, and from every point on shore or on board the different craft whence the tender was visible, was indeed intense, and the effect on her Majesty of these cordial greetings seemed to be impressive. While the tender bore down the Lough, the acclamations still more loud and prolonged; and her Majesty having communicated her wishes to Lord A. Fitzclarence, the seamen of the vessel, having come as near the stern as was allowable, raised their hats, and returned three cheers, in the true British tar style, to the applauding spectators. During the time the vessel continued in sight, which, from her rapid sailing powers, was not long, the enthusiasm of the people was evinced by deafening huzzas

There was no general illumination in Belfast, as it had been previously resolved that such a mode of manifesting the popular joy was not necessary. A few private houses were illuminated, and in the evening [illegible] Bonfires were lighted on the surrounding hills. After her Majesty's departure, the Mayor, Sir W. Gillilan Johnson, entertained a distinguished party at dinner in the Donegall Arms. Among those present were the Marquis of Downshire, Marquis of Londonderry, Lord Dungannon, the members for the borough, Major-General Bainbrigge and staff, Colonel Stewart, 15th Regiment, the members of the Town Council, and a select party of the gentry of the town and neighbourhood.

At an early hour on Sunday morning, the Victoria and Albert Royal yacht came to anchor a short distance from the shore below Holywood, evidently from stress of weather. At two o'clock, the Banshee, which was in attendance upon the Royal Yacht, put off for Belfast with orders, and had not returned at the hour the Victoria and Albert sailed. Precisely at half-past three o'clock, the Victoria and Albert put to sea, followed by the other vessels which formed the squadron, passing the Grey Point, and afterwards steering off towards the Scottish shore. At her departure she was loudly cheered by a large throng of spectators on the shore, and saluted by several yachts which had there been stationed waiting the approaching regatta. From Carrickfergus Castle some guns were also fired in compliment to the Royal visitors.

Her Majesty stood on the deck of the yacht, waving a white handkerchief, in recognition of the affectionate greeting of her people, and continued to occupy this station and attitude until the last glimpse of her person had faded from view.

Thus terminated the Royal Visit to Ireland—the precursor, we believe, of many more. The people of Ireland will long treasure the occurrence in grateful remembrance, and fondly hope that to the Sovereign herself her short stay among her Irish subjects has proved a source of as much delight as it has to them. Never before did a Queen achieve such a triumph; and as for disaffection in Ireland, it may very safely be predicted that as long as Queen Victoria lives (may she live to see her great-grandchildren!) there will be no disaffection—no disloyalty in Ireland. St. Patrick himself was not a more benign visitor to the Green Isle than her Majesty has proved herself; and, like the Saint, she too has banished some disagreeable vermin that have too long infested it. Her amiable heart has banished distrust, jealousy, ill-will; and introduced in their stead the confidence which was alone wanting to make a good beginning for the future welfare of Ireland.

THE THEATRES.

HER MAJESTY'S.

In consequence of the debility brought on by her late severe inoculation, the general favourite of the public, Madame Sontag, on Saturday, the last night of the subscription season. The subscribers, who have this year had the good fortune to enjoy the talents of such singers as Lind, Alboni, Parodi, and Sontag, had even on that occasion a full share of "Lucrezia Borgia" being performed—which, adorable in the cast of its first part, has for the representatives of its smallest characters artists such as Coletti, Beletti, &c. The "God save the Queen," twice repeated, afforded once more the most splendid of coup d'œils, and wound up to the utmost the enthusiasm of the audience.

On Tuesday night Madame Sontag re-appeared as Susannah, in the "Nozze di Figaro," supported by the most extraordinary cast—Parodi and Tamburini, the three unrivalled singers of the world, Lablache, and Ronconi. So many great talents—and they all laid new claims to the highest eulogy, and were applauded and encored, each in their turn, most enthusiastically —would be more than our time and space will allow. The general interest and the greatest curiosity were concentrated in the novelty of Madame Sontag's appearance in one of the greatest chefs-d'œuvres of Mozart—Mozart, who died exactly three years and a half ago this month at Coblentz! Every critic, in every journal as yet published, has agreed that, great as her former triumphs were, that which she achieved on Tuesday far surpassed them. It must be remembered that in the original comedy of Beaumarchais, Susannah is the character rather of a confidante than even of a head servant. With a frivolous husband, a no less frivolous and intriguing master and mistress, she is obliged to find constant resource in her mother wit; and whilst appearing to give way to the caprices of each in turn, maintain her character and govern the whole family and household of Almaviva. Mozart, in his musical poem, has remained perfectly faithful to the inspiration of the dramatist: throughout, the music is marked most intimately with the original conception: the words and action remain, in unison almost unexampled, transparent through every operatic theme with every other point. The immense difficulties thus presented to the performer only offered opportunity of displaying her mastery to Mdme. Sontag, of which she availed herself apparently with an ease, as well as success, which astonished as well as delighted every one. Her singing—totally devoid of effort, subdued, delicate, and elegant—was still full of the finest humour and the most spirited espièglerie. She was expected to sing exquisitely the duet (with the Count) "Crudel, perche," but no one had even imagined the comic traits which she introduced, and which conferred a new spirit on this piece of music—one of the greatest beauty, but which hitherto had been (as far as acting goes) most tamely rendered. The truth of her acting was shown in the smallest traits, as for example, when the mischievous Page jumps out of the window, her manner created the greatest surprise and the utmost amusement. As to her singing, it surprised no one that, having so marvellous a voice, and being herself of German extraction and a devoted admirer of Mozart, she should have sung Susannah as it never was before. That in which she surpassed all other previous singers was, the total absence of effort in rendering the music, and in eliciting an enthusiasm, on the part of the audience, which sought every possible mode of expression.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Saturday (last week) and Tuesday, Meyerbeer's "Prophète" was given for the eighth and ninth time—attractive as ever—to crowded houses. On Thursday, in which was included the subscription night of the 25th inst., the "Huguenots" was performed for the thirteenth time this season. This evening (the 18th), the subscription season will terminate with "Lucrezia Borgia" and the first act of the "Prophète," so that the entire strength of the company will appear; but there are to be three farewell performances in the ensuing week, beginning on Tuesday with the "Huguenots," for the Benefit-night of Tamburini, on Thursday, for the third time, "Le Prophète;" and on Friday, the closing night of the season, Mozart's "Don Giovanni," with the novelty of Viardot's first appearance in the country, in the character of Zerlina: the other parts being sustained, as usual, by Grisi and Costa, Tamburini, Mario, Fraschini, Lavia, Marini, and Marra. These three farewell nights, in order to afford to every class of musical amateurs an opportunity of hearing the powerful ensemble at the Royal Italian Opera, will be at reduced prices. The objection to these arrangements is in the giving only a portion of "Le Prophète" on one occasion: such a work ought only to be presented in an entire form.

HAYMARKET.

The drama of "Flying Colours" was performed on Monday, followed by the operatic burlesque of "The Devil's Violin." On Wednesday Mr. Wright took his benefit, when one act of "The Green Bushes" was performed, with the farce of "How to settle Accounts with your Laundress," and "Did you ever send your Wife to Camberwell?"

At the NEW STRAND, Mr. Mark Lemon's drama of "Hearts are Trumps" continues to be deservedly attractive.

SADLER'S WELLS, if possible, will open on the 25th inst., with Shakespeare's tragedy of "Antony and Cleopatra" the part of the heroine by Miss Glyn. This arduous character, with its infinite variety and force, will put a definitive test to the powers of this young but most accomplished actress, to whom the critics have already applied the soubriquet of the "Rachel of the English stage."

IRISH PRESENT TO HER MAJESTY.—A magnificent Irish bog oak bracelet was presented to her Majesty on her late visit to the Irish metropolis. This superb ornament was manufactured by Mr. Denis Connell, of Nassau-street. The several links of the bracelet, which are joined by loops of Wicklow gold, compose the name "Victoria;" and the clasp is an Irish harp. The bracelet is inclosed in a beautifully inlaid case of the Arbutus wood, so indigenous to the mountains of Killarney. The present was forwarded to the Countess of Clarendon, by whom it was presented to her Majesty, who was pleased graciously to receive this tribute of genuine Irish loyalty.

MUSIC.

THE FESTIVALS

The programmes for the forthcoming meetings at Birmingham, Liverpool, and Hereford have been issued. The Birmingham Musical Festival is held once every three years, in aid of the funds of the General Hospital, an institution founded in 1778, for which patients of every class, without limitation as to place of residence or birth, are admitted. It is stated that, up to this period, 78,742 in patients and 218,718 out-patients—in all, 297,500 persons—have been aided by the institution. It seems that, within the last year, a considerable addition to the average number of applicants for relief has been remarked, rendering the success of the present Festival of increased importance. The Committee, of which T. F. Lelland is chairman, and Mr. J. Stevens, secretary, have evidently exerted themselves to uphold the high character of these musical gatherings. The engagement of Mr. Costa, with carte blanche for the formation of an orchestra, has been attended with the anticipated result: the unrivalled musical director has secured a phalanx of instrumental talent never before assembled on this or any other country. There are 24 first violins, with Sainton and Blagrove as principal; 24 second violins, with Watkins as principal; 16 violas, with [illegible] as principal; 16 violoncellos, with the patriarch Lindley as principal; 15 double basses, with Howell as principal; 16 players for the wind band, 13 for the brass, and 4 for percussion, making in all 122 executants, all distinguished in their various instruments. What the effect will be of their playing of the "Pastorale" and C minor symphonies of Beethoven, of the A minor symphony of Mendelssohn on the "Leonora" overture of Beethoven, of the "Oberon" overture of Weber, of the "Ruy Blas" and "Walpurgis Night" overtures of Mendelssohn, and of the "William Tell" overture of Rossini, may be readily conceived. The orchestra in the Town Hall has been entirely re-constructed, expressly for the occasion, under Mr. Costa's plans; and the great organ has been also carefully improved for the occasion. There will be four organists to develop its colossal grandeur and proportions; namely, Dr. Wesley, of Leeds; Mr. Stimpson and Mr. Simms, of Birmingham; and Mr. E. Chipp, of St. Olave's Church, London. The solo instrumentalists will be Sainton, of the Royal Italian Opera, for the violin; M. Thalberg for the piano; and Signor Bottesini, for the double bass. The principal vocal performers are: Soprani, Madame Sontag, Madame Castellan, Miss Catherine Hayes, Mdlle. Jetty de Treffz, Miss A. Williams; Contralti—Mdlle. Alboni, Mdlle. de Meric, and Miss M. Williams; Tenori, Signor Gardoni, Mr. Wilbraham, and Mr. Sims Reeves; Bassi—Mr. Machin, Signor F. Lablache, Herr Pischek, and Signor Lablache. The schemes for the morning performances are, on Tuesday, Mendelssohn's "Elijah" and Mr. Sterndale Bennett's "May Queen;" and on Wednesday, Handel's "Messiah," and Mozart's 12th Mass, in which Mario will sing in English the air, "Then shall the righteous;" on Wednesday, Mendelssohn's "Athalie," the poem recited by Mr. Bartley; with a selection from Handel, Haydn, Rossini, Beethoven, and Spohr; and Handel's "Messiah," and, on Friday, Handel's "Israel in Egypt;" with gleanings from Mozart, Marcello, Costa, Handel, Haydn, and Mendelssohn. The chorus will comprise 80 trebles, 76 altos, 70 tenors, and 80 basses—in all 316 singers. In the programmes for the evening concerts of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday evenings, selections from the most popular French, German, English, and Italian operas have been made, including gleanings from Meyerbeer's popular "Huguenots" and "Le Prophète." The festival will take place on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, September 4, 5, 6, and 7, and will terminate with a ball at the Town-hall

The 126th meeting of the Choirs of Hereford, Gloucester, and Worcester, for the benefit of the widows and orphans of clergymen in the three dioceses, will be held in the Cathedral and Shire Hall of Hereford, on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 11th, 12th, 13th, and 14th of September. The stewards are the Earl of Powis, Lord Bateman, Sir Velters Cornewall, Bart., Captain Sir T. Hastings, R.N., Frederick Peel, Esq., M.P., the Rev. Dr. Ogilvie, the Rev. W. P. Haggard, and the Rev. A. Clive. Mr. Townshend Smith, the organist of the Cathedral, is the conductor; Mr. Arnott, of Gloucester, presiding at the organ; Mr. W. Done, of Worcester, at the piano; Mr. Blagrove is the leader of the morning performances; and Mr. Willy, leader of the concerts. The band will consist of fifteen first and second violins, six violas, five violoncellos, four double basses, and twenty for the wood, brass, and percussion instruments. The Cathedral organ will be augmented for the occasion by the festival. The chorus will comprise professors from the London concerts, Worcester Choral Society, the choirs, &c. The schemes for the morning performances include Mendelssohn's "Elijah," Haydn's "Creation," Spohr's "Last Judgment," Beethoven's Symphony in C, selections from Spohr's "Calvary," Haydn's "Creation," Mendelssohn's "Paul," J. S. Bach's anthem "Blessing and Glory," Mendelssohn's anthem "Not unto us," Handel's Jubilate in Dmin, and Jubilate, &c. For the evening concerts, the musical attractions are also great. The overtures of "Der Freyschütz," of Weber; "Egmont," of Beethoven; "Nadiea," of Sterndale Bennett; "Midsummer Night's Dream," of Mendelssohn; Mozart's Symphony of Mozart, Beethoven's Cantata "The Praise of Music," and a selection from Weber's "Euryanthe," besides gleanings from the operatic works of composers of every school, have been judiciously selected. Mesdames Castellan, Miss A. Williams, and Mr. Wilbraham, Miss Poole, Messrs Sims Reeves, Hobbs, Lockey, Machin, and Phillips, are the principal vocal performers. The renovation of the beautiful Cathedral, and the musical treat thus presented, will no doubt prove attractive to this ancient festival.

The week's musical performances in Liverpool, commencing Monday, the 27th inst., and ending on Friday evening, the 31st, with a fancy dress ball, are to celebrate the opening of the new concert-room in Hope-street, erected by the Philharmonic Society. There will be evening concerts on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and morning performances on Tuesday, Thursday, and Friday. Mendelssohn's "Hymn of Praise," Beethoven's Mass in C, Handel's "Messiah," and selections from Handel's "Solomon" and "Israel in Egypt," will be the principal sacred works. The selections for the concerts will be from Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and selections from Handel's "Solomon" and "Israel in Egypt," will be the principal sacred works. The selections for the concerts will be from Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable," Mozart's "Don Giovanni," Auber's "Fra Diavolo," Rossini's "Nozze di Figaro," "Zauberflöte," "Così fan Tutti;" Cimarosa's "Matrimonio;" "Rosini's "Donna del Lago," "William Tell," "Semiramide," "Barbiere di Seviglia," "Otello," "Gazza Ladra," "Lucrezia Borgia;" Bellini's "Sonnambula," "Norma;" Spohr's "Faust," &c. The conductors are Messrs. Benedict and J. C. Herrmann, and Mr. W. T. Best is the organist. The principal vocalists will be Mesdames Alboni, Ernst, violin; Piatti, violoncello; Bottesini, double bass; and Vivier, horn. The band will consist of ninety players, and the chorus of 220 singers. Mr. W. Sudlow is the Hon. Secretary of the Society, and on Saturday last a meeting, at which the festival has been held in the town since 1836 (the year Malibran died), Manchester will be very [illegible]. The artistes engaged are—Grisi, Alboni, and Viardot; Miss C. Hayes, Mdme. Gortani, Miss A. Williams, Mdlle. Jetty de Treffz, Mdlle. L. Gortani, Messrs. Machin, Miss W. Williams; Signori Marlo, Bartolini, Polonini, Tagliafico, and Lablache; Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lockey, Benson, Whitworth, and Herr Carl Formes.

MUSICAL EVENTS.—For the first time in this country, an English adaptation of Meyerbeer's opera of "Les Huguenots" was produced on Thursday night at the Surrey Theatre. Miss Romer was Valentine, Mrs. Weiss Marguerite de Valois, and Mr. Leffler De Nevers. Mr. Treverbeck Raoul, Mr. Leffler Nevers, Mr. Delavanti St. Bris, Mr. Horncastle De Cossé, Mr. C. Romer the Huguenot Soldier, and Mr. Weiss Marcel. We shall notice this performance in a future Number. The piece was brought out under the direction of Mr. Loder.—On Wednesday night, Mr. Harris, who superintends the spectacle at the Royal Italian Opera, gave a concert at Drury Lane Theatre. An apology was made for the absence of Mario, on the ground of indisposition; and Grisi and Tamburini sang Mozart's duo, "Crudel, perche," in the place of the air announced for the tenor. Viardot and Tamburini were encored in the comic quarrelling duo of the prima donna and manager, from "La Prova;" her imitation of Mr. Bunn's manner of addressing a gathering, was also encored in a charming Spanish song, accompanied by herself on the piano. Mr. Weiss was encored in Mr. E. Loder's ballad, "Sing me, then, the songs of old." The other vocalists were Mademoiselle Angri, Mademoiselle de Marie, the sisters Corbari, Miss Poole, Miss Catherine Hayes, Mrs. Weiss, Herr Mengis, Signori Marini, Tagliafico, Calzolari, Polonini, and Paglieri. Miss Dolby, Mr. Sainton, and Mr. Lindley executed a charming trio and violin duet, and a band, selected from the Royal Italian Opera, played overtures. Mr. Lavenu ably officiated as conductor. There was much irregularity in the obtaining and distribution of programmes, and we shall endeavour to place the pieces were presented.—The directors of the Philharmonic Society for the season 1850 are Messrs. Anderson, Calkin, Chatterton, Grosbeak, Lucas, Machurdy, and Neate Mr. Anderson is Hon. Treasurer, and Mr. Hays Secretary. The proposed grant of £24,000, in aid of the Parisian theatres, has been rejected by the Ministry and standing committees of the National Assembly.—Meyerbeer's "Prophète" is announced at the Theatre Royal Opera, with Mdlle. Mequillet Fides, Mdlle. Julien Berta, Octave Jean of Leyden, MM Dignat, Brémond, and Martin, the three Anabaptists.—An article in Galignani, announcing the sale of the Opera to Mr. Bunn, is pronounced by that correct; Romeo is the director, and is making his engagements for the season 1849-50, to begin in October.

ENGLISH OPERA.—A meeting was held on Thursday afternoon at the house of T. Chappell, in Bond-street, to take into consideration the expediency of forming an English Opera House. Amongst the persons present were Messrs. Bowley, Messrs. Blake, Wallace, Macfarren, T. Chappell, Olivier, Harrison, Nicholson, and Lovey. Some discussion ensued. After some discussion, it was resolved that a committee of composers, singers, publishers, operatic authors, and amateurs be formed, to decide on the preliminary steps to be adopted in order to carry out the establishment of an English Opera House. The following persons were nominated members of the committee: Sir H. R. Bishop, Messrs. Balfe, Planché, Fitzball, Harrison, Stretton, Charley, Grüneisen, T. Chappell, and Beale.

Joseph Ady has been endeavouring to ply his trade at the hitherto secluded village of Ingleton, but the move was unsuccessful

REPORTED DEATH OF DR. CONQUE: A report has been most industriously circulated of the death of Dr. Conquest, of Finsbury-square, by Asiatic cholera. Although the statement has been contradicted in the Times and other journals, the report has been revived during the last few days. We are happy to state that it is wholly without foundation, the Doctor having been in perfect health for some time past.

THE HUSBAND OF LOLA MONTES.—Lieutenant Heald has resigned his commission, as appears from the following letter from the Colonel of the 2d Life Guards, which has appeared in an evening paper.—"Sir,—In allusion to your remarks on me, as Colonel of the 2nd Life Guards, in your paper of the 11th instant, it is right that the public and you should know that I received Lieut. Heald's resignation, under his own hand, through Colonel M'Donnal, commanding the regiment, and forwarded the same according to my bounden duty, to be laid before her Majesty, with the promotion in succession. I remain, sir, your obedient servant, VANE LONDONDERRY.—Mount Stewart, August 13, 1849."

RAILWAY INTELLIGENCE.

MEETINGS.

EAST LINCOLNSHIRE — August 10: Half-yearly Meeting: London: Mr. Packe in the chair. The report announced the receipt of the first half-year's dividend from the Great Northern (at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum). The line is in good working order, and the receipts are increasing.

BOSTON, STAMFORD, AND BIRMINGHAM—August 10: Half-yearly Meeting: London: Mr. T. Macaulay in the chair.—The report stated that the offer by the Great Northern to pay 6 per cent. on half the capital, by giving in exchange an equal value in shares of the Royston and Hitchin, was accepted. The works were all being rapidly forwarded.

NORTH BRITISH.—Aug. 9: Adjourned Meeting: Edinburgh: Mr. Lashington in the chair.—The report from the Committee of Investigation detailed the facts respecting the property, past management, and future prospects of the company. The land purchased from the chairman, adjoining the Edinburgh station, at £29,300, has been obtained at a fair price. The works at Meadowbank are well adapted for the maintenance of the line. The directors erred in their purchase of stock during the contest with other lines. A loss has occurred of £94,126; but the board acted throughout in good faith. The damages by the floods in 1848 amount to £21,949; but the responsibility of repairing them, whether by the contractor or the company, is not yet determined. Reductions in the number of officers and servants are recommended. A resolution for allowing five per cent. on the quarter shares was to be rescinded, as unjust to the general body. The English shareholders are to be represented at the board, and two auditors appointed. The traffic is expected to increase from various local causes, and from the development of railways in the north and east of Scotland. The report by Mr. Cope, the accountant, declares the accounts to have been faithfully kept, but suggests certain amendments.—The report was adopted, after a discussion, which led to no result, save the dismissance of the committee that all the errors had arisen only from want of judgment.

GREAT NORTHERN.—August 11: Half-yearly Meeting: London: Mr. E. Denison, M.P., in the chair.—The report alluded to the opening to Gainsborough, and the intended extension between Retford and Doncaster, in December. The directors believe that the Yorkshire traffic will come upon this line when opened into that district, and that the line from London to Peterborough may be opened in next spring. They intend to give the guaranteed proprietors the option of taking 25,000 of the 5 per cent. perpetual preference shares of £10 10s. each, on payment of £10 10s. per share. The auditors specially report the economy with the accounts. Much discussion took place as to expending the works between Peterborough and Retford and from Askern to York, which, it was argued, were the most valuable portions of the line, but the report and its recommendations were eventually adopted.

HULL AND SELBY.—August 11: General Meeting: Hull: Mr. Tottie in the chair.—Declared a dividend at the rate of £9 18s. per cent. per annum. The legal advisers of the company repudiated the rumoured insecurity of the lease by York and North Midland, which was valid and perpetual. The explanation was deemed satisfactory, and the report was adopted.

BIRKENHEAD, LANCASHIRE, AND CHESHIRE JUNCTION.—August 11: Half-yearly Meeting: Birkenhead: Alderman J. Bancroft in the chair. The report showed a balance of £4,358 applicable to dividend. There is a large increase in the revenue. The working expenses have been reduced, and the goods traffic has been more than doubled. Arrangements for the transport of goods over the Mersey have been advantageously effected. Six per cent. per annum on the £27 10s. and £22 shares, and four per cent. on the £51 shares, were announced. The Chairman alluded to the non-success of the law proceedings taken by a certain party of shareholders to interfere with the works of the Cheshire Junction. The report was adopted; and the forfeiture of 10,024 shares, on which £50,000 had been paid, was confirmed.

EAST LANCASHIRE.—August 10: Adjourned Meeting: Bury: Mr. J. Grundy in the chair.—After some opposition and suggestions for the appointments, the two auditors were elected as proposed by the board.

CHESTER AND HOLYHEAD.—August 15: Half-yearly Meeting: Euston Square: Captain Moorsom in the chair.—The report stated the opening of the Mold line as advantageous. The competition between the steamboats of the Government and the company is injurious, and entails loss. The London and North-Western have advanced £100,000 on security from a further creation of preference shares. Shares representing the amount of interest which should have been paid on the original shares are to be created and issued to the proprietors, distributed from payment of calls. The board is reduced to twelve directors, with £1000 per annum. A dividend of 8s. 3d. is declared on the preference shares. Delays in the Britannia-bridge, and the Irish famine, with other causes, have much detrimented. The engineer believes that one line will be finished in November, or before this year's end. The chairman complained of the slowness of the works in the Holyhead harbour by the Government, who treated the company shabbily, in competing for the Post-office service. He anticipated better times. The reports were adopted without remark

GREAT NORTH OF ENGLAND.—August 14: Half-yearly meeting: Darlington.—The usual dividend of 10 per cent. was declared. The rumours respecting the invalidity of the lease by the York and North Midland were subsequently contradicted

GREAT WESTERN.—August 16. Half-yearly Meeting: Bristol: C. Russell, Esq., in the chair.—After a short preliminary discussion, the registers of proprietors for Shorts and Bonds to Extension Bonds were declared closed. In the course of this discussion it was admitted that Mr. Stevens, the late solicitor of the company, had misapplied £45,000 of the company's money; but it was so far secured, that little, if any, loss was expected to fall on the shareholders. The dispute which had existed between the secretary of this company and the South Devon Company, relative to the payment of calls, it was stated, had been settled in a manner honourable to both parties; and the directors were fully convinced that Mr. Saunders, in the course he had taken, had been actuated by the purest motives. A report was then read, which stated that the traffic of the half-year had been upon the line of railway for the first four months, and 929 miles for the two months, the lease of the Bristol and Exeter Railway having expired on the 30th of April. It was satisfactory, however, to know that the revenue on the Great Western Railway for the first six months of the present year was £1,000 in advance of the same period of 1848, by £13,000. The only additional line opened were two branches to Westbury and Basingstoke, together 27 miles, but the traffic on both was somewhat marred by the opening of a rival line of the South-Western Company to Windsor. There had been a total reduction of expenditure of £9,400 on the six months, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, and the directors were making every effort further to reduce the expenditure. The directors felt deep regret at being compelled to recommend a dividend for the half-year at the rate of only four per cent. per annum, but they had felt constrained to do so—a considerable sum expended as interest for other undertakings in progress, or, as it was hoped, unproductive, having been carried to the revenue instead of to the capital account, as heretofore. The auditors having suggested a committee of consultation by the shareholders, to arrange with the board as to many of the measures now under the consideration of their affairs, the directors had willingly assented to this suggestion, and at the same time had resolved that four of the present board should retire, with a view of giving the shareholders an opportunity of an office distinct of the whole, or partial choice With respect to the lines belonging to this company beyond Oxford, the directors were in communication with the London and North-Western Company with a view of saving unnecessary expenditure by the construction of duplicate lines. The Birmingham and Oxford line as far as Banbury, was expected to be completed next spring, and the Windsor Railway would be finished in October. With regard to the Wilts, Somerset, and Weymouth, and the Oxford, Worcester, and Wolverhampton lines, arrangements were pending with a view of putting them into active operation, without, however, entailing any further responsibility upon the shareholders in this company. The report concluded by expressing a hope that the termination of the directors to co-operate in every possible way with the committee of consultation, with a view of benefiting the proprietors. After a very long discussion, the report was unanimously adopted. The dividend declared on certain debentures made in the by-laws with a view of enabling the shareholders to appoint new directors should they see fit; it being understood that a special meeting should be called for the purpose in the course of next month, to which time the arrangements of the committee of consultation was also adjourned.

CAMBRON'S COALBROOK AND SWANSEA AND LONGHOR: August 16: Adjourned meeting: London: Captain Northcote in the chair.—After some discussion, it was resolved that the directors should endeavour to borrow a sufficient sum, on mortgage, to pay off the pressing liabilities of the company; and arrangements should be then, if possible, made to bring the company into working order. Directors having been filled up, and auditors having been appointed, the meeting separated.

The LONDON and NORTH-WESTERN dividend is at 3½ per cent. for the half-year. The GREAT WESTERN afford but 2 per cent.; and the SOUTH-WESTERN but 1·66 per cent., for the same period.

THE ENCUMBERED ESTATES COMMISSION.—Mr. S. W. Flanagan, nephew of the late Chief Baron Woulfe, has been appointed secretary to the Commission for facilitating the Sale of Encumbered Estates in Ire and

M. LAMARTINE.—Among the advertisements which figured in the Paris papers during the past week is one which causes great regret in France, and will cause regret elsewhere. M. de Lamartine, though known to us only as one of the glories of France, and one of the heroes of the Revolution of February, has been, in fact, one of its first victims. He is completely ruined; and, after making efforts, almost as great as those of our own Sir Walter Scott, to save his patrimony, it is at length to be inevitably consigned to the auctioneer's hammer. Amongst the causes Funestes of the Paris papers is to be seen—"A vendre la terre de Milly, appartenant à M. de Lamartine," &c. This is the place where M. de Lamartine was born, where he passed his earliest years, and which he has immortalised in his "Confidences." At one time it was thought that the place could be saved. One of the principal publishers of Paris agreed to pay off the whole of the debts affecting the property. M. de Lamartine agreeing, in return, to supply the publisher in question with a certain number of volumes. The arrangement was complete, the money was about to be paid down, when the Revolution of February occurred. The publisher offered to keep to his bargain, but informed M. de Lamartine that in doing so he should be irretrievably ruined, upon which M. de Lamartine at once tore up the bond. The debts continue as great as they were before the Revolution, while the value of the property has greatly diminished. Great forests are numerous; and, in short, the place must be sold for whatever it will fetch, and that will not be nearly the amount of the debts affecting it.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The "turf" proceedings this week have not been marked by any event of importance; and the attendance of its most influential supporters, owing to the commencement of the grouse shooting, has been slack. Reading and Chelmsford were the only meetings which offered any inducement to the Metropolitans. Of the fixtures for the ensuing week, York stands conspicuously in the foreground; the principal to be competed for are numerous, and they are so judiciously arranged that each day has its "feature." The meeting will occupy three days, commencing on Wednesday. The other appointments are Bickwich on Monday, Huntingdon and Aberystwith on Tuesday, Tunbridge Wells—an indifferent place for sport, but worth a visit for the sake of the scenery—Plymouth, and Stourbridge on Thursday.

The Aquatic Register embraces a considerable number of regattas and matches of more or less interest. On Monday, King's Lynn and Exmouth regattas; and rowing matches at Chelsea, Hammersmith, Isleworth, and Lambeth. On Tuesday, the Teignmouth and Cornwall regattas; and a rowing match at the Custom-House. On Thursday, matches at Putney and Barnes; and the Beaumaris regatta. Altogether, a great week for the amateur "bank jackets."

Some of the cricket matches to come off are very interesting; the most generally so will be at Canterbury on Monday, between Kent and England, and at the same place, on Thursday, between the gentlemen of Kent and the gentlemen of England. Two of the great All England matches come off on Thursday; one at Leamington, between a picked "eleven" against eighteen Leamingtonians; and the other at Norwich, between another "eleven" against twenty-two of Norwich and district. Matches will also be played at Brixton on Wednesday, at Clapton on Thursday, and in various parts of the country.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

GRAND REVIEW AND SIEGE OPERATIONS AT PORTSMOUTH.

On Wednesday, Major-General the Right Hon. Lord Frederick Fitzclarence G.C.H., Lieutenant-Governor of Portsmouth, gave a splendid field entertainment to his illustrious visitor, her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge, and the Hereditary Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, who arrived at the Government House on Tuesday evening.

At half-past o'clock the troops marched to the ground, Southsea Common, and took up position. They consisted of about 3000 troops, artillery, sappers, marines, and infantry, under the personal command and direction of Major-General Lord Frederick Fitzclarence.

At three o'clock the Royal visitors left the Government-House in open carriages, and proceeded to the Common, escorted by the General and staff, where already had preceded them a numerous assemblage of rank and fashion from the metropolis and the surrounding country.

The brigade was intended to represent a rear guard of an army, whose passing of a defile in its rear it was intended to cover.

At the close of the grand field movement, General briefly expressed the gratification of his Royal guests and himself at the movements performed by the troops, which reflected the highest credit upon officers and men; and the troops returned to quarters.

The party then returned to the residence of Lord Fitzclarence, who entertained some forty distinguished persons at dinner; after which, all adjourned to the King's Rooms, Southsea, where a ball, given by the gallant General and lady had appointed to meet others of their friends, to the number of about 200, at a dié danzante.

At nine o'clock the whole of the brilliant assemblage left the rooms to witness a night attack upon the fortress, which terminated with a grand display of fireworks. A ball and banquet concluded the entertainments of the day, which was throughout successful, and afforded a delight and edification of thousands of strangers who had arrived to see the brilliant spectacle.

The Lords of the Admiralty are at present on a tour of inspection to Portsmouth, Plymouth, and the other Royal dockyards.

MILITARY SAVINGS-BANKS.—A return, published by order of the House of Commons, shows that the total number of military depositors in savings-banks on the 31st of March, 1848, amounted to 6385; whose deposits reserved during the year ended on that day the sum of £48,883. The amount withdrawn by depositors during the year was £34,464; and the balance due by the public on the 31st of March, 1848, £31,5[illegible]

MONETARY TRANSACTIONS OF THE WEEK.

(From our City Correspondent.)

Consols, at the commencement of the week, were heavy, at 92¾ ⅛; and, from the amount of stock thrown on the market, a decline to 92½ was registered on Tuesday. These operations, however, were connected with the settlement of the account, which turned out rather Bullish. The quantity of money stock enabled the sellers to deliver; prices, consequently, for the moment declined. Although on Wednesday there was but little animation, the market revived about ¼ per cent.; and, on Tuesday, 92⅞ ¾ for Money, and 92¾ ⅞ for the September settling, were the prices marked. The unfunded debt has receded a few shillings in consequence of an increasing demand for money. This is satisfactory in itself, but at present money is too easy to hope for any decided improvement in the rate of interest. Railroad quotes below the market average, and a change from Consols at present prices may be advantageously made. At the close of business the market was steady at the following prices:—Bank Stock, 195; Reduced, 92⅛; Consols, 92⅞; New Three-and-a-Quarters, per Cent. Annuities, 103; Long Annuities, to expire January 1860, 8 15-16; Ditto, Thirty Years, October 10, 1859, 8 11-16; India Bonds, £1000, 74 p; Ditto, under £1000, 73 p; Consols for Account, 92⅞; Exchequer Bills, £1000, 74 pm; Ditto, £500, 74 p.

The following arrangements have been agreed to by the agent for the South American bondholders and the Government of Mexico, relative to future dividends on Mexican Stock:—The interest falling due between July, 1846, and July, 1850, to be reduced to 3¾ per cent. per annum; and besides the present assignments on the customs duties at Vera Cruz and Tampico, the silver duties at the Pachuca, Zacatecas, and the tobacco monopoly Government grants the circulation duty on the precious metals on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, and the export duty on silver from ports in the Gulf of Mexico. From the American indemnity money 4,000,000 dollars will be appropriated, and divided among the three years' arrears of dividend, and to be received out of the three remaining instalments due from America, besides an additional 500,000 dollars, as a compensation for the difference of interest given up under the present arrangement. All moneys remitted shall be paid into the Bank of England, under the joint control of a Mexican Commissioner and the English Committee of Bondholders. Thus, all agencies and involvements with firms will be avoided, and a large sum in addition be saved to the Government. It must be added, however, that this agreement is subject to the approval of the Mexican Congress; at present, therefore, it is more speculation to act on it.

Business had been rather more active in the Foreign Market; Peruvian, Portuguese, and Mexican having been extensively dealt in. Peruvian has been recovered as high as 83, Portuguese Four per Cents 29¾, and Mexican has advanced from 26¼, Ex Coupons, to 28¼, in consequence of the proposed arrangement recorded above. The market at the close of the week was not active at the following prices:—Austrian, 5 per Cent., 76½; Brazilian Bonds, 85½; Buenos Ayres Bonds, 6 per Cent., 59½; Equador Bonds, 3½; Granada Bonds, 1 per Cent., 17½; Mexican, 5 per Cent., 1846, Ex Coupons, 28¼; Ditto, Account, 28¼; Peruvian Bonds, 4 per Cent. Active, 82½; Ditto, Deferred, 46½; Portuguese, 4 per Cents, 29½; Ditto, Account, 29½; Russian Bonds, 106; Spanish, 5 per Cent., 1840, 18½; Ditto, Account, 18½; Venezuela Bonds, 2½ per Cents., 20½; Ditto, Deferred, 5½; Ditto, [illegible]

There have been several fluctuations in Great Western and South-Western Railway shares, in consequence of the diminished dividends. The Great Western directors only advise the payment of 2 per cent. for the past half year; while the prospects of the line are scarcely in favour of that low rate being maintained, after the opening of the Birmingham and Oxford line—when, according to that Act, all the fares must be reduced. South-Western offer about 1¾ per cent. for the past half year; and, on looking at the accounts, a committee of inquiry into the past management of this once-magnificent undertaking [illegible] appears highly necessary. It is to be hoped that proprietors in both cases will attend numerously, and not be prevailed over by the plausible politeness of directors and managers. Amongst the rest of the two stocks, it will have receded, the first having been done at 72, the latter at 32½. The last prices of lines dealt in were—Caledonian, 21⅞; Chester and Holyhead, 14; Ditto, Preference, 12; Eastern, Deferred, 3⅜; Edinburgh and Glasgow, 41; Great Northern, 24; Ditto, Half, A Deferred, 3¾; Ditto, Five per Cent. Preference, 3⅜; Great Southern and Western (Ireland), 31½; Great Western, 73; Great Western, Half shares, [illegible] Western, Quarter Shares, 18½; Do., New, £17, 9½; Lancashi and Yorksh[illegible] Ditto, New Quarters, 14⅞; Ditto, Fifths, 4⅝; London and South-Western, 36½; [illegible] Thirds, 8½ dis.; Manchester, Buxton, and Matlock, 1½; Manche[illegible] and Lincolnshire, Quarters No. 1, 14½; Midland, 63½; Ditto, £50 Sh[illegible] North British, Quarters, 2½; North Staffordshire, 11½; Ditto, 1, [illegible] and Wolverhampton, 16½; South-Eastern, 21½; Ditto, Scrip No. 4, 6½; South Wales, 13; York, Newcastle, and Berwick, 19½; Ditto, Newcastle Extension 13¾; Ditto, G.N.E. Preference, 3½; York and North Midland, 28½; Ditto, Preference 7[illegible] Boulogne and Amiens, 6½; East Indian, 32½; Orleans and Bordeaux [illegible]

FOREIGN MARKET.—Consols were buoyant yesterday, quoting 92¾ ⅞ for Money, and 92⅞ ⅜ for the next Account. The Foreign Market was supported. Shares remained without alteration.

THE MARKETS.

CORN EXCHANGE, Friday.—The arrivals of English wheat for our market, during the present week, have been moderate, amounting to 650 quarters. By land carriage very few samples have been received, and the supply on offer here to-day was very limited, the demand for all [illegible] being late, owing to the rapid progress [illegible] of large imports [illegible] From [illegible] have received 7,490 quarters of [illegible] but all other qualities ruled heavy, at [illegible] ing today in floating cargoes. Notwithstanding [illegible] what [illegible] that article was slow sale, and the turn in favour of the buyers. [illegible] and only a retail inquiry for malt, and previous prices were not easily obtained even for the finest quality. Owing to the small arrivals, oats were firm, at [illegible] per quarter. Beans ruled [illegible] peas were in request. Beans ruled [illegible]

BUTTER.—Public sales of 30,300 packages have taken place this week. About 4000 have found private quotations. Privately, the demand is tolerably firm, and prices are well supported.

Sugar.—Fine qualities of West India, Bengal, and Mauritius sugars have sold to a fair extent, this week, at fully previous rates. In other kinds, only a moderate business has been transacted. Refined goods have met a slow inquiry, at from 48s to 50s per cwt. English crushed, dull.

Coffee.—There is less activity in the demand for this article, at barely the late improvement in value. Native Ceylon has sold at 35s to 37s per cwt.

Rice.—The market is dull for nearly all kinds, and prices must be considered the turn lower Provisions.—A fair amount of business has been transacted in Dutch butter this week, at full rates of currency. Fine Friesland is selling at 78s to 80s; fine Kiel, 76s to 78s; fine Holland, 74s to 76s; and inferior marks, 64s to 68s per cwt. Irish butter is very dull, at further reduction in prices of from 4s to 7s per cwt. Carlow, Clonmel, and Kilkenny, firsts, landed, 76s to 86s; Cork, 64s to 68s; Waterford and Limerick, 62s to 64s, and Sligo, 56s to 62s per cwt. English butter moves off heavily, on somewhat lower terms. Fine Dorset, 76s to 80s; middling ditto, 68s to 74s per cwt; and Cork, 70s to 76s per cwt. Irish bacon has further declined in value, 2s to 3s per cwt. Prime small Waterford, landed, 54s to 56s; heavy, 50s to 52s; and Limerick, small, 60s to 62s per cwt. In other kinds of provisions we have no change to note.

Tallow.—The demand is still in a very languid state. P Y C on the spot is selling at 32s to 32s 3d; and, for forward delivery, 32s 3d to 32s 6d per cwt. Town tallow, 27s 6d per cwt. Rough fat, 1s 1½d per 8lbs.

Oils.—Linseed oil is dull, and prices have a downward tendency

Spirits.—Brandy moves off steadily, at the late improvement in value. In rum and gen there is only a limited business is doing.

Hay and Straw.—Out Monday last, £3 18s to £3 12s: new ditto, £2 5s to £3 0s, old ditto, £4 to £5 5s. New Clover, £3 5s to £4 5s; old ditto, £4 5s to £4 14s per load.

Wool.—The market privately is firm, at full the late improvement in value.

Potatoes.—The supplies being considerably on the increase, and of excellent quality, the demand is heavy, at from £3 10s to £5 5s per ton.

Coals (Friday).—Hartley, 16s 6d; Wentworth Coke, 19s 6d: South Durham, 16s 3d; Hilton, 16s; Eden Main, 17s; Holywell, 16s 6d per ton.

Hops (Friday).—The plantation accounts at hand this morning are to the effect that no important change has taken place in the general appearance in the bine. Blight is still prevalent. The hops are, therefore, held at full prices, yet the buyers act with caution. In old hops very little is doing. Thoughout is sold £60 000 to £70,000

Sussex pockets, £3 10s to £4 10s; Weald of Kent ditto, £3 3s to £4 10s: Mid and East Kent [illegible]

Newspaper Stamps.—The supply of beasts on offer in to-day's market being limited, and the attendance of buyers on the increase, the best trade was somewhat active, at, in most instances, full prices. In the [illegible] of sheep and lambs, the general tone was rather quiet, at barely previous rates. Calves moved off freely, at an improvement in value of 2d per 8lbs. In other [illegible] pig, and scarcely, all fully previous currencies. There was a considerable falling-off in the supply of calves. The veal trade was steady, at extreme quotations. Pigs ruled dull, but were [illegible] somewhat cheaper. Milch cows sold at from £14 to £18 each, including their small calf.

Per 8lb to sink the offal—Coarse and inferior beef, 3s 10d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 8d to 4s; prime large oxen, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime Scots, &c., 4s 2d to 4s 4d; coarse and inferior sheep, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; second quality ditto, 3s 6d to 3s 8d; prime ecoud woolled ditto, 3s 10d to 4s; prime lambs, 5s 0d to 5s 4d; large coarse calves, 3s 8d to 4s; prime ditto, 4s 0d to 4s 2d; prime small ditto, 4s [illegible] 4d; large hogs, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; neat small porkers, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 4s 0d to 5s 0d. Suckling calves, 18s to 24s; and quarter old store pigs, 18s to 21s each. Total supplies: Beasts, 630; cows, 142; sheep and lambs, 11,250; calves, 200; pigs, 320. Foreign supplies: Beasts, 44; sheep and lambs, 690; calves, 98. Scotch: beasts, 84; sheep, 200.

Newspaper and Londonhall (Friday).—Those speaking the demand ruled firm, and prices had an upward tendency

Per 8lb by the carcase:—Inferior beef, 2s 6d to 2s 8d; middling ditto, 2s 10d to 3s 0d; prime large ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 4d; prime small ditto, 3s 4d to 3s 6d; large pork, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; inferior mutton, 2s 4d to 2s 6d; middling ditto, 3s 2d to 3s 6d; prime ditto, 3s 8d to 3s 10d; veal, 2s 10d to 3s 6d; small pork, 3s 8d to 4s 0d; lamb, 5s 10d to 6s 10d.

HER MAJESTY'S VISIT TO IRELAND.

Prince George of Cambridge accompanied them.

Shortly after eleven o'clock the review commenced. The troops marched past the Royal standard, beneath which her Majesty's carriage was stationed, in slow and quick time. Several rapid charges of cavalry followed; and a series of beautiful evolutions, brilliantly performed, were gone through by the infantry regiments. The troops then commenced firing in line, by platoons, and in square; whilst the Artillery displayed the perfect training of its men and horses by a number of splendid evolutions and the lightning rapidity with which the guns and their ponderous carriages and ammunition waggons were whirled from one point to another at the sound of the trumpet, the guns unlimbered, and shot after shot delivered. The firing of the regular troops in line was sustained with great regularity, and the rapid movements of the regiments from line into hollow square were beautifully performed. The cavalry charges were splendid, as the whole cavalry force on one occasion advanced from the extreme distance at a trot, and then broke into a charge, the earth reverberated like distant thunder beneath the hoofs of the advancing squadrons.

After the firing ceased, two grand charges of cavalry followed, the troops formed in square, and marched to the extreme end of the field. Prince Albert, General Blakeney, Prince George, and the whole staff then galloped over to the position held by the troops. On the command being given, the cavalry formed in squadrons to the right and left, and the infantry deployed into line, with the artillery stationed in the rear centre. The whole mass of troops then moved forward to the music of the regimental bands, and when within full view of the spectators, they charged bayonets, and rushed on at double-quick time to the music of that terrible war-cry, half British cheer and half Irish hurrah, and halted only some twenty yards from the Royal carriage. The colours of the different regiments were then advanced, and the bands pealed forth the National Anthem. The troops then gave three tremendous cheers, which were echoed loudly by the spectators in the vicinity of the Royal carriage, and taken up by thousands of voices along the lines. The troops then stood with grounded arms, and the horses were led out and put to her Majesty's carriage This was a signal for a hearty cheer for the Queen, originating with a group of military officers and civilian gentry in the inner lines; the cheer was responded to heartily, and cordially repeated. From the same body of gentlemen emanated a call for another cheer for his Royal Highness the Prince Consort and the Royal children; this, too, was warmly responded to. Another cheer was claimed for the Queen amongst the crowd of people, and again even more warmly and heartily given. By this time her Majesty's carriage was in motion, the lines were broken, and a vast crowd assembled round the Royal equipage, following it, and cheering enthusiastically. At length the Royal carriage got clear of the crowd, and drove off at a rapid pace to the Viceregal Lodge, the Queen bowing gracefully in acknowledgment of the repeated evidences of goodwill that greeted her on all sides. The troops then filed off the ground, and the vast crowd began to disperse.

HER MAJESTY, PRINCE ALBERT, AND STAFF AT THE GRAND REVIEW, IN PHŒNIX-PARK, DUBLIN.

HER MAJESTY'S DRAWINGROOM.

The first Drawingroom of Queen Victoria in the metropolis of Ireland was held at Dublin Castle on Thursday evening. So early as seven o'clock the carriages began to set down at the Castle, and vast crowds in the streets interested themselves by looking into the equipages, and observing the brilliant costumes of the several visitors. The police arrangements were excellent, and the carriages all going through Parliament-street afterwards took up their company in Dame-street, near the lower Castle Gate. The scene presented to the eye of the spectator was one of peculiar brilliancy. Hour after hour the long lines of equipages succeeded each other. It literally appeared as if there would be no termination to the arrivals, and the blaze of light from the Castle, the Royal Exchange, and other buildings which were illuminated on this auspicious occasion, made every object appear almost as discernible as if it were clear day.

At twenty minutes after nine o'clock the Queen and Prince Albert, the Lord-Lieutenant and Countess of Clarendon, entered the Castle gates, the three state carriages being preceded and followed by a squadron of the 6th or Enniskillen Dragoons. Cheers, long, fervent, and earnest, burst forth on every side; and those who occupied the carriages in the line which was formed by the Royal cortège joined in the plaudits —one common feeling of loyalty actuating all classes.

Shortly afterwards her Majesty, accompanied by his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the officers of state, entered the Presence Chamber. Her Majesty was attired in a superb pink poplin dress, elaborately figured with gold shamrocks, ornaments, and diamonds of the most splendid brilliancy. Her Majesty most condescendingly delayed her departure more than an hour, in order to meet the wishes of her loyal Irish female subjects to obtain the high honour of presentation—the number presented altogether exceeded 1700.

ROYAL VISIT TO THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF LEINSTER.

On Friday, the 10th instant, her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert honoured the Duke and Duchess of Leinster with a visit at Carton, near Maynooth, the ancient and princely seat of the Fitzgerald family. The building is a spacious structure, composed of granite, having a large centre with wings. It is situate in a most picturesque locality of the county of Kildare, about sixteen miles distant from Dublin, and about one mile from the celebrated Roman Catholic College. The Duke is the only nobleman of the Irish peerage holding that title, a circumstance which may be ascribed to the small number of ducal creations which took place when the title occupied an inferior position.

The arrival of her Majesty was fixed for one o'clock, and, as that hour approached, the scene betokened the activity and extent of the preparations for the Royal arrival. The pleasure-grounds, which exhibit floricultural taste of no common character, are situate at the rear of the mansion, facing the state hall; they were, on this occasion, most tastefully decorated with flags; and handsome marquees were erected in various parts of the ground. The pleasure lawn is divided from the park by a small trench, outside of which the public were allowed to assemble in large numbers, and were thus afforded a most commanding view of all around. In the state hall a most sumptuous déjeûner was laid out for her Majesty and a select circle of the visitors, numbering in all thirty. M. De Vevay, his Grace's chef de cuisine, officiated as Master of the Ceremonies.

The company invited to meet the Sovereign comprised upwards of three hundred of the nobility and gentry, &c., at present in Dublin The family circle comprised their graces the Duke and Duchess of Leinster, the Marquis and Marchioness of Kildare, Lord Gerald Fitzgerald, Lord Otho Fitzgerald, Mr. Repton, M.P., son-in-law to the Duke, and Lady Jane Repton. The general company included his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge, his Grace the Primate, his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, the Rev. Dr. Murray, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin, the Marquis and Marchioness of Waterford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Downshire, the Marquis of Abercorn, the Marquis and Marchioness of Londonderry, the Marquis and Marchioness of Worcester, the Marquis of Clanricarde, the Marquis of Hereford, the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Earl and Countess of Portarlington and Lord Adolphus Vane, Lady Adelaide Vane, the Earl of Bandon, the Earl of Belfast, the Earl and Countess of Donoughmore, and the Ladies Hutchinson, the Earl of Fingal, the Earl and Countess of Listowel, the Earl of Roden, the Earl of Clare, the Earl of Courtown, the Earl of Stradbroke, the Earl of Kintore, the Earl and Countess of Clancarty, the Earl and Countess of Caledon, the Earl and Countess of Milltown and the Ladies Leeson, the Earl and Countess of Desart, the Earl of Howth and the Ladies St. Lawrance, the Earl of Rosse, Viscountess Clements Viscount Suirdale, Viscount Jocelyn, Viscount and Viscountess Monck, Viscount and Viscountess Brabazon, Lord William Fitzgerald, General Sir Edward Blakeney, the Lord Chancellor, the Master of the Rolls, Lord Bloomfield, the Earl and Countess of Erne, the Earl Mountcharles, Sir William Somerville, the Marquis and Marchioness of Drogheda, &c.

The general company having arrived, the Royal cortège made its appearance.

At half-past eleven o'clock the Royal party quitted the Viceregal Lodge, in an open barouche, escorted by a troop of the 8th Royal Irish Hussars, commanded by the Hon. Mr. Sandilands. Leaving the Phœnix Park, the Royal carriages descended the hill, and were driven along the beautiful valley of the Liffey, passing beside the Strawberry Beds. Travelling through the fine and diversified scenery in this district, the Royal party took the direction of Woodlands, the splendid seat of Colonel White, at which a handsome triumphal arch, composed of evergreens and flowering shrubs, was erected in honour of her Majesty. Having driven through this magnificent demesne, the Royal party changed their escort. On arriving at Woodlands, the Hussars returned to Dublin, and were relieved by a troop of the 17th Royal Lancers, under the orders of Captain Willett, by whom the Royal equipages were escorted during the rest of the journey. On quitting Woodlands, the Royal travellers drove in the direction of Coldblow, from thence towards Leixlip, near which they were met by the students of Maynooth College, dressed in their academics, who, as the Royal equipages passed, cheered with the utmost enthusiasm—a compliment which her Majesty and her noble Consort very graciously acknowledged. The Royal party shortly afterwards arrived at Carton, and entered the demesne by the Kellystown gate.

At one o'clock, the Royal equipages entered the demesne, and soon afterwards drew up opposite the mansion. The first carriage contained her Majesty, his Royal Highness Prince Albert, and their Excellencies the Earl and Countess of Clarendon. A second carriage contained the Earl Fortescue, Viscountess Jocelyn (Lady-in-Waiting), the Hon. Miss Dawson (Maid of Honour), and Sir George Grey. The Duke and Duchess, with the members of the family already recounted, had in the meantime assembled at the grand entrance, for the purpose of receiving their Royal and distinguished guests. The noble Duke handed her Majesty out of the carriage, while the Prince gave his arm to the Duchess. The distinguished party then walked into the gardens; and, on being recognised by the crowd from without, a most hearty cheer was given. The bands of the 1st Foot and 6th Dragoon Guards, which were stationed on either side of the grounds, played "God Save the Queen," "The Coburg March," and other national airs.

After walking through the grounds for about twenty minutes, the Royal party and attendants returned to the house and partook o luncheon: the general visitors being entertained in the marquees.

After the déjeûner, her Majesty, leaning on the arm of the Duke of Leinster, again appeared on the esplanade in front of the mansion, and made a further inspection of the rare collection of flowers, plants, vases, and statuary works, &c. The Prince Consort followed with the Duchess of Leinster; while another group comprised the Marchioness of Waterford, the Earl and Countess of Clarendon, and his Royal Highness Prince George of Cambridge. The most amusing incident of the day soon afterwards took place. Her Majesty and party were conducted to the front of the lawn, close to the trench dividing it from the park, where the people had assembled, and there witnessed what we may term a genuine Irish jig, danced to the music of an Irish piper, by several of the DANCE OF PEASANTRY ON THE LAWN AT CARTON.

Duke's tenants and their wives and daughters. The dancing was kept up with great spirit "for upwards of half an hour," to use the words of Barns, the Royal presence having "put life and mettle into their heels." Her Majesty laughed most heartily at the performances, particularly at the antics of one couple, who, after concluding some most diversified evolutions, concluded by advancing in front of their companions, and making a very low bow, which the Sovereign acknowledged by a most pleasing smile. All the dancers, we learned, were disciples of Father Mathew—as, indeed, their neat and comfortable appearance would indicate.—(See the Illustration at page 125.)

The Royal party were subsequently driven through the most attractive portions of the demesne by the noble host, who accommodated his illustrious visitors during portions of the excursion, by a ride on one of those strange vehicles, an Irish jaunting-car. The Royal cortège, leaving the mansion behind, drove slowly through the lawn, in the direction of Kellystown Lodge, and from thence along the "Precipice"-road. It then turned towards Carton manor once more, and, having passed by Otho-bridge, and arrived at the wooden hand-bridge, the Royal cortège stopped, in order to enable the Royal party to inspect the very elegant thatched cottage, or rural summer retreat, erected on the opposite side of the lake. Her Majesty was here handed out of the carriage by his Grace the Duke of Leinster, and, together with her noble Consort and suite, was conducted by his Grace across the bridge, and from thence to the cottage.

LORD BANDON'S COTTAGE.

Having inspected and expressed their admiration of this specimen of rustic architecture, and visited the pretty garden attached to it, her Majesty and the Prince were again escorted to their carriage, and driven back to the mansion-house; while some of the other visitors of his Grace took boat, and were rowed about the lake for a short time, enjoying its superb scenery. Almost immediately after the Royal party returned from their pleasant ride through the demesne, they bade adieu—it is to be hoped for a short space only—to Carton. At four o'clock the Royal carriages, containing the same illustrious personages on whom they arrived in the manor, and escorted by the Lancers as before, quitted Carton, being loudly cheered as they were driven away in the direction of Leixlip.

Thus terminated the Royal visit to Carton. The Royal cortège slightly changed the route on returning to the Viceregal Lodge. The display of triumphal arches was greater and more brilliant than in the former two arches, the one at the entrance and the other in the centre of the hamlet. The latter was composed of evergreens, and surmounted by a crown made of rich flowers. Above floated the union jack, underneath was the word "Welcome" emblazoned on scarlet, having on either side the letters "V." "A." In another part of the village was a second arch, which exhibited in very neat detail the arms and motto of the Prince of Wales. Her Majesty passed from the Leixlip road into that of Lucan, through Lucan Park, the seat of Mrs. Vesey, the representative of one of our oldest Norman families. Both entrances were highly finished with the choicest flowers by the lady's Scotch gardener, Mr. Lumsden. In the park stands the monument erected several years since to the memory of the celebrated General Sarsfield, one of the supporters of James II., and whose family were formerly possessors of the manor.

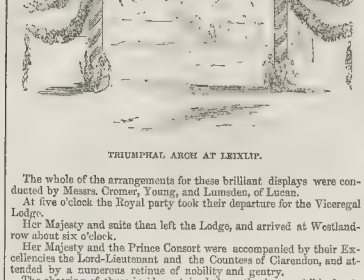
At Leixlip three tasteful arches were erected.



TRIUMPHAL ARCH AT LEIXLIP.

The whole of the arrangements for these brilliant displays were conducted by Messrs. Cromer, Young, and Lumsden, of Lucan.

At five o'clock the Royal party took their departure for the Viceregal Lodge.

Her Majesty and suite then left the Lodge, and arrived at Westlandrow about six o'clock.

Her Majesty and the Prince Consort were accompanied by their Excellencies the Lord-Lieutenant and the Countess of Clarendon, and attended by a numerous retinue of nobility and gentry.

The cheering of those inside sustained the enthusiasm exhibited outside, and her Majesty, the Prince, and the Royal children having entered the Royal carriage, and the remainder of the party the first-class carriages allotted for their accommodation, the train, at twelve minutes past six, left Westland-row terminus, and proceeded at the ordinary pace; and every roof-top, every window of the houses on either side, added their contingents of expressive loyalty and affection.

DEPARTURE OF HER MAJESTY FROM KINGSTOWN.

The Victoria and Albert, at four o'clock, had been moored close to the jetty, and a crimson covered gangway led from the pavilion to the yacht. When on the platform, a space was kept clear, in order that her Majesty and the Royal procession might have an uninterrupted view of the truly glorious scene spread before them, and a few minutes had thus elapsed before the steps leading to the covered way were descended. The Queen wore the same attire as at Carton, and with her Majesty were his Royal Highness Prince Albert and the Royal children, who walked abreast at her Majesty's right hand. His Excellency the Lord-Lieutenant walked immediately behind the Queen, followed by his Royal Highness Prince George, and the Countess of Clarendon—a most interesting group—the Princesses wearing round straw hats, with a circlet of wild flowers, and being simply and tastefully attired.

As the Sovereign passed along the covered way, several bouquets of flowers were strewed at her feet by the ladies who occupied the enclosed seats; and, amidst the most fervent and swelling cheers, the roar of cannon, presented arms, and the blessings of an attached people, Queen Victoria was again on shipboard. The guard of honour consisted of a company of each of the infantry regiments in garrison—the 1st Royals, 2nd (Queen's Own), 40th, 43th, 55th, 60th Rifles, and 71st Highland Light Infantry. The embarkation took place at twenty minutes to seven o'clock, in the midst of a chorus of voices that swelled to the greatest volume that ever was heard in Ireland. The Queen cordially bowed her farewell. At length the gangway was about being removed, and, stepping up to the Countess of Clarendon, her Majesty caught her Excellency by the hand, and kissed her twice most affectionately; then, turning to the Lord-Lieutenant, she gave him her hand to kiss—a mark of favour quite unusual, unless at presentations, and consistent with her demeanour towards him during the whole period of her visit, as she has exhibited the most marked anxiety not only to sustain and dignify the office of Viceroy, but to do honour to the individual filling it. Looking his Excellency ardently in the face, her Majesty spoke to him for a minute or so, and bade him farewell. Her Majesty next turned to H.R.H. Prince George, shook hands with him, and kissed him on the cheek.

The six distinguished personages having come ashore, the gangway was removed, and the Royal Yacht, bearing her precious freight, moved slowly away from the jetty, amidst the pealing of cannon and the loudest concert of human voices that ever ascended from a people in praise of any Monarch. Her Majesty then paced the deck for a little time, and on approaching the extremity of the pier near the Lighthouse, where vast numbers of people had congregated, she parted with the two Ladies-in-Waiting, with whom she was up to this time in conversation, looked towards the crowd—ran along the deck with the sprightliness of a young girl—and, with the agility of a sailor, she ascended the paddle-box, which is a tolerably high one, and was almost at its top before she was observed by Prince Albert, who, with the Royal children, for some time previously had been standing on its summit viewing the scene he was leaving. Her Majesty, on reaching the top of the platform, was assisted by Prince Albert—and, taking his hand, she gracefully waved her right arm towards the people on the pier. After some time, she waved a white handkerchief, appeared to converse with the Commandant; immediately the paddles ceased to move, and the vessel floated on with the impetus it had already received. Her Majesty remained in this position (the vessel moving very slowly and as close to the pier as was safe with safety) waving her handkerchief, and the cries of the people of the town and the crowd had scarcely ceased to reverberate, when the paddles were again set in motion, and the Royal Yacht drifted, rather than seemed to, past the pier-head, until the Royal Yacht had passed the last of the lighthouses, the speed was not altered, nor did her Majesty leave the paddle-box, but continued gracefully to acknowledge the manner in which she had been received by the citizens of Dublin; and, even far away out at sea, she did not cease to express her regards by a signal that could be discerned—when her Royal person was obscured in the distance. She commanded that the Royal standard should be lowered half-mast high, as the signal of salute to her faithful people—a ceremonial unprecedented in the annals of history. She commanded that this ceremonial of a Royal salute to the Irish people should be repeated; and, in obedience to her Majesty's commands, the Royal standard was five times lowered half-mast high. The steamers laden with passengers kept close on the side of the Royal Yacht for some distance, and again the yacht slackened speed, and the little steamers, bidding her Majesty farewell with a hearty cheer, returned to wait in Kingstown Harbour.

When the Royal squadron had ceased to be in view, the vast multitude began to return to their respective homes, and until long after midnight the railway trains and the cars were busily occupied.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

GLASGOW, Monday morning, 11 A.M.

THE Royal squadron left Belfast on Saturday evening, and had to put in for shelter during the night to Loch Ryan, a small arm of the sea indenting the north coast of the county of Galloway. A better place for shelter could not have been selected; the wind, which was blowing in fitful gusts, and accompanied by torrents of rain, having been in the south and west.

At half-past ten on Sunday morning, the Royal yacht, with her Majesty on board, passed Strone Point, at the entrance of Loch Long. The morning was bleak and stormy when the squadron left Loch Ryan; the wind, which was favourable, continuing to blow with almost unabated violence until it entered upon the comparatively quiet waters of Loch Long. Loch Long is one of the most wild and romantic of the many arms of the sea which so deeply indent the west coast of Caledonia. At Greenock, the Frith of Clyde trends suddenly to the eastward, Loch Long being a narrow prolongation of it in the northerly direction which it takes up to that point. The loch has a dark and gloomy aspect, from the deep and massive shadows which are thrown upon its waters by the ranges of lofty and heath covered mountains which flank it on either side, here rising in steep swelling masses, and there dashing down for many hundreds of feet precipitously into the lake. The neighbouring hills are all overtopped by the bold and serrated range known as the Duke of Argyle's Bowling-green, which breaks into a wild succession of conical eminences and splintered peaks, at an elevation of about 3000 feet above the level of the sea. The lake, which is upwards of twenty miles long, is deep, and easily navigated; and about twelve o'clock the Royal squadron arrived at Arrochar, at its extreme northern limit. There are few places in the west which can boast of a wilder situation than this remote Highland village. The reception which her Majesty here received was in every way enthusiastic, the whole population, not only of the village, but also of many of the contermínous parishes, having turned out to give her a true Highland welcome. Many of those present were elaborately dressed in the national costume, and the wild but inspiriting note of the bagpipes mingled heartily with the acclamations of those assembled to welcome the Sovereign to this sequestered nook of her dominions. A transient gleam of sunshine smiled on the scene, bringing out with special effect the towering mountain masses around; but it was short-lived, and the rain poured down again in torrents, ceasing occasionally for a few minutes only, to come down with redoubled violence.

On arriving at Arrochar, the Queen made three successive attempts to land. All failed, however; and the idea of her Majesty proceeding any further was relinquished. But, to mitigate the disappointment that would be felt along the whole Vale of Leven, where every preparation had been made for the expected Royal visit, Prince Albert landed at length, and proceeded alone to Loch Lomond. On landing, he was received by Sir James Colquhoun, of Luss, in whose carriage he was conveyed from Arrochar to Tarbet.

At Tarbet, the Waterwitch, which had left Balloch at an early hour in the morning, was in waiting, with her steam up, to receive her Majesty and suite on board. Several of the directors of the company to which the boat belonged were in attendance to conduct her Majesty through the many channels of the Loch, and to point out to her the more interesting points on its banks. The wind still came in heavy gusts from the south-west, and the lake was tossed wildly about and lashed into foam. The Prince, however, embarked at a quarter to four, and immediately proceeded towards the head of the lake. The wind somewhat moderated, and the sky partially cleared, as he approached the foot of Ben Lomond, whose lofty peak was enveloped far up in the heavy trailing vapours which begirt the bulk of the mountain

Having ascended the lake to the district known as "Rob Roy's Country," but few points of which were visible through the thick overhanging mists, the Waterwitch bent her course downwards towards Balloch

As soon as the steamer was in sight, the fact was announced by the booming of cannon from the point at which the Leven emerges from the lake. All eyes were turned up the stream towards the lake, a small portion of whose still agitated surface was visible from the landing-place. A regular salute was fired are the boat left the lake for the stream, and made its way gently towards the jetty. The band on board played the National Anthem as the boat approached, and in a few minutes the Prince, attended by Sir James Clark, landed amid the hurrahs of the assembled crowd. He was received, on landing, by Mr. William Campbell, of Tillichewan, Mr. Smollett, M.P. for the county of Dumbarton, and Mr. Colquhoun, sheriff of the county.

It was not only at Balloch that preparations were made to welcome the advent of the Queen. From Balloch to Dumbarton the distance is about five miles, in making which you pass through a series of large and industrious villages. At each of these, arches were erected, evergreens used abundantly in the work of decorating, and stands erected for the accommodation of spectators. The news of the non-approach of the Queen soon spread along the whole line to Dumbarton. As the Prince drove rapidly along he was warmly greeted; but it was evident that a feeling of the deepest disappointment prevailed the successive crowds which he passed. At Dumbarton the disappointment was particularly severe, for there the preparations were on a very extensive scale. On arriving in this town the cortège drove immediately to the principal wharf, where the Fairy had been for some time in waiting for his Royal Highness. On embarking he was attended by the Provost and magistrates of the town, and by many of the principal gentlemen of the county. On the completion of this ceremony, a little after noon, a Royal salute was fired from the lofty battlements of the Castle; and the Prince departed amid the hurrahs of an immense concourse of spectators, to rejoin her Majesty on board the Royal Yacht, which, having in the meantime descended Loch Long, was by this time at anchor at the "tail of the bank."

HER MAJESTY'S ARRIVAL AT THE BROOMIELAW, GLASGOW.

The grand stand was occupied at an early hour by the Magistrates and Town Council of Paisley, the Magistrates and Town Council of Dumbarton, of Port Glasgow, and a deputation from the Magistrates and Town Council of Ayr.

Notwithstanding the discouraging nature of the weather, the stand and the surrounding platforms, and every piece of vacant ground, were closely occupied. The rain fell heavily; but on both sides of the Broomielaw, and on all the vessels of the river, an immense concourse of all classes were congregated. A plain arch was thrown over the landing-place, fringed beautifully with heath; and the steps from the quay to the landing-place were covered with crimson cloth. The covered way to the carriage was laid with a rich carpet, enclosed in wreaths of evergreens, and lined with some majestic Scotch thistles. A flag-staff reared at the landing-place bore the flag of England. The thick forest of masts and yards in the river were covered with innumerable flags, that fluttered in the cool breeze and the somewhat heavy rain, the only representatives of gaiety on the river. The yards of many of the vessels were manned. A platform had been erected on the river side of the quay, immediately opposite the principal stand, which was well decorated with evergreens, and bore covered mottoes, wreathed with flowers. The concourse of spectators on both sides of the river, on the quays at the foot of Oswald-street, and on the slups and boats, was immense. A guard of infantry and cavalry lined the quay.

At twenty minutes to twelve the approach of the Fairy was announced by cannon, which continued to telegraph her approach as the steamer passed the various points where they were placed.

A few minutes afterwards the Royal standard was observed, while the artillery at this point fired a salute; and the cheering from the north side of the Broomielaw, and of the seamen who manned the yards of the vessels in the river, left no doubt that her Majesty had arrived. The cheering was most enthusiastic when the Fairy came up to the Quay. After a short interval, the Lord Provost and magistrates went on board the Fairy, were introduced by Sir George Grey to her Majesty, and presented the address from the city. The Queen was pleased to request Mr. James Anderson, the Lord Provost, to kneel, and conferred on him the honour of knighthood. This act was the signal for renewed and great applause. Lord Belhaven and a deputation from the county presented the county address. A deputation from the Established Presbytery, consisting of the Rev. Principal Macfarlane, Dr. Black, and Dr. Lochhead, presented an address from that body. The Rev. Dr. Buchanan, Dr. Smith, and Dr. Lorimer were then introduced by Sir George Grey, and presented the address of the Free Church Presbytery.

The addresses were of the customary, and, in this case, sincerely loyal description.

Immediately after, preparations were made for her Majesty and suite leaving the Royal yacht. The Queen passed up the steps and covered way leaning on the arm of Prince Albert, preceded by the Prince of Wales and the Princess, and followed by Lady Jocelyn with the other children of the Royal family.

The scene on her Majesty's entering her carriage was of the most exciting description. Her reception was most enthusiastic, from one of the largest concourses of her subjects that she can ever have seen assembled, occupying every inch of ground on the two quays, every bit of standing room on the slups and the platforms, and crowding all the windows on the line; while the immense number of flags, and the various decorations, transferred the usually busy Broomielaw into a princely scene, that will not oft be realled.

The order of procession having been formed, the Royal cortège passed through Jamaica-street, Argyll-street, Buchanan-street, George-street, and Upper Highstreet, towards the venerable Cathedral of St. Mungo, the pride of the people of Glasgow. The streets were filled with a joyous multitude. The banners and devices were numerous and brilliant; but we have not space to describe them. If we had, it would be a mere repetition of the description of the Royal progress in Ireland. Our Glasgow readers must, therefore, excuse us if we merely state in few words that they were not behindhand in the expense to which they went, and in the ingenuity and taste which they displayed in rendering their streets and houses as beautiful and ornamental as the joyous occasion demanded. Nothing could exceed the hearty and clamorous enthusiasm which greeted her Majesty at every turn of her progress.

The visit of her Majesty and Prince Albert to the Cathedral was strictly private. The Queen was received by the Very Rev. the Principal Macfarlan, who conducted her Majesty through the various portions of the building. Her Majesty and the Prince took great interest in examining every part of it, even to the crypts; and, after finishing her own inspection, the Queen, meeting the Royal children in the nave, returned, as it were, down, reviewed the interior. [In our paper of next week we shall present our readers with two splendid Engravings, from designs taken on the spot by Mr. S. Read: the one, of her Majesty's Arrival at the Cathedral; and the other, of the Visit of the Royal party to the Crypts.]

The Queen, on leaving the Cathedral, re-entered the carriage. The Royal cortège proceeded down High-street to the College, where Her Majesty, the Prince, and the Royal children alighted. Her Majesty was received by the Principal and Professors, and was conducted to the Faculty-hall, where a loyal address was presented.

HER MAJESTY LANDING FROM THE "FAIRY" YACHT, AT GLASGOW.

THE QUEEN'S VISIT TO SCOTLAND.

Before leaving the Faculty-hall, her Majesty examined with much interest the curiously-carved antique chair occupied by undergraduates at their annual examination on what is called "the Black Stone."

Her Majesty then proceeded through the other streets embraced in the route, and on arriving at the terminus of the Edinburgh and Glasgow Railway, alighted, partook of refreshments, which had been laid out for the Royal party in the Ladies' Waiting-room, and then, shortly after two o'clock, left in a handsome carriage provided for the occasion, with special engine, for Balmoral, viâ Perth.

Her Majesty arrived at Perth on Tuesday, at half-past three, after a pleasant journey. She was met at the station by the magistrates, and conducted to the Royal George Hotel, amid the rejoicings of the people. Prince Albert and Sir George Grey at five o'clock proceeded to the Penitentiary, where they remained a short time and inspected the system of prison discipline adopted there.

A little after six o'clock her Majesty, accompanied by the Prince and several of her suite, took a drive in the direction of Moncrieff-hill, and returned to dinner soon after seven. Her Majesty started for Balmoral on Wednesday morning.

Although half the distance might have been accomplished by railway, it was arranged that her Majesty and suite should post from Perth into Aberdeenshire. The streets were crowded at an early hour to witness the departure. The weather was exceedingly favourable; and, throughout the route, her Majesty's progress was quite an ovation, triumphal arches being erected at several places, especially at Blairgowrie, Cally, &c., where the Royal party were received with the most enthusiastic demonstrations of loyalty.

RED MEN AND WHITE MEN.

THE address presented by the Chiefs of the Chippewa nation to the Governor-General of Canada, which has recently gone the round of the daily papers, is an interesting document. Its poetical style will doubtless recommend it to the many, who read for amusement; but we must own that, to us, it possesses a more serious importance, and that its melancholy but dignified remonstrance against a wrong, which is not theirs alone, but that of their whole race, is inexpressibly touching. No graces or eccentricities of style could make their way to the heart like the simple story which the Chippewas tell; and we trust that it will excite the respectful attention and commiseration of all who take an interest in the progress of humanity, and who do not desire that the advancing footsteps of civilisation should lie with crushing weight upon the heads of those who are only uncivilised for want of teaching.

The Chippewas, deprived of their lands, seek to regain them or to be paid for them. They consider that they have been defrauded, and they complain. No one can say that their complaint lacks dignity, or that, in the expression of their sense of wrong, they have forgotten what is due to themselves and to others. Hitherto, the bargains made by the white man with the inhabitants of the wilderness have been generally upon the easiest terms for the stronger party. A knife, a gun, a blanket, or an embroidered coat has paid for thousands of fertile acres; and the red man, if, in cooler moments, he have repented of his bargain, has generally respected it, with a sense of honour which we should do well to make our model.

It is probable that the Chippewas do not demand any exorbitant advantages in lieu of those of which they have been deprived by the miners on the Canadian shore of the Great Lake; and that an attempt will yet be made to recompense them in the manner they desire, for being dispossessed of their hunting-grounds and the graves of their forefathers. However this may be, their sorrowful complaint to the representative of British power in America, opens up the deeply-interesting subject of the wrongs of the aborigines, and the crimes of those who should have only conquered in order to civilise them, and who, in creating rights for themselves, should have remembered the sacred rights of their fellow-men. Europeans, in their intercourse with the natives, in all new countries where they have penetrated, have been guilty of many atrocities, and of sins of omission as well as of commission. It is difficult to say in which respect they have most widely departed from those eternal principles of equity and justice which have their foundation in the human conscience, and which exist as well in the breast of the untutored and naked savage, as in that of the man who is heir to all the learning and all the refinement of civilization.

Leaving out of view the forcible seizure of lands which were not our own, and the fraudulent bargains with which, in early and later times, we have effected by cunning what we could not accomplish by force, and all the pettifogging and quibbling with which the civilized man has gained the mastery over the unsuspecting denizen of the woods, it is sad to reflect that, whatever may be the advantages which Europeans have gained in their intercourse with the aboriginal Americans, no corresponding advantages have ever accrued to the weaker party. The white man has been the great monopolist. He has received all things, and has given nothing in return. The red man has not even acquired instruction from the new-comer, unless it be a tutoring in evil. He has paid the penalty of his ignorance and simplicity. He has not been encouraged to become the friend and equal; and he has been unable to cope successfully as a foe with the superior skill, energy, and rapacity of the pale-face. The consequence has been that he has gradually given way—dispirited, decimated, and demoralised. The Chippewas say of their nation, and of the English who came originally as guests amongst them, that the strangers have become a great people, while their entertainers have melted away like snow beneath the sun. And, in the sad process, what wrongs have they not undergone? Civilisation has conquered them—not with its virtues, but with its vices; and has given them nothing in return for the stately though rude independence which it has overthrown. A keen satirist of modern times affirmed a gibbet on the way-side to be an encouraging proof to a shipwrecked sailor that he had been cast upon a civilised land. The Chippewas and the other aborigines of America might, without satire, affirm with far more truth the melancholy fact that gunpowder to destroy their foes, and alcohol to destroy themselves, have been the principal gifts which they have received from the civilisation of the "pale-faces." They have seen but little of its good, while its worst evils have been sedulously instilled into them. They have not been imbued with its laws, its intelligence, or its religion; but they have caught the contagion of a bad example, and learned but too surely its debasing and enervating vices, its cunning and its crimes. In some instances, they have been demoralized upon system, and plied with alcohol, that they might be the more easily destroyed. Even where this has not been the case, they have seen but the dark side of the European mind, and have sat under the shadow of our civilisation without knowing that to them it was deadly as the shadow of the upas—a place where they could not linger and live.

There is little doubt, however, that in the eternal balance of Fate and Providence, the invasion of the wildernesses of the New by the swarming multitudes of the Old World, has produced good to humanity in general. But the aggregate of good is no atonement for the evil means by which men have been instrumental in working it out. In some instances, there has been no bright side to the picture at all, and the invasion has been one of unmitigated ferocity and wrong. The most unscrupulous dispossessor of the aborigines, the most obstinate contemner of their rights, will scarcely assert that the race of idle, vindictive, and superstitious Spaniards, which has succeeded the mild and philanthropic Incas of Peru is an improvement upon the aboriginal stock; and that the civilizations which Cortes and Pizarro destroyed have been replaced by anything so vastly superior as to atone for the means by which the change was effected. In cases of absolute inferiority of structural development among the tribes we conquer, and where amalgamation of races is not expedient, or possible if it were, all that the best and wisest of men can do, is to see that the inevitable disappearance of the weaker race is left to time and nature to effect; and that it be not hastened by any cruelty or oppression on our parts. But, in the case of the aborigines of America, and other regions where the natural race existed in the noblest form, a more exalted duty ought to have been performed. Here, there was no mental inferiority or physical incompatibility. Man for man, the accidents of education excepted, they were our equals, and possessed all the capability for being elevated from the savage or semi-savage state into a full participation in all the blessings of a higher civilization and a purer religion. Our intercourse with them ought to have been founded upon the strictest justice; and we should have thought it as great a sin to rob them of a single foot of land as we should think it in Europe were we to plunder a babe or poison a suckling with fiery liquors. Being the stronger and the more intelligent, we should have proved ourselves the better and the more beneficent of the two. We should have met the wisdom and justice of the savage by a superior wisdom and more exalted justice of our own. If we conquered, we should have taught them. If we civilized, we should have refined them. This, however, we have not done. We have cheated, where we should have protected. We have introduced vices amongst them which they never previously knew; and we have given them no example of any virtues which they had not previously practised more assiduously than ourselves. Such, with rare and individual exceptions, is the epitomized history of the intercourse of the Old World with the New. We see the results in the gradual disappearance of a race not only noble in itself, but that might with fair treatment have been made coequal with ourselves. The blood of his red brother lies upon the head of the white man; and the cruelties of Pizarro have been outdone by the slower murders of demoralization committed in our time.

As for the poor Chippewas, whose remonstrance has called forth these reflections, we trust that the apparently cold and laconic answer which Lord Elgin gave them hides a kinder meaning than we can discover; and that, to use their own words, "they will yet feel their hearts great within them, and know that they are a nation."

THE FRENCH IN ROME.

IN our Journal of the 28th ult. was recorded the proclamation of the Pope at Rome on the 16th, the hoisting of the Pontifical colours on the Castle of St. Angelo, and their salutation by the artillery of the fort. This was followed by a religious service at St. Peter's, a review of troops, illuminations, &c.

To this fateful recognition have succeeded other instances, as the replacing of the Papal arms upon the official buildings of the city. Thus, on the 29th, they were restored on the Chancery of the Law Courts; and on the 31st, the replacement on the Capitol was made under the superintendence of General Oudinot, who likewise addressed the people. The latter scene has been sketched by our Artist at Rome, and is engraved upon the preceding page, as one of the series of characteristic illustrations of the recent struggle in Rome.

On the day previous to this replacement, Prince Odescalchi, the President of the new Municipality, arrived from Gaeta, stating that a commission had been appointed by the Pope, composed of three Cardinals, namely, Cardinals Altieri, Vannicelli, and Della Genga, who were empowered to form a Ministry, and restore the temporal authority of the Supreme Pontiff.

THE PIRATES OF BORNEO AND SIR JAMES BROOKE.—Advices from Labuan to the 22d June are of the most gloomy nature, owing to the prevalence of fever, which was general. In the list of persons attacked, and still suffering when the Nemesis quitted the island, were the officials, excepting the Lieutenant-Governor, the European non-official residents, and the natives employed in Government works or on the coal seam. Her Highness's ship Royalist, acting as guardship, had suffered severely; the commander and three officers, and 20 of the crew, were on the fever list; and one of the crew had died of Labuan fever. The Governor (Sir James Brooke) had returned from his visit to the island of Sulu, where he had succeeded in making a treaty which was to be confirmed by the Sultan. This treaty includes a provision for the suppression of piracy, and also a clause by which the Sultan binds himself not to cede any island or portion of territory without the assent of the Government. When the engagement was concluded, Sir James Brooke went from Sulu to Zamboanga, the Spanish settlement at Mindanao, and handed a copy to the Governor, who forthwith issued a protest against it, which was answered by a counter-protest. This, however, which was looked upon as a mere matter of course. The Spaniards had a few days before attacked and burned a village on one of the islands near Mindanao. At the date of these advices, the Nemesis was about to proceed to the Nemesis for Sarawak, in order to commence operations against the Sakaran and Sarebas dyaks.

MAGYAR PRONUNCIATION.—A few hints may prove acceptable to some readers who meet with an apparently unpronounceable word in print. The vowels are short or long. When short, they are without any accent; but when long, they have the acute accent placed over them; o and u may have also two dots over them, they are then short, but to make them long the acute accent is placed over those dots, or the dots are rejected, and two acute accents written instead. The short a is pronounced like ours in "what," the a with the acute accent, or long a, nearly like our a in "salt;" their accented or long e like the French, or our ay in "day," thus, éjen, "let live;" the dotted and also the accented o have a deep full sound. The other vowels are nearly as in Italian, only all the long vowels must be lengthened in sound and carefully distinguished from the short vowels. Some of the consonants have a peculiar pronunciation: cs is our ch in cherry, and therefore Kecskemet is to be sounded Ketchkemet; so, likewise, ács as atch. Cz is our z, therefore czukor (sugar) like tsookor. Dz, or dzs, or ds, is our g in gin; thus hondzár, "a starer," as if it were hongsur; dz like our own in adz. Gy is like a hough d, hence é Magyar (the Hungarian), as if it were ee Modyor; nagy, "great," as nodge. Ly is the liquid French l, or the Italian gl, thus lyuk, "aperture," gyuk, "a needle," ly must be jerked out after the l; therefore Vkodrhely sounds Vaudsharhelly. thus vándr, "a fair," and hely, "a place." In the same way in ny, the n is liquid, as gn in French and Italian; and nagy, "great," "summer," ő, a word unknown to us; it is our ih: the President's name, therefore, Kossuth, sounds Kogh-shoo[illegible]"an eagle," like shash; on the other hand, sz like a hissing s; and the great plaintst, Lisz (which word, very unpoetically, means flour), sounds like our lis; next, "spirit, mind," like the first syllable in sesame. Ty is the liquid t; their s like ours; their sz, however, like ours in azure, or the French j; hence asszó, "a few," as azde would be in a Scotsman's mouth. Tz is like ts, as in cats. Zs as given above; lez is our double z; ly as lily; gyy as goggy, and so on. The y at the end of noblemen's names, and the sign of nobility, as O' with the Irish, sounds like our a at the end of a word.

THE NEW PRUSSIAN MUSKET.—The German journals are filled with descriptions and observations concerning a new-invented musket which they call zundnadel (touch-needle), and with which a great part of the Prussian army is now armed. The Prussian Minister of War is said to have aimed at present the secret of the new method, and to have refused to communicate it to their friendly governments which have made applications respecting it. The Cologne Gazette declares, however, that it is able to give the following explanation:—The name of this new musket has been given to it because the explosion is produced by a metallic blade, or needle, which is inserted into the cartridge. The bore is rifled, and the balls pointed, cone at the point, cylindrical at the centre, and round at the large end. The cartridge is provided with a layer of some explosive substance near the bullet, and the powder is placed at the bottom of the cartridge, which is introduced at the butt-end of the musket. In pulling the trigger, a fine steel blade (a needle) introduces itself by an opening in the back of the tube, traverses the cartridge and powder, and arrives at the explosive substance, which is the same as that employed for filling percussion-caps. The explosion takes place in the cartridge, which is consumed to the last grain. The charge of powder is the one-eighth of an ounce, whilst that for a common percussion gun is generally a quarter of an ounce. With these muskets a soldier is able to load and fire six or eight times without letting go, and the longest range of his weapon is a thousand toises. He can take a correct aim at 800 toises: common muskets don't carry beyond 400 toises; so that the Prussian soldier is able to open the fire at a double distance of the enemy. A troop of soldiers marching at gymnastic pace (double quick time) would go over the distance in four minutes, and would have to stand during this time from twenty-five to thirty discharges, the cartridge of which passes over 800 toises in two minutes and a half, would have sustained twenty discharges. Grape-shot produces only weak results at 800 toises, therefore gunners may be picked off and killed one by one at their guns by the Prussian soldiers.

A brutal murder was recently committed at Malta on a sailor of the Terrible, named John Parker. He was walking with an artilleryman, when a Maltese, running at speed, passed between them and stabbed the poor fellow in the abdomen, of which wound he died, the next morning, in the hospital. There was no possible motive for the act, which must have been perpetrated under the maddening excitement of liquor. No trace of the murderer was detected, and he has since eluded all enquiry. The sailor for several minutes did not even know he had been stabbed.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

The adjournment of the Legislative Assembly has brought with it the usual dulness characteristic of a Parliamentary recess.

The President of the Republic took up his residence at St Cloud on Monday. He proposes to remain there until the meeting of the Legislative Assembly. M. de Falloux set out the same morning for the baths of Neris, for the benefit of the mineral waters, in consequence of an inflammation of the lungs with which he has been attacked within the last few days, and which has prevented him from taking any part in public business. Meanwhile the Ministry of Public Instruction has been confided to M. Lanjuinais, the Minister of Commerce.

M. Dassy, Minister of Finance, it is understood, is about to retire from the Cabinet, as he could not obtain the support of his colleagues to his plan of an income-tax, to recruit the revenue; and M. D'Andrifret, M. Benoit, and M. Achille Fould are spoken of as candidates for the office.

The general dullness of Paris was relieved on Monday and Tuesday by arrivals of deputies from England and America, to attend the Peace Congress, the first meeting of which was held on Wednesday. At twelve o'clock, the hour fixed upon, a goodly muster of plainly-dressed gentlemen assembled in the Salle St. Cecille—a mus c hall in the Chaussé d'Antin, which was fitted up and decorated for the occasion. Victor Hugo took the chair, when the manifesto of the Congress, in the shape of eight resolutions, was read, which inculcates the necessity of submitting all international differences to the arbitration of a Supreme Court, which shall be appointed by a Congress of Nations.

The resolutions to be passed by the congress are as follow:

1. As peace alone can secure the moral and material interests of nations, it is the duty of all Governments to submit to arbitration all differences that arise amongst them, and to respect the decisions of the arbitrators to whom they may choose.
2. It is advisable to call the attention of Governments to the necessity of entering, by a general and simultaneous measure, into a system of disarmament, for the purpose of reducing national expenditure, and of removing, at the same time, a permanent cause of disquietude and danger from among nations.
3. The congress recommends all the friends of peace to prepare public opinion, in their respective countries, for the formation of a congress of nations, whose sole object should be to frame a code of international laws, and to establish a supreme court, to which should be submitted all questions relating to the reciprocal rights and duties of nations.
4. The congress declares all loans and taxes intended for aid the prosecution of wars of conquest and ambition.
5. The congress recommends all its members to endeavour to eradicate from the minds of all in their respective countries, both by means of a better education of youth and by other methods, those prejudices and military hatreds which have so often been the cause of disastrous wars.
6. The congress addresses the same invitation to all ministers of religion, whose sacred mission it is to encourage feelings of goodwill among men; as well as to the various organs of the press, which exercise so powerful an influence over the development of civilization.
7. The congress requests the Peace Society to take the necessary measures for communicating with the friends of peace and reform; for the universal adoption of the same standard of weights, measures, and money; and for the establishment of a general association, which shall keep up a correspondence with each other.
8. The congress decides that the committee be instructed to draw up an address to all nations embody ag the resolutions of the congress, and that this address shall be presented to the various Governments of Europe and America, and particularly to the President of the French Republic.

M. Victor Hugo, in addressing the Assembly, said, he believed the object they had at heart was a religious one, and not only desirable, but practicable and feasible. "Four centuries ago," said the speaker, "the different provinces of France made war against one another; and he expected to see the day arrive when that which took place with respect to the provinces of one country would mark the whole of Europe; and that, as Normandy and other provinces formed one France, at peace with itself, so the different nations of Europe would dwell in harmony as one country. Then would be no longer war, but civilisation; and cannon would only be seen as curiosities shut up in museums." M. Hugo proceeded to descant upon the vast expense of keeping up standing armies, and the great advantages that would arise if such money were thrown into the channels of labour, by which commerce would be promoted, and intelligence advanced.

It was then announced that 500 fr. would be given for a peace essay, and 500 fr. for the best collection of facts showing the horrors of war.

The Rev. John Burnet, a dissenting preacher, addressed the meeting at great length in support of the principles propounded by the society, whose sentiments met with a cordial response from all present.

The Congress then broke up.

The order of business was that there should be one session each day, lasting from twelve to five o'clock. The last session to take place on Saturday (this day). The Archbishop of Canterbury and other individuals have given their adhesion to the object of the meeting. The Vice-Presidents are Messrs. Cobden, Vessches, Coquerel, Desnoyery, and Durkes; and secretaries, Messrs. Joseph Garnier, Henry Richard, and Emile Burrits, and A. Coelin.

M. Ledru-Rollin, who arrived in Paris last week with the intention of standing his trial, has since left, by the advice of his friends, who think his condemnation much more likely than his acquittal.

SPAIN.

The Ministerial crisis has been terminated by the accepted resignation of M. Mon. General Narvaez will not only hold the Presidency of the Council, but also the Ministry of Finance, being assisted in the latter office by M Olivan, as Under-Secretary, with the title of Director-General. The Duke of Rivil will be the Minister for Foreign Affairs. On the evening of the 16th inst., at Madrid, the King, the Queen Mother, and the Duke de Rianzares assisted at the fight between a bull and a lion, which proved a complete failure. The lion, when let loose, jumped on the back of the bull, but the latter, having shaken him off, made him feel his horns, and completely put him to flight. The bull returned many times to the charge without being able to engage his adversary, who constantly fled before the bull. The latter was killed by the lion, but he quietly went to seat himself by the lion. The bull having attacked him, a battle ensued, which ended to the advantage of the bull. The people, in their disappointment, continually made exclamations that a bull fight with the fierce cornete would have probably followed if the armed force had not interfered in time.

ITALIAN STATES.

VENICE.—The latest authentic accounts from Venice are to the 7th inst. They state that between 40 and 50 persons daily died of cholera in that city, and from 30 to 40 at Chioggia. The city was in a dreadful state from want of provisions. The bombardment continued, but had as yet inflicted no very material damage. It was reported that the wife of Garibaldi had died at Chioggia of the excessive fatigue she had endured.

PIEDMONT.—From Turin, under date of the 16th inst., we find that the Chamber of Deputies had assembled in secret committee to hear the explanation of the Ministry relative to the peace concluded with Austria. The Minister of the Interior had demanded the appointment of the Secret Committee, which was declared by the Chamber to be urgent. The Minister declared that the treaty of peace contained no secret clause. He then requested the Chamber the funds necessary for the payment of the war indemnity, fixed by the treaty at 75,000,000f., of which 40,000,000f. are to be paid forthwith, and the remainder within 30 months. The Chamber of Deputies almost unanimously refused the supply demanded. The Minister persevered in his demand, adding that six days only were allowed for accepting the treaty. The Chamber deferred its final decision, which has not yet been made known.

The Prince Belgiojoso among the Lombards excluded from the Austrian amnesty.

ROME.—From Rome, under date of the 13th instant, we learn that a "reactionist" layman, M. Camillo Acquarelli, had been appointed Minister of Commerce, Agriculture, Fine Arts, and Public Works.

We learn from Gaeta that the Pope was very unwell, and presented a swollen appearance. A letter from Gaeta says that the individuals insinuated that poisonous drugs had been administered to both invalids

A deputation of Ravenna had been favourably received by the Pope, who had, however, declared that he would duly grant the Councils, with deliberating votes and an extensive secularisation. These propositions, it is said, had been refused by France, and M. de Corcelles was instructed not to yield, but to insist on a preliminary liberal institutions

The Pope, whilst waiting the result of the negotiations pending between the ambassadors of the great Powers, is about to pass some days at Naples, where the King is preparing to give him a magnificent reception. General Oudinot had received orders to remain at Rome until M. de Corcelles should be completely recovered. We learn from the Paris Presse that the French Government on Tuesday last forwarded a despatch to the Pope at Gaëta, announcing to his Holiness that General Oudinot had gone beyond the instructions in granting unlimited powers to the commission of Cardinals. This dispatch further intimates that the French Cabinet will receive to themselves the last word in all acts of the Papal Government, and that should the Pope object to their determination, France will enforce its right by an appeal to the army of occupation.

From the Roman provinces we find that in consequence of the insolent behaviour of the Spaniards quartered at Velletri, the people rose and drove them out of the town. An insurrection has also taken place at Poggio Mirteto, a small place in the Pontifical States, where the people declared that what was going on was against the will of Pius IX. 400 Spaniards have been sent to restore order there. The Extraordinary Pontifical Commissioner of the four Legations has announced to the town of Ferrara that his Holiness has deigned to absolve it from the remainder of the war contribution which was imposed upon it in February last.

GERMAN STATES

The Grand Duke of Baden made his solemn entry into Carlsruhe on the 18th instant, where he was received with the greatest enthusiasm. The Grand Duke shortly afterwards issued a proclamation, expressing his deep grief at the anarchy that had prevailed, and which had compelled him to withdraw for a time from his dominions; but now that he had returned, he would introduce, as circumstances might enable him, those reforms which he had proposed prior to the breaking out of the insurrection; and he trusted that all good citizens would second his efforts.

The Government of Grand Ducal Hesse has declared in favour of the constitution promulgated by the Kings of Hanover, Prussia, and Saxony.

A Royal ordonnance of the King of Bavaria convokes the Chambers for the 3rd of September

RUSSIA

There is no political intelligence from Berlin.

Prince Nicholas of Holstein-Oldenburg, a Lieutenant in the 2nd Regiment of Dragoons of Prussia, died on the 18th at Berlin, from having taken poison in mistake. He was under treatment for a disease of the skin, for which internal and external remedies were ordered. On returning from the theatre, he by error took a dose from the phial containing the remedy to be applied externally, which was a violent poison. All the assistance of the physicians was of no avail. His sufferings lasted forty-eight hours.

AUSTRIA AND HUNGARY

The news this week from the seat of war, if confirmed (and of that there appears to be at present little cause to doubt), is the most important that has yet reached us since the commencement of hostilities, as it indicates the speedy, if not the immediate, close of the war, in a manner unfavourable to the liberties of the gallant Hungarian nation. The accounts of the state of matters are twofold—from Warsaw and Vienna; and though there is some discrepancy in details, both concur in the main fact—the surrender of Görgey

Görgey, it appears, had been invested by the Hungarian Assembly with the authority of Dictator, in the room of Kossuth, who had been displaced. Görgey thereupon opened negotiations through the medium of Russia, and submitted at Villagos, with his whole force, and on the part of the entire Hungarian body, to the Russian Commander-in-Chief, Marshal Paskiewitch. The Russians, it is said, are to use their best endeavours in favour of the Hungarians.

Vienna papers and letters of the 17th inst. confirm the above news. The following proclamation was posted at Vienna on the 16th:—

"HIS EXCELLENCY BARON HAYNAU TO HIS MAJESTY THE EMPEROR.

"Have the honour to inform your Majesty that my General Haynau informs his Majesty the Emperor that the rebel chief Görgey, with a large part of his army of 30,000 to 40,000 men, surrendered on the 13th inst., unconditionally, at Villagos.

"VIENNA, Aug. 17, 1849."

Bem was defeated a second time by the Russian troops, in the Rothenthurm defile, on the 5th of August, when the combined forces of the Russian General Lüders and Harford simultaneously attacked him, and totally dispersed his corps, taking fifteen pieces of artillery, upwards of 1000 prisoners, and killing or wounding about as many more.

Görgey fled off with the Hungarian army before Paskiewitch at Grosswardein, on the 11th, the arms being all delivered up. Although Görgey was Dictator, it does not appear that he acted upon his own judgment alone, for we are told by the Cologne Gazette that Kossuth, Görgey, and Bem held a council at Arad, when Görgey frankly declared that all was lost for Hungary, and that all further resistance was vain. Kossuth and Bem were for continuing the war. Görgey's arguments were conclusive with a number of Hungarian officers, who insisted upon yielding to the Russo-Austrian powers. A great portion of the besieging army at Temeshvar, amounting to between 30,000 and 40,000 men, also were in favour of submission. These demonstrations being made in so unreserved a manner, Kossuth and Bem found it necessary to open negotiations for peace, which were gladly acceded to by the Russian Commander-in-Chief. Kossuth, taking with him the insignia of the Hungarian empire, immediately quitted Arad with the view of crossing the Turkish frontier, in company with Bem, Perczel, and a number of the principal officers of the deposed cause. Görgey hopes to obtain a pardon for himself and a free amnesty for the troops under his command, and he has given himself up as a holocaust to his country.

The cholera has assumed a menacing character at Vienna, and, in consequence of it, the Emperor left for Istril.

TURKEY.

Accounts from Constantinople, to the 1st inst., state that the influx of foreign political fugitives into that capital is daily so much on the increase, that the Porte has sent orders to all the various consulates, that they shall in future give no passports to Constantinople to persons of this description, the only place where they can take refuge being in some remote parts of the kingdom.

Hussad Effendi, the Minister of Finance, was struck with a fit of apoplexy on entering the Cabinet Council on the 26th of July, and died the following day. He is succeeded by Hafiz Pacha.

Sir Moses Montefiore, during his recent visit at Damascus, gave large sums of money to the poor; and at his departure, a further sum of 3000 piastres for establishing a Jewish school.

UNITED STATES.

Intelligence from New York to the 8th inst. has been received. The cholera has begun to decrease, not only in the western, but also in the eastern states.

The "right of way" across the narrow strip of land, in Central America, that separates the Atlantic from the Pacific Ocean, seems at present likely to create "a difficulty" between the United States and England. The question has been raised by Mr. Barclay, the British Consul at New York. He has intimated to Messrs. Clapp and Brown, who, as agents of the New York and New Orleans Steam-boat Company, had bought a right of communication between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans of the Government of Nicaragua, per the river San Juan, &c., that the said Government had no power to sell such "right;" that the property sold belongs to the King of Mosquito, and not to Nicaragua; and that the British Government is bound to protect the King of Mosquito in the exercise of the territorial rights which he possesses," &c. American journals, which, no doubt, pounce on the subject as a god-send in these dull days of autumn, enlarge upon the grasping spirit of the English, and declare the protection of the territory in question by England to be a "lame pretext," an "unfounded claim"—which must be resisted," &c. by the United States.

Mr. Barclay's letter is as follows:—

"Her British Majesty's Consulate, New York, 31st July, 1849.

"SIR,—Her Britannic Majesty's Government being informed that an agreement [illegible] has been entered into by the Government of Nicaragua with Messrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, David D. Brown, citizens of the United States, and agents of the New York and New Orleans Steam Navigation Company, of which Company you are a principal, for a grant of the exclusive right of transit across that country, I am directed by my Government to protest the King of Mosquito in the exercise of the territorial rights which he possesses over Grey Town, and over the lower part of the St. John's River, and that the Government of Nicaragua has no interest in the place where it has no competence. I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant.

(Signed) "ANTHONY BARCLAY.

The returns of the elections to Congress—which, however, were not yet complete, from several of the southern states—show that the democrat are gaining ground; and it is now probable that there will be a majority in the Senate as well as in the House of Representatives against Generals Taylor, his Cabinet, and their policy.

The loss by the recent great fire at Albany has been ascertained to be about 80,000 dollars; by that of St. Louis (mostly steam-boats destroyed), 60,000 dollars

The Indian outrages in Florida still continue. Several persons have been killed by the savages, and a small party of militia had to retire before superior numbers.

A shocking accident occurred at Princeton, on the railroad between this city and New York, on Thursday, the 1st inst. Owing to a "switch" or turn-out having been left open, the express train from Philadelphia and passengers cars were precipitated into the canal. Two persons were instantly killed, and seventeen grievously wounded.

The Prince de Joinville has been invited to Philadelphia. Great preparations were being made at Baltimore to receive the reverend Father.

CANADA

The latest accounts from Montreal are to the 7th inst. The chief feature of interest in the late ligence thus received is the close, on the 31st ult., of the session of British Parliament at Montreal, which, as before stated, caused the forerunner of an agitation having for its object the separation of Canada from the British empire. The whole thing is regarded as a failure. The League was but in its infancy, and consequently was unable to exert the influence which, and, on its rising, it issued a manifesto, inculcating union and federation with the sister provinces of the British Crown in the North American continent. It also was resolved that "a president, six vice-presidents, secretaries, a treasurer, and an executive committee of ten, be appointed by the convention for the purpose of conducting at the seat of Government the general business of the league. Every township, village, and county in the province will have a branch, and in each district the presidents and vice-presidents of its branch leagues will form an executive body for district business; and all these officers, together with those first named, at the general meeting, will constitute the central league. Protection to home industry, with the view of encouraging the establishment of domestic manufactures; retrenchment in the expenditure of the Government, and the bitter opposition of all such expenditure to the existing means of the province, and an extension of our home markets, and the consolidation of British interest, by the union of the colonies—these present specific objects worthy the employment of our highest efforts for their attainment." The convention adjourned, giving "three times three" cheers for the Queen.

A public meeting of the citizens of Montreal was held on the 31st ult., at which it was all but unanimously agreed to lend the credit of the city to the extent of 500,000 dollars to the completion of the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Railway, which will connect Montreal with Portland (Maine), and open out the splendid intermediate country. This, with 500,000 dollars from other sources, to which a degree of public enthusiasm was the result, and the grants of the Legislature under a general act comes in; and an expectation is entertained that the other half may be borrowed in England, on the joint security of the railroad and the province.

The cholera is on the decline in the Canadian towns and cities.

AUSTRALIA.

The latest accounts from Sydney are to the month of May. The all-absorbing topic was the agitation against resuming transportation of convicts to the colony. In such a degree of public excitement as this, all serious transportation reached, that should it be resumed, and a convict vessel arrive at Sydney, a public meeting is arranged to be convened on the ground adjacent to the Circular-quay, a bonfire in front of the Government House, in which the hulk of again making New South Wales a penal settlement." The advertisement convening this meeting shows the decided feeling which exists in the colony; and concludes:—"The sanction of blood has already commenced. Soldiers are in the market for slaves—convicted and contaminated slaves who are to set aside the rights of the free people of Australia." Since the arrest of Governor Bligh, no subject has so called into action the unanimated execration of the colonists. Considerable excitement prevailed amongst shippers to the California market, which at the above date was the greatest outlet for the surplus goods in the Sydney market. The government Gazette contains the usual abstract of the revenue for the quarter ending 31st of March. The total revenue for the quarter (exclusive of Port Phillip) is set down at £59,955 4s. 1d., being a decrease on the same term of the former year to the extent of £562; the Crown revenues are put down at £9,937, being an increase on the corresponding quarter of last year of £1663. The decrease in the general revenue is in the spirit duties. Mr. Justice Manning was seriously ill, having been seized with a fainting fit while discharging his duties in the court. No immediate danger was apprehended. Mr. W. Hart has been removed by the directors of the bank of Australasia from the office of Inspector of Colonial Establishments, the duties being temporarily performed by Mr. Fawkner, the assistant inspector.

From Port Phillip we have it announced, in proof of the ill success of the system of sending exiles to the colonies, that at the last Melbourne criminal sessions there were 34 prisoners for trial, of which number 11 (nearly one third) were exiles, one of whom was convicted and executed for murder. 1358 exiles had been landed at Port Phillip, or about one-fifteenth of the whole adult population; and yet the exiles furnished one-third of the criminals charged with the most serious offences. This result ought to satisfy Earl Grey of the total failure of the experiment.

An amphitheatre and circus, after the manner of Astley's, was in course of erection at Melbourne.

The wheat raised in this colony has obtained the highest degree of cultivation, and is much valued by the grain of any other country; but as plentiful has been the late harvest, that the farmers in the neighbourhood of Geelong declare the current prices of wheat so low as barely to cover the expenses of raising it. The farmers were, in consequence, driven to a search for remunerative exportation.

WEST INDIES.

The Avon, with the usual monthly mails, arrived at Southampton on Tuesday.

From Jamaica the dates are to the 23rd ult. A little excitement consequent upon the general elections, which were being proceeded with, had in a measure tended to divert the minds of both parties, connected with the mercantile and planting interests, from every other subject. The writs for the election of members to serve in the new House were made returnable on the 4th of September, and it was expected the House would be summoned to meet for business shortly afterwards. The island was in general healthy. The prospects of the planting interests were exceedingly gloomy.

Meetings were still being held on the subject of the slave treaties with Spain and Brazil, and petitions adopted to be presented to her Majesty. The colonists were using every endeavour to induce the Home Government to enforce the treaties.

From Barbadoes we learn that fine rains had fallen, and the country was looking well for the next crop; the same in Trinidad and generally among the other islands. In Trinidad the Legislative Assembly had again met, pursuant to adjournment, but no measure of the slightest importance had occupied the attention of the members.

The Combined Court met at Demerara on the 13th ult. The Governor, in a conciliatory spirit, withdrew his veto on Mr. Croal's resolution, and Mr. Croal, in consequence, withdrew the resolutions. The answer to the Governor's address was severe, but it is believed that no serious misunderstanding will arise to prevent the court from bringing the financial business to a close. The Court has taken up the estimates of 1848, which ought to have been passed last year. The Demerara Railway is before the Combined Court. The Franchise Bill has made some progress. A joint-stock company is forming to purchase and cultivate land upon an improved system.

In St. Vincent's the small-pox continued to rage with unabated virulence. The number of deaths had been great—equal, in short, to fourteen per cent. It was thought the malady would increase as the warm months approached.

At Moquito the cholera is raging, and great complaint is made on account of the absence of any Consul from that place.

From Bermuda, we learn that copious showers of rain had fallen since the last packet sailed, which had materially assisted vegetation. The parched and withered aspect of the country, occasioned by an almost unprecedented continuance of dry weather, had, in some measure, already changed its appearance.

The last of August being the anniversary of the extinction of slavery in the British possessions, passed off quietly in Bermuda. The House of Assembly was sitting.

INDIA.

Intelligence anticipatory of the overland mail arrived during the week. It is dated Calcutta, August 2, and is of little interest. There has been an insurrectionary movement on a very small scale in the Gwalior territory. Two or three of the leading chiefs, encouraged by the absence of the usual amount of military force, had taken the field, but sufficient troops were soon collected, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Graves, to destroy the principal stronghold of the insurgents, and some minor forts which they endeavoured to defend.

Sir C. Napier arrived at Simla on the 16th of June, and was expected to proceed almost immediately to Lahore. At least in all the stations of the Punjaub is described as intense, and in Lahore especially the troops had suffered severely.

Lord Dalhousie remained at Simla, and it was said that he contemplated summoning the Supreme Court from Calcutta to join him there, as much inconvenience was occasioned by their separation. The measure has been long contemplated as a necessary result of the extension of our territory in the north-west.

The trial of Moolraj was still proceeding at Lahore, and excited much attention. The case for the prosecution had just been completed, and was considered to establish his complicity in the murders of Agnew and Anderson.

NAVAL AND MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE, SANDHURST.

The following new regulations relating to the students at the Senior Department have just been published :—

1. A candidate for admission to the Senior Department of the College must be a commissioned officer in the army, and must have completed the twenty-first year of his age. He must have actually served as a commissioned officer with his regiment three years abroad, or four years at home; unless he should have been prevented by half-pay before the completion of such period, when his claim will be considered.

2. His application (addressed to the Governor of the College) must be supported by satisfactory testimonials of character and conduct, as likewise of his being well grounded in the duties of the particular branch of service to which he belongs.

3. These testimonials must be from the officer commanding the regiment in which he is serving; or, if on half-pay, from an officer of rank in the service.

4. Every officer on joining the senior department will be subjected to an examination in the following subjects: if deficient therein he cannot be received into the institution:—In arithmetic, he must be acquainted with the first four rules, simple and compound, proportion, fractions, and the use of logarithms. In languages, he must have some knowledge of Latin, of French, or German, so as to be acquainted with the construction of one of them. He must be prepared to answer some simple questions in history and geography. In fortifications, he must have read some easy elementary work on the subject, and have received instruction in the use of the mathematical drawing instruments.

5. The time prescribed for the course of education at the Senior Department is two years from the date of the admission of each officer, unless he has been educated at the Junior Department, in which case the period allowed is one year and a half only.

6. At the close of every half-year of residence the student is required to undergo an extensive examination in progressive portions of the course of instruction, when, if he is found not to have made the advancement required in the six months, he will be recommended to join his regiment, without waiting for the period allowed for the completion of the course.

7. Officers performing the required course of studies are, at the close of their residence, presented with certificates of their qualifications from the commissioners of the college, according to the degree of proficiency and talent evinced at the public examination.

8. The number of students in the senior department is at present limited to fifteen

9. Each student pays into the funds of the college such sum annually as has been previously determined by the board of commissioners.

10. The annual subscription at present is thirty guineas.

11. Every officer, on becoming a student, is required to subscribe two pounds to the College Library Fund.

12. Quarters are provided at the college for the officers of the senior department, and forage for one horse (under the authority of the College Board) is allowed to such as have made sufficient progress in their studies to qualify them for sketching in the field. Officers of cavalry do not receive forage money in lieu, under the authority of the Secretary at War, dated 26th January, 1843, draw forage for one horse from the contractor, in the same manner as with their regiments.

13. There are only three married officers' quarters, and above that number will have to provide lodgings at their own expense.

14. Every officer studying at the senior department is required to wear his uniform, with the same strictness as if on duty with his regiment.

15. In case any officer belonging to the senior department conducts himself in such a manner as may appear to be at all detrimental to the institution, or to hold out a bad example to the young gentlemen of the junior department, either by want of application or other respects, a report upon his conduct will be transmitted by the Governor to the Adjutant-General, with a view to his being withdrawn from the institution.

16. Regimental officers on full pay, who obtain permission to become students at the senior department of the Royal Military College, are allowed to retain their regimental servants, and are to be reported in the regimental returns in the column of "Officers absent on Duty," for the period during which they remain at the College.

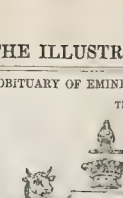
17. Officers, on leaving the senior department of the Royal Military College, are to rejoin their regiments within one month after quitting the institution.

The new Barracks at Rinmoil, Galway, are to cost £10,000 for building.

Some time since, an application was presented to the authorities at Somerset House, on the part of certain newspaper proprietors in Glasgow, craving that an establishment for stamping newspapers should be instituted in that city, to obviate the trouble and expense of sending to Edinburgh for their stamped paper. From a letter addressed to Mr. Hastle, one of the representatives of Glasgow, it appears that the request has been declined.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS RECENTLY DECEASED.

THE EARL OF AIRLIE



DAVID OGILVY, Earl of Airlie, Baron Ogilvy of Airlie, and Baron Ogilvy of Alyth and Lintanbaw, in the peerage of Scotland, and a representative peer for that part of the United Kingdom, was born the 16th December, 1786; his father was Walter Ogilvy, Esq., who, but for the attainder of the dignity, would have been eighth Earl of Airlie. In 1826, however, David Ogilvy, the son, was restored by Act of Parliament, as ninth Earl of Airlie, to the honours of his family, which had been forfeited by his ancestors in their support of the cause of Prince Charles Edward.

The Earl married, the 7th October, 1812, Clementina, only child of the late Gavin Drummond, Esq., by whom (who died in 1835) his Lordship leaves, with four daughters, a son and successor, David Graham, now Earl of Airlie. His Lordship married secondly, the 15th November, 1838, Margaret, only child of the late William Bruce, Esq., by whom (who survives him) he leaves two sons. The Earl died on the 20th instant, at his residence in Regent-street. A short time before his death, a numerous meeting of the Lieutenancy of Forfarshire had passed resolutions expressive of regret at his Lordship's resignation of the Lord-Lieutenancy of that county, which he had held with universal respect and esteem for more than twenty years. The Earl, indeed was much and deservedly beloved in his neighbourhood, and by all who knew him, on account of his great benevolence and charity.

SIR CUTHBERT SHARP, KNT., F.S.A.

This learned and distinguished antiquary, the author of several historical works, died a few days since. At the period of his decease he held the appointment of Collector of the Customs of Sunderland, and, at one time, served as Mayor of Durham. He was knighted in 1814. Sir Cuthbert was son of Cuthbert Sharp, Esq., of Sunder.and, by Susannah his wife, sister of Ryan Crosby, M.P. for Durham, who distinguished Lord Mayor of London in 1771, who made, in that year, a successful struggle for the free publication of the Parliamentary debates, and suffered imprisonment in the Tower of London, during the session, for having signed a warrant against the messenger of the House of Commons in the affair of the printers. Sir Cuthbert Sharp has left one brother, the present Hercules Sharpe, Esq., of Oakiands, Sussex, a magistrate for that county, who married Anne Mary, eldest daughter and eventual co-heir of Sir Anthony Brabazon, Bart.

THE HON. LADY PELLEW.

HARRIET LADY PELLEW, whose death occurred on the 7th instant, was only daughter of the late Sir Godfrey Webster, Bart., of Battle Abbey, by his wife, Elizabeth Vassall, afterwards Baroness Holland. She married 9th June, 1816, Rear-Admiral the Hon. Sir Fleetwood Broughton Reynolds Pellew, C.B., K.C.H., second son of Edward, first Viscount Exmouth, and had an only surviving child Harriett Bethia Frances, who wedded in 1841 Lord Walpole, the eldest son of the Earl of Orford.

MEHEMET ALI.

THIS extraordinary warrior-statesman, the greatest of modern Eastern Princes, leaves behind him a name of note in the annals not only of Turkey and Egypt, but of the world.

Mehemet Ali was born in 1769, in the town of Cavalla, in Roumelia, the country of Alexander the Great. Mehemet's father, it is said, was a watercarrier, and he himself commenced life in his native town as a tobacconist. He afterwards volunteered into the army. In his new career he soon obtained high favour with the Governor of Cavalla by his efficient assistance in quelling a rebellion and dispersing a band of pirates; and on the death of his commanding officer he was appointed to succeed him, and he married his widow. In 1798 the town of Cavalla having been called upon by the Sultan to provide its contingent of 300 men for the expulsion of the French from Egypt, the Governor sent the required number, headed by his son, with Mehemet as their leader; but, shortly after landing at Aboukir, the son returned to Roumelia, and left Mehemet All in command. In all the engagements with the French Mehemet distinguished himself by his conduct and valour. He rapidly rose in rank, and became powerful in his ascendancy over the minds of the soldiery. The contest which arose after the evacuation of Egypt by the French, in 1801, between Mehemet Khosrew, the Capitan Pasha, and the Mamelukes, who were endeavouring to regain their ancient rule, led to the further advance of Mehemet Ali. He joined the Mamelukes, and they together succeeded in removing the Turkish Viceroy from Egypt. In 1806 Mehemet Ali was himself installed in the Pashalic of Egypt, on the payment of a tribute of 4000 purses to the Sultan. His dominion was gradually extended by cessions from the Porte, and he soon found himself in reality the independent and supreme Prince. In 1811 he consolidated his power by a treacherous and sanguinary massacre of his former allies, the Mamelukes. He then made war upon the Wahabites, a race of fanatics in Arabia, which brought into notice his famous son, Ibrahim Pasha. In 1815 Mehemet Ali raised a new army, which was drilled by French and Italian officers, whilst his former troops went, under his son Ismael, to the conquest of Dongola and Sennaar. In 1824 he aided the Sultan with a fleet and an army, in his attempt to suppress the Greek insurrection. Ibrahim Pasha commanded, and committed great cruelties, after the then Turkish fashion. The battle of Navarino, the 20th October, 1827, put a stop to his excesses

Three years afterwards, the great struggle arose in Syria between Mehemet Ali and his nominal lord and master, the Sultan. Battle after battle was fought, and victory after victory gained by Ibrahim Pasha, until a peace was signed in 1833, which gave Syria and Adana to Mehemet A i. So matters remained till 1839, when the Porte, after making another ineffectual endeavour to regain its power, called in, by treaty, the co-operation of England, Austria, Russia, and Prussia. This brought on the collision between the Egyptians and the English and other Europeans, when Mehemet Ali's army was defeated at Beyrout, and Acre was taken from him. Further resistance became hopeless, and he at last yielded up Syria to the Porte, on condition of the hereditary Pashalic of Egypt in his own family being secured to him.

During the period that the English were attacking his troops in Syria, and blockading Alexandria, Mehemet Ali, to his immortal honour, allowed our Indian mails to proceed as usual through Egypt, unmolested.

The rest of Mehemet's eventful history may be soon told. He continued to administer the government of Egypt with great efficiency, until a severe illness, in 1848, shattered his constitution, and prostrated his mental faculties. The administration of affairs passed to his son (Ibrahim Pasha), and the ancient Viceroy spent the remainder of his life in seclusion. He closed his mortal career at Alexandria on the 2d inst., after outliving Ibrahim, whose successor (Abbas Pasha) now also succeeds his grandfather Mehemet in the hereditary Viceroyalty of Egypt.

Mehemet Ali was interred in his own alabaster mosque at Cairo, amid the regrets of all people in Egypt. Since his retirement, the loss of his sagacious and steadfast friendship was felt; and it will doubtless be long before the land of Pharaoh finds such another Sovereign to rule her.

(Portraits of Mehemet Ali have already been engraved in the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, Nos. 3 and 120.)

The address from the Cork merchants to her Majesty, which was so generally praised as a hearty, truthful piece of composition, was from the pen of a gallant gentleman well known in the literary world. The Right Hon. R. M. author of "History of the King's German Legion," "An Essay on Cavalry Tactics," and a variety of other works. The gallant officer was formerly in the Guards, but he is now the acting partner in the great brewery carried on by the firm of "Beamish and Crawford."

DIFFICULTIES AT THE "DIGGINS," BETWEEN THE AMERICANS AND CHILIANS.—Spanish Bar, Middle Fork of the Sacramento, June 3, 1849.—Some 300 miles from here, on the North Fork of the Sacramento, last week, the Americans and Chilians had a grand row, which resulted in taking all the gold from the Chilians, and their expulsion from the river. They were first warned to take their provisions and gold, and leave in a certain time, but did not go: so, Oregon-like, the Americans came down on them, and made a "fine day's digging," in the language of one who was in the affray. No lives lost. On the Stanislaus digging, the foreigners were the most numerous, and trampled on the rights of the Americans, and there were so few Americans they could not resist, so the Oregon men from the North Fork sent them a deputation of sixty well-armed men to act in concert with about the same number already there, to turn some 700 to 1000 Chilians from their diggings. They have not done it yet; but we can find notices on almost every tree, that Chilians found in the mines after the month of June will be shot down, unless sufficient excuse can be given for later days, and you may rest assured, that if the Californians and Congress will not do anything to protect the citizens in California, there is a sufficient force (though in comparison not a handful—not one to five) to protect themselves against the aggressions of the armed powers of Purvians, Chilians, Portuguese, Mexicans, Indians, &c., and they will do it.—New York Tribune.

THE DESERTERS FROM THE "CHILDERS."—Lieut. Graham and Mr. Elliott, master, formerly of the Childers, pleaded "Guilty" to the charge of desertion, before the Court, on Wednesday last, at Devonport; and, in mitigation of punishment and palliation of their grave offence, pleaded continuous tyrannical and oppressive conduct on the part of Commander Pitman. Under the circumstances, the Court, after a short deliberation, sentenced both prisoners to be dismissed her Majesty's service; and Lieutenant Graham to be imprisoned for the space of twelve months, and Mr. Elliott to be also imprisoned for six months.

THE DESTRUCTION OF THE WIRE-WORM.

To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

SIR,—The very prominent position which the wire-worm takes amongst those creatures considered as opposed to the labours of mankind, induces me to forward for publication in your Journal the extraordinary result of certain experiments, the object of which was the destruction of the Wire-Worm. Some years since, the locality in which I was residing was more than usually troubled with the Wire-Worm—many hundred acres of wheat, presenting all the appearance of health, vigour, and abundance, were completely destroyed; and I believe the same evil exists at the present time, differing only in amount with peculiar change in seasons and other circumstances. At the time alluded to, I begged of a farmer to furnish me with a quantity of the Wire-Worm in their natural state, that is, in the earth where they were found. In my fire-engine department, I tested their tenacity for life with the most corrosive and powerful poisons. Preparations of corrosive sublimate and arsenic were used in vain. Their immersion in solutions of these poisons occasioned them no inconvenience; in fact, it appeared to give them more pleasure than pain. I then tried the effect of vitriol and aquafortis: these liquids certainly destroyed the worm, but only after a very considerable time. At length, by accident, I was induced to try the gas-lime. The result was marvellous; in an instant these creatures, which had hitherto resisted with comparative indifference the most deadly and corrosive acids and poisons, were shrivelled up, and reduced almost to the state of a cinder. Finding that ammonia possessed this astonishing power, it then occurred to me that this agent might be employed in an extremely simple and effective way. I took a portion of the earth containing the worms, and mixed with it a small quantity of lime: to this I added a quantity of powdered sal-ammoniac; the effect of this was the decomposition of the sal-ammoniac by the lime, and the liberation of ammoniacal gas: this had precisely the result of the liquid ammonia; the worm was instantly destroyed as by an electric shock.

Now these experiments are the more remarkable, from their showing that these destructive creatures can only be destroyed by that which constitutes the most valuable manures. It might, perhaps, be worth while to try this experiment on an increased scale. As an experiment only, it is exceedingly curious, and may be performed by any farmer in a tea-cup; sal ammoniac can be purchased at any druggist's or grocer's, and common slaked lime can be procured anywhere. All that is necessary is to moisten the earth first with a little water, then stir in the lime and add the sal-ammoniac. The escape of ammonia may be easily detected by its smell. This discovery may, possibly, be impracticable, under certain conditions; at all events, I trust its novelty and scientific interest will be a sufficient excuse for this intrusion on your valuable space. I am, sir, your obedient servant,

W. LITTLE.

The late Rev. Charles Brune Henville, formerly vicar of Portsmouth has left the following bequests: To the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, £300; to the Clergy Orphan Society, £300; to Winchester County Hospital, £300; to the Clergy Orphan Society, Winchester, £100; to the Society for Propagating the Gospel in Foreign Parts, £300; to the vicar of Portsmouth, as an endowment for St. Mary's Chapel, £1,000; to the vicar of Portsea, as an endowment for Trinity Chapel, £1000. The last two free of legacy duty. Mr. Henville died on the 17th of last month.

PREMATURE BURIALS.—The New York Mirror has the following:—"A poor man, residing in the upper part of the city, left home at the usual hour, some days since, to perform his daily labour, and, on returning in the afternoon, found that his wife had been seized with cholera during the forenoon, and conveyed to the hospital in Thirteenth-street. He immediately went there, and as he entered the place six coffins were carried out, to be conveyed to Potter's-field. The poor fellow proceeded to the room, and inquired for his wife, when he was informed that she was dead, and that one of the coffins he had just encountered her body, but which of them they could not tell, as no mark was placed upon them to distinguish one from the other. The man, in an agony of grief, started in pursuit of the conveyance, and accompanied it to Potter's-field, when he pleaded so hard to be permitted to look once more upon the face of his wife, that permission was given, and the coffins were opened. When the body of the woman was exposed, she seized it frantically in his arms and pressed it fondly to his bosom. For a moment no fiancié he felt the beating of her heart, and, seizing her, he exclaimed: 'My God she is not dead!' At that moment the woman opened her eyes and recognized her husband; she was conveyed home, and is now quite recovered."

PIRACY IN THE LEVANT.—The pirates continue to scour the Archipelago. They have even had the audacity, within the last two or three weeks, to attack a large French vessel which was anchored at the entrance of the port of Cerigo, the island of Milo (Antiliere), and stripped it of everything it contained, after having killed two of the sailors. The Tartarus, a steamer, commanded by Sir Godfrey Webster, which is stationed at Constantinople, has again left that place in quest of the pirates. This is the third cruise which the steamer has undertaken, for the same purpose: and too much praise cannot be given to Sir Godfrey Webster for the activity and perseverance he shows in sweeping the piratical Archipelago. In the first two cruises, of which the details have been given in the Journal of Smyrna, there was not a creek or bay that was not visited. He disembarked parties of his men at places known as the resort of pirates, carried on general battues, and inspected the papers of several vessels which appeared to be suspected. These (on the part of a foreigner) extraordinary proceedings were freely authorised by the Porte. In a report which he addressed to his Excellency Moussa Safety Pacha, the Governor-General of the Ottoman Archipelago, Sir Godfrey Webster pointed out the many highly fanciful the measures the adoption of which would have the most salutary effect on the safety of the seas. Moussa Safety Pacha is at present at Constantinople, and it is hoped that he will bring the recommendation of the commander of the Tartarus under the notice of the Porte.

GREAT PUBLIC MEETING AT CAPE TOWN.

THE capital, as well as every district, of the colony of the Cape of Good Hope, was, at the departure of the mails just received, in a state of great excitement, caused by the expected arrival of a ship-load of convicts, and the consequent conversion of the settlement into a penal colony. Public meetings have been held on this important subject, and memorials have been presented to the Governor, Sir Harry G. W. Smith, Bart., protesting against this unpopular measure of Earl Grey; the memorialists loudly complaining of their treatment by the Colonial Secretary, who, in the words of the memorial, "has ordered the first detachment of convicts to be conveyed to the Cape from Bermuda, who are now, worthwhile, within a few weeks' or days' sail of our shores." The memorialists complain that "the colony has never been, from the time of its first settlement to this day, a place of detention and punishment for criminals, transported from the mother country; and that it has been preferred, as their home and the home of their children, by thousands of the most respectable colonists, on the faith and firm belief that the dangers and degradation, inseparable from a penal settlement, never would be forced upon it by the British Government."

The memorial then states that in 1842, when Lord Stanley, then Secretary of State for the Colonies, proposed that certain juvenile delinquents should be sent to the Cape, there to be dispersed among the inhabitants as apprenticed labourers, the colonists entered a remonstrance against the measure in a body; and both Houses of Parliament, and the project was forthwith abandoned. It then appears, by the Governor's official announcement in the Gazette of November 16, 1847, that Earl Grey's Secretary of State for the Colonies "deemed it advisable to have the opinion of the Colonists at large on the subject, offering the measure," of sending convicts with tickets-of-leave to the Cape, "to their acceptance, and not demanding it to be carried out." This measure the colonists declared as stoutly as they did in 1842; notwithstanding which second resistance, Earl Grey has ordered to be despatched the offensive shipload, it is stated, in consequence of the expenses incurred by Great Britain in the late Kaffir war, which the colonists, on the other hand, maintain was neither caused, conducted, nor in any way controlled by them. The memorialists then declare that they will not employ the convicts on their arrival, and they call upon the Governor to prevent their disembarking, and assure his Excellency of indemnity in case of any expenses incurred in this step, for which purpose a "Guarantee fund" of upwards of £2000 had been subscribed by the principal mercantile houses in Cape Town.

On the 16th of May last a very large and influential meeting of the Colonists was held at Cape Town, for the purpose of protesting against the obnoxious measure of Earl Grey. The place of assembling was the area in front of the Commercial Exchange. The weather was remarkably fine; the banks, offices, and stores were closed at 12 o'clock, and all business was suspended. Besides some 7000 of the most respectable of the citizens, a great number of ladies were present on the object being, in the words of the South African Commercial Advertiser, "To express, in words which could not be misunderstood, their reply to the 'Proposal,' and their defiance of the threat of Lord Grey, that the Colony shall be made a place of detention and punishment for convicted felons, under sentences of transportation from the mother country. That no man's vote might be caught by surprise, or merely by the effect of eloquence from the hustings, Resolutions and Counter-Resolutions for judgment were previously published in the newspapers and in printed slips, which were every where distributed in the course of the forenoon. That the Local Government might be able, as witnesses and upon personal observation, to report faithfully to Lord Grey, as he at first desired, what are the wishes and opinions of the colonists on this subject, the heads of departments, from the Secretary to Government downward, received notice of the meeting, and were respectfully invited to be present. His Excellency himself was not absent, but also have been invited but not been able still suffering from indisposition with whom and with his family all sincerely sympathize."

At twelve o'clock, Mr. Ebden was called to the chair, amidst the deafening cheers of the largest meeting ever held in Cape Town," [sic] throughout orderly and attentive. Mr. Ebden having addressed the meeting, Captain Varnenen proposed a resolution to the effect that no one should be allowed to address the meeting who had been bankrupt, a convicted libeller, or who had committed himself in any way or other. Upon this, Mr. Advocate Ebden proposed as an amendment, not only to this, but to any other resolution which might thwart the regularity of the meeting's proceedings, "That the order of the day be proceeded with;" which, being seconded by Mr. Prince, was carried with acclamation.

A series of resolutions was then carried unanimously, the proposer and seconder of each addressing the assembly at some length. Dr. Adamson, in moving the second resolution, stated that the 100 or 130 convicts then on their way were not all that the colony had to expect; it being intended that like numbers should be sent till they amounted to 10,000. The Rev. Doctor concluded with the expression of his conviction, that the powers of Holland and France would, at the request of their descendants, undoubtedly interfere with their Ambassadors at the Court of Great Britain, to plead the cause of their children, and to avert the degradation in store for them.

Mr. Advocate Ebden, in moving the third resolution, said that Sir Harry Smith could not allow the convicts to land: "he was loved by the people because they felt grateful for his acts. But all gratitude would cease—all the good he has effected will be drowned in this one incalculable evil—if he allow the convicts to land. He loved Sir Harry, and as a friend he would caution him to seek advice, not from the Colonial Secretary, but from the people—from those who, having an interest at stake in the colony, are concerned in its good government. He was satisfied that, if the Governor consulted his own inclination, he would never consent that these convicts are landed." In conclusion, Mr. Ebden adverted to the morals of the people of the colony, which he considered comparatively free from any amount of crime of a heinous nature; though this speaker was interrupted by Dr. Gird, who stated that scarcely one case in a hundred was reported.

Mr. Wicht, in moving the fourth resolution, drew attention to the accumulation of crime in Australia, adding, upon undeniable authority, it had been stated that evidence could be obtained for a glass of rum—that these men insinuated themselves even into the jury box, and that no man's life was safe from the verdict of a set of contaminated jurors. In conclusion, Mr. Wicht urged, in the great want of labour, that there were many poor in England, untainted by crime, who would gladly come to the Cape, could they obtain a free passage.

The Rev. Mr. Morgan, in moving the sixth resolution, asked: Would the ministers of religion, the judges and advocates, the members of the medical profession, the country farmers, the post riders, and others, consider themselves safe in travelling, as they now do, in the discharge of their several duties, if this were to become a penal settlement? The speaker concluded his address by an earnest appeal to heads of families, respectable mechanics, industrious and honest labourers, colonists of all classes, cordially to adopt and firmly to carry out the pledge contained in the resolution.

Mr. Anthing, in proposing an amendment to the seventh resolution, maintained that, if Lord Grey ordered the Governor to receive the convicts, Sir Harry Smith could not do otherwise than obey his orders; but this speaker was driven from the platform amidst tremendous uproar, and the original motion was carried with only one dissentient voice.

Mr. Watermeyer, in proposing the eighth resolution, concluded thus:—"We declare—we this meeting unanimously—and for the honour of the colony, on behalf of the whole colony, we declare, that should any surcharge be made by her Majesty's Government for expenses incurred by prohibiting the debarkation of convicted felons in this colony, his Excellency will be by us indemnified for such charge incurred in the faithful discharge of his sacred duty."

At the close of the proceedings, the meeting quietly dispersed.

On the 21st, the chairman of the meeting transmitted to the Governor a copy of the resolutions, and stated that a memorial founded on them was in course of signature, to be presented to his Excellency. The chairman added, that the conduct and demeanour of the immense meeting was most orderly, and highly creditable to the city; and the Governor, in his reply, observed that he fully participated in the chairman's feeling of satisfaction at the order and regularity which prevailed at the meeting, and that he was proud and happy to assure him that he never anticipated any other from the loyal inhabitants of Cape Town.

FUNERAL OF SIR THOMAS READE, AT TUNIS.

IN our journal of last week we recorded the death of this highly respected gentleman, Consul-General of England to Tunis, at his country-house at La Maya. His obsequies were celebrated with pomp and solemnity which have never been equalled at Tunis, the Bey having desired that the highest honours should be paid to the deceased representative of Great Britain. The body was conveyed to town in a carriage belonging to the Bey, covered with black, drawn by six mules, and escorted by

HOUSE OF THE LATE SIR THOMAS READE, AT LA MAYA, NEAR TUNIS.

300 cavalry. Next day the bier was conveyed to the burial-ground preceded by two regiments, with their bands, between lines of soldiers, surrounded by the Greek clergy, who officiated in the absence of a Protestant minister. Immediately before the cross carried by the clergy was a group sparkling with gold and diamonds, and composed of Messrs. Raffo and Boga, the two Christian Ministers of the Bey, and all the generals and principal officers of the regency, marching under the fierce beams of a tropical sun, with measured and slow steps. These grand Mussulman dignitaries rarely deign to walk, especially in their state of faintness consequent upon the fast of Ramadan, and therefore it was no small sacrifice they were performing to the will of their master. It is thus that Bey Ahmet is wont to prove his tolerance and progress in international relations. The whole consular body and a crowd of Europeans accompanied to their last abode the remains of the English representative. No oration was pronounced over his tomb, and the French were, probably, not sorry for it, as they never could forget that Sir T. Reade was one of the gaolers of Napoleon at St. Helena. It was through Sir Thomas's influence that slavery was abolished at Tunis. At his suggestion the Bey ordered the slave market to be pulled down, and proclaimed that slavery had ceased; and Sir Thomas Reade had the satisfaction of being regarded by thousands in Tunis as the author of their freedom. The country-house at which he died is on the western extremity of the site of ancient Carthage, and at the edge of the plain which separates that place from Tunis.

SOUTHERN WHALE FISHERY.

DEPARTURE OF THE PRELIMINARY EXPEDITION TO THE AUCKLAND ISLANDS.

THE Samuel Enderby, represented in the accompanying Engraving, is one of the three whaling ships (the others being the Brisk and Fancy), which have just been despatched by the Southern Whale Fishery Company to their settlement at the Auckland Islands. This fine vessel has taken out Mr. Enderby, the projector of the enterprise, in the double character of Commissioner of the Company and Governor of the Islands. Mr. Enderby is accompanied by able assistants, besides surgeons, and a sufficient number of persons for the whaling establishment on shore, several of them taking with them their wives and families. The Expedition is provided with all requisite stores and provisions for a lengthened period, both for the crews and settlers.

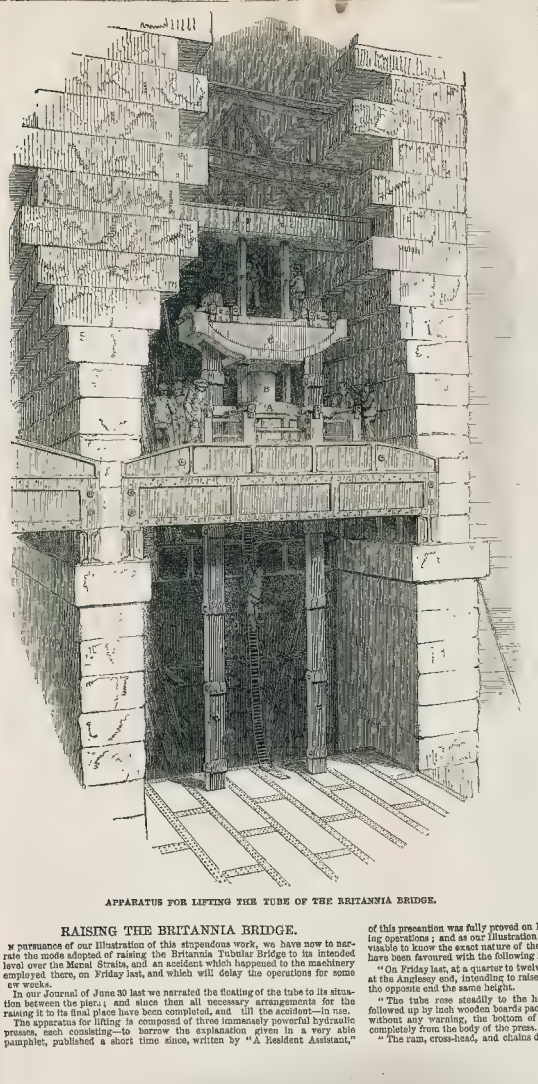
After landing the settlers and the surplus stores at the islands, the vessels will proceed on their whaling voyages, and return with their produce to the station, for re-shipment from thence in other vessels; the settlers making, meanwhile, the necessary preparations on shore for its reception and despatch. Several framework buildings have been sent out for the accommodation of the settlers, until such time as they can erect houses for themselves. The departure of this no less interesting than important expedition opens a new era in the annals of our Whale Fisheries, and we may fairly hope that it will lay the foundation for re-establishing that valuable branch of the national industry. We hear that the Company proposes to despatch, as soon as possible, some further vessels, and to begin at once building some expressly for the purpose, the three vessels which have already sailed having been purchased in the market in order that no time might be lost, and being merely the precursors to the rest.

Mr. Enderby embarked at Plymouth, and previous to his departure (on Friday last) had, we understand, an interview with the Lords of the Admiralty on board her Majesty's ships Queen and Gryffin, in harbour there, who expressed the greatest interest in the undertaking, and their satisfaction at seeing a commencement made. We also learn that this interest is shared by the naval officers at Plymouth generally, many of whom expressed to Mr. Enderby their gratification at the prospect now held out of the Southern Whale Fisheries being no longer almost wholly monopolized by our enterprising brethren across the Atlantic.

The Samuel Enderby, 422 tons, is of handsome model, and was built by White, of Cowes: the hull is kyanized.

Our readers will recollect that we have already detailed the plan of the new settlement, and given two views of the Auckland Islands. (See ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, No. 339.)

GREAT MEETING AT CAPE TOWN, TO OPPOSE THE INTRODUCTION OF CONVICTS INTO THE COLONY.



APPARATUS FOR LIFTING THE TUBE OF THE BRITANNIA BRIDGE.

RAISING THE BRITANNIA BRIDGE.

In pursuance of our Illustration of this stupendous work, we have now to narrate the mode adopted of raising the Britannia Tubular Bridge to its intended level over the Menai Straits, and an accident which happened to the machinery employed there, on Friday last, and which will delay the operations for some few weeks.

In our Journal of June 30 last we narrated the floating of the tube to its situation between the piers; and since then all necessary arrangements for the raising it to its final place have been completed, and till the accident—in fact.

The apparatus for lifting is composed of three immensely powerful hydraulic presses, each consisting—to borrow the explanation given in a very able pamphlet, published a short time since, written by "A Resident Assistant," and called a "General Description of the Britannia and Conway Tubular Bridges"—of a large and heavy iron cylinder, like a mortar (A, in the annexed figure); a strong piston or plunger (B), also of iron, called the ram, which works up and down inside the cylinder, and is fitted with a leather collar at the shoulder, so as to be watertight. An exceedingly thick and heavy beam of cast iron (C, in the Illustration), strengthened by wrought-iron ties across the top, rests like a yoke upon the shoulder of the ram; it is called the cross head of the press. The two chains (D D) pass through square holes at either end of the cross-head, and are securely gripped at the top of it by an apparatus called the clams (E E), consisting of two strong cheeks of wrought iron, drawn together by screws, like a blacksmith's vice—the shoulders of the links being made square, so as to afford a secure hold between the clams."

This hydraulic press stands on two massive beams, composed of wrought-iron plates; and to steady the action of the cross-head, when rising, two guide rods (F F) are fixed into the head of the press, and into a beam, twelve feet above the press. The power of the press is exerted on the tube by aid of chains (G G in Illustration), the links of which are six feet in length, bolted together in sets of eight and nine links alternately; and as the ram raises the cross-head six feet each stroke, when that height is attained, a lower set of clams, on the beams, grip the next set of links, and thus prevent them from slipping down whilst the clams on the cross-head are unscrewed, the upper links taken off, and the cross-head lowered to take another stroke. The cylinder and apparatus on the Anglesea pier, the subject of our engraving, are of the most prodigious size, strength, and weight. "In length the cylinder is 9 feet 2 inches; outside diameter, 3 feet 6 inches; and the ram 1 foot 8 inches in diameter; the whole weighing above forty tons, and is, in fact, the most powerful machine ever constructed." The sides of the cylinder are eleven inches in diameter, and the pressure it was estimated it would resist was eight or nine thousand pounds per square inch; and it was considered alone capable, if worked to its full extent, of raising the tube, a weight of eighteen hundred tons. The two hydraulic presses in the Britannia Pier are capable of sustaining enormous pressure, each having the power to lift about 1250 tons.

The pamphlet before referred to says:—"The water is forced into the presses by two steam-engines of 40-horse power each, with tubular boilers, as in a locomotive. The steam-cylinder is horizontal; a continuation of the piston-rod, which passes through both ends of the cylinder, forms the pistons of the force-pumps, which are placed one at each end, in the same line as the cylinder. The diameter of the pumps is one inch and one-sixteenth; that of the ram of the hydraulic-press twenty inches; their respective areas being in the proportion of one to three hundred and fifty-four. The pipe through which the water is forced into the press is of wrought iron, and is much smaller than would be expected, not being more than half an inch in diameter." These steam-engines are placed in the Anglesey pier and Britannia pier respectively.

To guard against all chance of injury to the tube during the lifting, and to ensure perfect security, "a contrivance is adopted by which the chains, as they rise, are followed up by wedges, so that, in the event of any accidents happening to the lifting machinery, no injury would happen to the tube." The importance of this precaution was fully proved on Friday last, when the cylinder broke during operations; and as our Illustration was then preparing, we deemed it advisable to know the exact nature of the accident; and, in reply to our enquiry, have been favoured with the following interesting statement:—

"On Friday last, at a quarter to twelve o'clock, we commenced lifting the tube at the Anglesey end, intending to raise it six feet, and afterwards to have raised the opposite end the same height.

"The tube rose steadily to the height of two feet six inches, being closely followed up by inch wooden boards packed in beneath it, when, suddenly, and without any warning, the bottom of the hydraulic press gave way, separating completely from the body of the press.

"The ram, cross-head, and chains descended violently on to the press, with a tremendous noise—the tube sinking down upon the wooden packing beneath it. The bottom of the press, weighing nearly two tons and a half, fell on to the top of the tube, a depth of eighty feet.

"A sailor, named Owen Parry, was ascending a rope ladder at the time, from the top of the tube into the tower: the broken piece of press in its descent struck the ladder, and shook him off; he fell on to the tube, a height of fifty feet, receiving a contusion of the skull and other injuries of so severe a nature that he died the same evening. He was not engaged in the raising, and had only chosen to cross the tube, as being the nearest road from one tower to the other. An inquest was held on the following day, and a verdict of accidental death returned. No one actually engaged at the operation was injured, although Mr. Edwin Clark, who was superintending the operation on the top of the cross-head, and his brother Mr. L. Clark, who was standing beneath it, had both very narrow escapes.

"The tube is not at all injured, but some portions of the cast-iron lifting frames are broken, and require repairing; some weeks must elapse before a new cylinder is made and the operation continued. The preparations for floating the next tube are quite complete, and only await the raising of the present tube, to be borne to its destination."

In our Illustration, the front of the lifting apparatus is shown, and a portion of the top of the ponderous tube as gradually rising. The steam-engine for forcing the water, being at the rear, is not visible from the spot whence our view is taken.

THE NEW SILVER COINAGE.—THE FLORIN.

We cannot more completely describe the florin than by reprinting the following notice just issued by the Postmaster-General:—

"In obedience to a proclamation of her Majesty the Queen, a new silver piece called a 'florin,' or one-tenth of a pound sterling, and of the value of 2s., which has recently been coined, is for the future to pass and be received as current and lawful money of the United Kingdom. The above-named coin has for the obverse the Queen's effigy, crowned, with the inscription 'Victoria Regina,' and the date of the year; and for the reverse the ensigns armorial of the United Kingdom, contained in four shields crosswise, each shield surmounted by the Royal crown, with the rose in the centre, and in the compartments between the shield the national emblems of the rose, thistle, and shamrock, surrounded by the words 'One florin, one-tenth of a pound,' and with a milled graining round the edge."

THE SILVER FLORIN.

We annex a few interesting particulars of the ancient florin in gold:—

The "Florin," or "Florence," was introduced in the eighteenth year of Edward III. It received its name from a beautiful coin minted at Florence in 1252, which was so universally admired by the different States, that it was imitated in France, Hungary, Bohemia, Bavaria, Rome, and other places; but England merely assumed the name by which the greater part of the gold then in circulation was distinguished, without closely imitating the type. It was then current at 6s. 8d.

We have seen (says our Numismatic Correspondent) the quarter and half-florin,* though never the florin: but, whenever it is brought to light, we have no doubt that it will correspond in type with the half-florin, as the half-noble and noble of the same Monarch imitate each other.

AUSTRALIAN EXPLORING EXPEDITION.

It is with deep regret that we have to record the complete failure of the Overland Expedition which left Sydney last year, for the purpose of exploring the country between Rockingham Bay and Cape York. This noble attempt to extend our knowledge of the Australian Continent has unhappily terminated in the tragical murder of the gallant leader of the exploring party, Mr. E. B. Kennedy, and the death of nine of his men from starvation.

THE LATE MR. E. B. KENNEDY, THE AUSTRALIAN EXPLORER.

We find the melancholy details of Kennedy's sufferings and death in the report of a judicial investigation into the circumstances at Sydney, which fills eight columns of the Sydney Morning Herald. This ill-fated Expedition to explore the interior of tropical Australia proceeded to Rockingham Bay by water; and on the 5th of June last the party consisted of Mr. E. B. Kennedy, and eleven companions, besides Jackey Jackey, an aboriginal native; Mr. Kennedy's instructions being to proceed from Rockingham Bay to Port Albany, at Cape York, where he was to meet a schooner with supplies, on receiving which he was to proceed down the western side of the peninsula, and return to Sydney. The evidence is contained in the journal of Mr. Carron, the botanist to the Expedition, which details the sufferings of the party, and the death of nine of them from starvation, besides Kennedy, their leader—Jackey, Carron the botanist, and a man named Goddard, being the only survivors; and they were rescued by the Ariel schooner at Port Albany and Weymouth Bay.

The sad details of Mr Kennedy's death are contained in the statement of Jackey Jackey, who started with his master from Weymouth Bay, for Cape York, on November 13, 1848, accompanied by three men, and leaving eight others at the camp at Weymouth Bay. The sufferings of the five explorers were very great: their supply of flour was soon exhausted; when they lived, for a time, upon horseflesh, which they had brought from the Bay, and fine of a horse which they killed in the morning, and smoked at night. At length, about three weeks after leaving the Bay, the three men were so ill, that they were left at Paddington Hill, near Shelbourne Bay, where they were to remain until Kennedy and Jackey reached Cape York, and returned with medical aid for the sufferers. Their route lay through creeks, swamps, and scrubby ridges, and heavy rain—Jackey's horse dying under him from fatigue. When they had reached the mouth of Escape River, they were within sight of Albany Island. In the afternoon they camped by the river side, and met a great number of blacks, who shouted out, "Foward, foward!" and rubbed their bellies. Mr. Kennedy thought them friendly, and gave them fish-hooks; and Jackey gave his knife to one of them. The two explorers then went on: but, on looking round, saw the natives getting up their spears. Jackey became alarmed; but Mr. Kennedy still believed the "black fellows" to be friendly.

Some two or three miles on, they camped for the night, but in the shade, without a fire: they watched by turns, and saw the blacks stalking about in the moonlight, but nothing happened. At daybreak the explorers saddled their horses, and pushed onward: when they were closely followed by a great number of blacks. Towards evening, a party of them threw from behind a scrub several spears, one of which hit Mr. Kennedy in the back. Jackey fired, and hit one fellow in the face with buck-shot; he fell, and was picked up, and carried away, by two of his companions: the large spears in the meantime flew thicker about the poor travellers. Jackey at once pulled the spear from Kennedy's back, and cut out the jag with a knife; when he rallied, and snapped, but his gun would not go off. The blacks now sneaked along by the trees, speared Kennedy again in the right leg, above the knee, and Jackey was speared in the eye: their horses were similarly wounded, got restive, and plunged into the swamp. Jackey then went to look for the saddle-bags, while Kennedy fell down from fainting by the wounds, and his watch and hat were carried off by the blacks: but Jackey himself must narrate the last sad scene.—
